VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, THURSDAY JULY 4 1917 NO. 27

Letter From Soldier Boy

FORT MYERS, Va., June 21.

DEAR SISTER:—

Have received your letters O. K. and was glad to hear from you. Received the last one yesterday. I had been thinking of writing to you for some time, but was busy through the day and the conveniences for writing down at the other place are very poor.

I have just got back from a stroll some of us boys took through one of the largest national cemeteries in the world. We saw a monument erected over 2,111 soldiers who were killed at the battle of Bull Run. We saw the remains of the battleship Maine made into a monument. We also went through the mansion of Gen. Robert E. Lee, He lived there and his offspring after him. We signed our names in a book kept for registering visitors. There are 404 acres in this cemetery. So you can imagine how large it is. We could look over one corner of Washington from one part of the cemetery.

When we got back, we found that we had missed a speech given here at the fort by W. J. Bryan.

I have bean teaming the last few days. I have been driving mules. They are some that the militia had down on the border and they are awfully poor. So you can imagine how proud I am of my team. I have been hauling gravel today. They loaded it and shoveled it off. So I didn't have to do anything but drive and hold my fancy hosses.

Our Y. M. C. A. is just a small tent now, but they are building one now.

My envelopes are too small, or I would send you my valentine. I suppose you have seen it over home. I am not so pale as I was then, though. I look more like I did when I was a farmer, only I am dressed differently.

One of the largest wireless telegraph apparatuses in the United States is situated here.

I saw a large mounted regiment of darkies here a few days ago. Believe, me, they were some showy bunch.

The officers reserve corps is here. They are training fellows to become officers in the army. They get three months' training; and those that are not making good are turned off, and the rest are sent away for more training.

We get our new mess hall Saturday. We have been eating out of our mess kits, but in our mess hall we will eat from. We have had strawberries and cream, peaches and cream and black berries and cream; and tonight they gave each of us a piece of water melon. Now, don't you wish you were in the army?

I did intend to go to Washington tonight; but I didn't get my clothes back from the wash woman, and I would not go up there dirty. If I get them tomorrow, I will go in the evening.

Our top sergeant was married yesterday, and the boys are getting him a wedding present.

Guess I will have to close for this time. With love, from your brother,

MERWIN.

The foregoing letter is from Merwin Place to his sister, Mrs. Bertha Dermott. The NEWS is pleased to print it. Any news from the boys at the front gladly received.

St. Joe Well Represented

The St. Joe department was well represented at the firemen's convention at Garrett last Thursday, nineteen out of twenty-four membets being present. Following are the ones who attended: H. C. Hathaway, chief; Grover C. Curie, assistant chief; Elmer Hart, captain; Ward Woodcox, assistant captain; C. Saylor, assistant captain; Frank Kinsey, Vernie Coburn, Derwood Ridgway, William Hamm, Harley Sechler, S. L. Kinsey, Roy Wade, F. R. Bowman, Clay Coburn, Jay Bleeks, Charles Koch, James Harter, Frank Curie and George Kinsey. The boys have new uniforms, and presented a fine appearance in the parade. They report a good time.

Is Elza a Slackar?

Among the list of names of those subject to military duty, as sent out from the county seat, the NEWS has looked in vain for that of our fellow citizen, Elza R Kinsey. In this connection, there is one thing that looks mighty suspicious. The name of "Eliza R Kinsey" appears. One of three things is certain: Elza turned slacker and got a female member of the family to take his place, there is a young lady patriot named Kinsey in Concord township or a letter "i" in the hands of a printer unsexed Elza.

P. S.—The NEWS begs Elza's pardon—abjectly and penitently. No, siree! he is not a slacker. He has proof at his home in the shape of a little soldier boy, who came Monday evening. He is some soldier, too; commander-in-chief of the Kinsey household and, if Elza had his way, jigadier brindle over the entire land. His name is Earl William (not Kaiser William). For further particulars, see Elza.

Auto Bus to Auburn

Beginning on Thursday, July 5, I will run an auto bus line to Auburn. Will leave St. Joe at 8:30 a. m. and 2:00 p. m. Returning, leave Auburn at 10:15 a. m. and 5:15 p. m. Will go after and return Newville passengers, connecting at St. Joe with the Fort Wayne line.

C. T. BAYMAN.

YOUR FLAG AND MINE

WHERE e'er it waves, on land or sea,
It guides the way to liberty;
It floats unsullied in the blue,
It's always right—it's always true.

Cursed be the coward or the cur
Who dares to think or cast a slur
Upon the emblem of the free—
The beacon light of liberty.

To keep it floating in the sky,
Ten thousand heroes dare to die;
And where they put it, it will stay
Until the dawn of judgment day.

Then lift your hat and bow your head
In silent prayer for the heroes dead,
Who fought and died with faith sublime
In the flag they loved, your flag and mine.

—Jacob Lincoln Bieder.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

WHEN you want to go anywhere on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, put it off until tomorrow. You'll get there just as soon and save a day's time.

THERE is a county in Arkansas named Yell. What an ideal spot for the St. Joe telephone line! Or, how about Deaf Smith county, Texas, or Cus(s)ter county, Nebraska?

THERE is an old saying that "every man must eat a peck of dirt before he dies." If that be true, St. Joe will never know how much it owes to the frequent rains this summer.

THE government favors drinking beer during the war. The NEWS protests. If we are going to get full, let's do it patriotically—on American wine, Scotch whiskey, British rum or French brandy and not on German beer.

THE Baltimore & Ohio railroad denies the report that free corn salve will be furnished patrons at the local station. When the NEWS considers the excellent facilities the road provides for walking, it can not understand this, in view of the company's previous reputation for caring for the wants of the public.

THE old man took down the telephone receiver just in time to connect with a bolt of lightning. "Mother," he cried to his wife from the corner into which he had been knocked, "I'm a changed man from this minute. I knowed I was ornery, but I didn't think I was so near the bad place they'd begin callin' me up over the 'phone."

IN EXTREME cases, physicians resort to what they term heroic treatment. That is what Uncle Sam, M. D., and Drs. Bull and Crapaud are administering to Germany just now. When they have purged the patient of autocracy and militarism and healed him from the "Deutschland ueber alles" lunacy, he will live to bless those who compelled to swallow huge doses of nauseous medicine.

A STAGE coach was held up. After the passengers had been relieved of their valuables in truly Jesse James style, all with one accord bemoaned their loss, with one exception. He was no bemoaner. He was a mighty poor whistler, but his whistling apparatus was not impaired in the least—remained about fifty-fifty—fifty tune and fifty energy. "You take it cool," grumbled the man who had lost ninety cents and a Waterbury watch. "Used to it," was the smiling reply—"used to it. Paid rent on a St. Joe 'phone for years."

WE READ of savages stealing up on defenseless villages and massacreing all without regard to sex or age, or ambushing others and killing them without warning. We are horrified at such recitals; and yet they are no more barbarous and inhuman than Germany's aeroplane raids or her submarine warfare. General Pershing and a band of missionaries in khaki and blue have crossed the ocean to assist in converting Germany from savagery. Their sermons will be fired from cannon and rifles; and when they get through with this kind of exhortation, the kaiser will be at the mourners' bench.

HE WAS deaf—deaf as a stone; and the stone, as every well informed person knows, is the deafest thing on record up to date, next to the adder. The adder, of course, takes the blue ribbon in a deaf contest. It is plain to see that the man was deaf. There is nothing strange about that—a deaf man is no uncommon thing. The strange thing was that this man wanted a telephone—for his own use, too. Now, who ever heard of a man—deaf as a stone, mind you—wanting a telephone? "I 'low 'tain't right to swar," he explained; "but sometimes I jest nacherly can't he'p myse'f. Them times, I kin squar myse'f a whul lot by takin' down the receiver an' tryin' to hear over the dod-gasted thing."

We want your items, please call us up.

Celebrate the Fourth right by attending the play, "The Schoolma'am."

Mrs. John Benninghoff, Jr., of Ft. Wayne, is here the guest of her mother, Mrs. Bert Bowman.

Mrs. Elizabeth Leighty returned to Sherwood Saturday to stay with her daughter, Mrs. Sam Openlander. Ethel Cheek and little son, and Mrs. Lloyd Draggoo, accompanied her for a few days visit.

Mrs. Culla J. Vayinger, state W. C. T. U. president, also a Grant county candidate for delegate to the Constitutional convention, will speak at this place on July 18th. Everybody make arrangements to hear her. Place of meeting to be announced later.

The Civic League

The Civic League met at the M. P. church last Friday evening; and the attendance was good, notwithstanding the other attractions in town. This is encouraging, and still more encouraging is the fact that an exceedingly interesting time was had. The first seven sections of the state constitution, relative to religious liberty were discussed. Rev. Mumma delivered an interesting address on the subject; and a general discussion, led by H. M. Widney, followed and a spirited, but friendly, exchange of opinions took place. The arguments were heated at times. There was music and a reading by Miss Lena Meek.

Good will result from the Civic League. The greatest latitude is permitted in debate as long as the speakers are courteous one toward another.

Following is the program for the next meeting, Friday evening, July 13, at the Lutheran church:

Devotional, Mrs. B. S. Sheffer.
Subject—"Educational Freedom or Freedom of the Press" (see Article I, sections 9 and 10 of the present constitution), Fred B. Leighty.
General discussion, led by Mrs. Kate A. Leighty.
Select reading, Mrs. C. R. Price.

Music will be under the direction of Mesdames H. C. Hathaway and Hollis Dilley.

European War News

The Greek government at Athens has broken diplomatic relations with Germany, Austria-Hungary, Bulgaria and Turkey. The Greek government considers that a state of war exists since its advent to power. Greek ministers in Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria were ordered home.

• • •

"If peace comes an hour before the objects for which Great Britain entered the war have been achieved, it will be a calamity to Europe," Premier Lloyd-George said in a speech at Glasgow.

• • •

It is reported at The Hague that the German steamer Westfalen, bound from Rotterdam to Copenhagen, struck a mine near Terschelling, outside Dutch territorial waters, and sank. Thirteen members of the crew were rescued by Dutch torpedo boats.

• • •

Under a protecting concentration of artillery fire Canadian troops stormed and captured the German front line before Avion, a suburb of Lens, says a dispatch from France. By this advance the British line has been carried forward to within one mile of the center of Lens.

• • •

The Elder-Dempster steamer Addah was torpedoed without warning and sunk by a German submarine on June 15. The submarine fired on the captain's boat, killing eight men.

• • •

The French made a surprise attack northwest of Hurtebise. The Paris war office announces the capture of the entire first line German trenches. More than 300 prisoners were taken.

• • •

A dispatch to the London Times from Athens says French troops entered Athens and occupied several points in the city. A Reuter dispatch from Athens says there was a demonstration in the city and that the allies' troops entered the city to assist in maintenance of order.

Washington

The house at Washington passed the priority shipment bill, giving the president authority to demand preferential transportation of all freight as a war necessity. The bill already has passed the senate.

• • •

Yielding to the request of President Wilson, dry leaders in the senate at Washington reached an informal agreement with administration chiefs to modify the prohibition amendment of the food control bill so as to save beers and wines.

• • •

Coal price reductions agreed on by the country's bituminous producers at a conference with government officials at Washington will be strictly enforced. The coal committee of the council of national defense warned operators at Decatur, Ill., who raised their prices beyond the limit set, that the industry would not stand for their action.

• • •

The railroads of the United States lost their fight for a 15 per cent increase in rates. The interstate commerce commission at Washington denied their petition. The commission's order was dated June 27. Commissioner McChard dissented. The commission finds that 1916 was the most prosperous year the railroads ever had.

• • •

An immediate general reduction of $1 to $1.50 a ton in the price of coal at the mine was agreed upon at Washington by representatives of the coal operators. The reduction relates to bituminous coal.

• • •

With revision of the war tax bill virtually completed and now totaling $1,449,000,000, against the $1,800,000,000 levy of increased taxes adopted by the house, the senate finance committee at Washington considered authorization of additional bonds and proposed a bond issue of $500,000,000.

TO ENROLL WOMAN POWER OF STATE

Important Work Undertaken by the Indiana League for Women's Service.

A STATE-WIDE COMMITTEE

Organization Will Become a Working Part of the State Council of Defense and Will Serve Through This Body.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana League for Women's Service, Miss Julia E. Landers, state chairman, announced its program of war work and the personnel of its officers and state-wide executive committee, through the state council of defense of which it is to become a prominent working part. A register of the available woman power of the state—"women who may be called on at a moment's notice to perform any patriotic duty required as a war emergency"—is one of the first proposals.

Division of Work.

The women of the state are to be enrolled for service under the following divisions, it was announced at the state council's headquarters: Social welfare, home economics, agriculture, motor driving, general service, signaling, map reading, wireless operating, overseas relief, industrial labor, relief work for Indiana's sailors and soldiers, relief work for the families of Indiana's soldiers and sailors.

The officers announced follow:

Miss Julia E. Landers, state chairman, Indianapolis; Mrs. J. F. Barnhill, state vice chairman, Indianapolis; Mrs. W. W. Gaar, state commandant, Richmond; Mrs. Maud McOuat, state secretary, Indianapolis; Mrs. Carl G. Fisher, state treasurer, Indianapolis; Miss Marie Chomel, publicity chairman, Indianapolis.

Executive Committee.

The state-wide executive committee will consist of the state officers and the following representatives of state organizations:

Mrs. Henry Beck, Kappa house, Greencastle, Daughters of American Revolution and state chairman Navy league; Mrs. Richard Edwards, Peru, president of Woman's Franchise league; Mrs. Hence Orme, Southport, Purdue extension work in home economics; Miss Tarquina Voss, Indianapolis, Daughters of American Revolution; Mrs. Arthur V. Brown, state regent of Colonial Dames, Indianapolis; Mrs. Frank Morrison, state director Daughters of 1812 Indianapolis; Miss Morna Hickam, director federal bureau for the employment of women, Indianapolis; Mrs. Grace Julian Clarke of the Co-operative Council of Women; Miss Laura Vail, Business Women's Clubs, Indianapolis; Miss Mabel Money, Industrial Workers' union, Indianapolis; Miss Merica Hoagland, Industrial Workers, Diamond Chain works; Miss Elizabeth Sweets, Y. W. C. A., Indianapolis; Mrs. Jessie Herron Stutesman, representing the Red Cross Crawfordsville; the industrial secretary of the Y. W. C. A. (name not given); Mrs. J. Dorsey Forrest, French relief work, Indianapolis; Miss Mary Helen Boyd of the "Socks for Soldiers" movement, Indianapolis; Miss Anna Willson, president of the State Teachers' association, Crawfordsville; Mrs. Mindwell C. Wilson, president of the Woman's Press Club of Indiana, Delphi, and Mrs. William Guthrie, state regent, Daughters of the Union, Dupont.

Enrollment Blank Adopted.

The executive committee, after a thorough discussion, adopted a service blank form by which it is intended to enroll every available woman in the state for such service as she can be able to do during the war with Germany. The form has the indorsement of Will H. Hays, chairman of the state council of defense. It is comprehensive and complete and is expected to expedite greatly the work of organizing the women for their part in the war.

The form is as follows:

1. Social and Welfare—(a) Factory inspection. (b) Housing and feeding. (c) Social club. (d) Co-operation in caring for families of militia.
2. Commissariat—(a) Cooking. (b) Purchasing.
3. Agricultural—(a) Gardening. (b) Poultry raising. (c) Dairying.

Report of Industrial Board.

The industrial board of Indiana reported that in the month of May a total of 3,366 industrial accidents occurred in which persons entitled to compensation under the Indiana workmen's compensation law, were killed or injured. The report also showed that at present, employers of the state are paying a total weekly of $17,656.27 to employees or their dependents, because of the working of the compensation law. This amount covers 2,172 cases, at an average payment each week of $8.13.

Interest on Bonds to Red Cross.

The Indiana state council of defense, through its publicity committee, George Ade, chairman, has issued the following:

"Interest on Liberty loan bonds will be just enough, for the first year, to pay the state's proportion of the Red Cross fund, to be raised at this time. A more appropriate contribution could not be devised. Of course, there is no limit on the amount anyone may contribute to the Red Cross fund, but in order to make certain the state's proportion of the fund the Red Cross society has planned to raise in the nation, it is calculated that Liberty bonds will themselves pay the first contribution. Thus your bond subscription will be doing double duty, you will retain the principal and be assured of an ever-increasing valuation that later on may assist you to contribute still further to the effective prosecution of the war without any actual sacrifice of your subscription to the Liberty loan."

The "socks for soldiers" movement, headed by Miss Mary Helen Boyd of Indianapolis, is meeting with a wholehearted and encouraging response from all over the state, the state council announced. Miss Boyd expects to head a delegation of her assistants to Crawfordsville, Lafayette, Richmond, Muncie, Vincennes and Martinsville, to instruct local organizations which will assist in the knitting of 4,000 pairs of wool socks, to be worn by the Indiana boys who leave for the front.

Vote to Women Unconstitutional.

Judge W. W. Thornton of the Marion superior court holds that the act of the 1917 legislature providing for the holding of a constitutional convention is valid. He also held that the attempt of the 1917 legislature to enfranchise the women to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention and to vote upon the submission of a constitution to the people is invalid. The second decision was based on that part of the woman suffrage law proper.

May Continue to Register.

Women in the state may continue to register, according to Attorney General Stansbury. "It is my opinion," he said, "that it was not the intention of Judge Thornton to prevent the women of Indiana from continuing to register. There can be no harm in continuing the registration of women." He says that if women stopped registering now and the supreme court reversed Judge Thornton, it would be too late for women to qualify to vote for delegates. Attorney General Stanbury is advising county authorities to continue to register women.

Railway Attacks Fare Law.

Attacking the 2-cent fare law as confiscatory, a suit for a temporary injunction was filed in the federal court by attorneys representing the Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern Railway company. The action is directed against members of the State Public Service commission, Ele Stansbury, attorney general, and the prosecuting attorneys of the counties through which the railway passes. The defendants, according to the suit, are charged with enforcing the law.

The suit charges the penalties of the law are unjust; that if railroads are found guilty prosecutions could be brought for separate offenses, and the penalties could amount to as much as $15,512,000 a year. A temporary injunction asks that the law be declared unconstitutional.

The 2-cent a mile fare was enacted in 1909 and has been in effect since. No question had been raised heretofore as to its validity.

The date for hearing argument on the temporary injunction has not been fixed. It is expected three federal judges will sit en banc in the case.

Must Pay Year's Liquor Tax.

Retail and wholesale liquor dealers, as well as brewers and distillers doing business in Indiana are rapidly coming to the conclusion that life for them within the confines of Hoosierdom is hardly worth living nowadays.

The annual federal tax for brewers, distillers and all persons and organizations handling liquor is due July 1. Persons who have come to the offices of Peter J. Kruyer, collector of internal revenue for the Sixth district, comprising 59 Indiana counties, are inquiring if they can pay the tax for the nine months from July 1 until April 2, 1918, when the state becomes dry under the prohibition law passed at the last session of the legislature.

The inquirers are told by Mr. Kruyer and his assistants that the tax for the entire year from July 1, 1917, to July 1, 1918, must be paid by all the dealers and manufacturers who wish to deal in or manufacture liquor until the time that the prohibition law becomes effective.

Greathouse Made Chairman.

Charles A. Greathouse was elected chairman by the Democratic state committee at its meeting, to succeed Bernard Korbly, who resigned. A. C. Salee resigned as secretary of the state committee. The choice of a new secretary was left to Greathouse.

No Dances for Soldiers.

"Social affairs are the most minute and of the least concern in this great world movement," Col. Edwin F. Glenn, commander at Fort Benjamin Harrison, told the members of the Indianapolis recreational-social service bureau, in a conference regarding the activities of the bureau. Colonel Glenn approved heartily of that part of the work which has for its purpose the welcoming and providing for the mothers and sisters and friends who come to Indianapolis to see the candidates for commissions.

TEN KILLED WHEN CAR LEAVES RAILS

BELT LINE CAR PLUNGES INTO WHIRLPOOL RAPIDS OF THE NIAGARA.

MANY PEOPLE ARE INJURED

Washout Due to Heavy Rains Is Given As Cause for Disaster on Great Gorge Car Line—U. S. Soldiers Direct Work of Rescue.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 2.—A belt-line car on the Great Gorge route left the rails, plunged down a twenty-foot embankment and turned over in ten feet of water on the edge of the whirlpool rapids at 3:30 o'clock Sunday afternoon.

Nine persons, including J. R. Muck, of Princeton, Ind., are known to be dead, two persons known to have been on the car have not been seen since the accident, an indefinite number, estimated at from two to ten are reported missing and more than a score are in hospitals, suffering from injuries received in the accident.

A washout, due to recent heavy rains was the cause of the disaster which occurred just below the Cantilever bridge and sixty feet below the point where the smooth water of the upper reaches of the Niagara river breaks into the turbulent waters of the whirlpool rapids. The car was in charge of Motorman Louis E. Crandall and Conductor Alexander Heron. It had all but completed the circuit of the gorge, having crossed from the Canadian side of the river on the trolley bridge at Lewiston. More than fifty passengers were on board according to general estimates.

The car was one of the open type, seats extending from side to side with steps on both sides the full length of the car. All the seats were occupied and some of the passengers were standing between them and there were others on the rear platform.

The car was running at a speed of about twenty miles an hour when it struck the weak spot in the roadbed. Less than half a minute elapsed from the time the motorman felt the first jarring sway until the car was bottom side up on the edge of the rushing rapids.

As it slipped down the twenty foot incline from the tracks to the edge of the river, screaming men and women fought to escape and some of them were able to get free but were unable to obtain a footing on the steep bank.

There was a mad scramble in the water between the wrecked car and the river bank. From the river side the bodies of at least two of the passengers were seen to be caught in the swifter waters and carried down to the whirlpool.

Members of a national guard regiment who were on guard at the cantilever bridge saw the accident and were the first to the rescue. Soldiers slid down the bank into the river and worked in water up to their waists getting injured passengers free from the wreckage and passing them up the bank where an emergency car had been placed to carry them to the Niagara Falls hospital. The supports of the roof on the forward part of the car had been crushed by the impact on the rocks in the river bottom, throwing the seats together. This pinioned many of the passengers below the surface of the water and it was in this section of the car that most of the fatalities occurred.

Conductor Heron was in the forward part of the car collecting the last of the fares. He was thrown from the running board and crushed to death as the car toppled over.

Nearly a score of persons were reported to be missing but most of these were located in hospitals and hotels later in the evening. It is certain, however, that in the holiday crowd there were many making the trip unaccompanied.

The list of dead and known missing and injured makes a total of thirty-six. Virtually no one escaped injury and this leaves more than fifteen persons to be accounted for if the estimate of fifty as the total number of passengers on the car is correct.

The soldiers in the rescue party were in the water at the side of the car for more than two hours with the water up to their waists. The injured were hoisted up the twenty-foot embankment with ropes.

Private Joseph Crowley saved the lives of two girls by holding their heads above the water while others worked to free their bodies from the wreckage. The girls gave their names as Clara Schultz and Lillian Cole, of Cleveland. Crowley, who was on duty at the bridge, saw the car go over the bank.

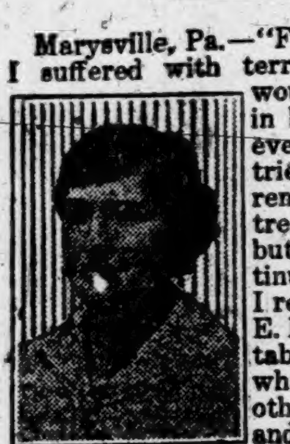
Socialists Stage Big Riot.

Boston, July 2.—Riotous scenes attended a socialist parade here which was announced as a peace demonstration. The ranks of the marchers were broken up by self-organized squads of uniformed soldiers and sailors, red flags and banneds bearing socialistic mottoes were trampled on, and literautre and furnishings in the socialist headquarters in Park square were thrown into the streets and burned. Police reserves stopped the rioting after it had been in progress an hour and a half. Many arrests were made.

THOSE AWFUL CRAMPS

Suggestions that may save Much Suffering

Marysville, Pa.—"For twelve years I suffered with terrible cramps. I would have to stay in bed several days every month. I tried all kinds of remedies and was treated by doctors, but my trouble continued until one day I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for others. I tried it and now I am never troubled with cramps and feel like a different woman. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly and I am recommending it to my friends who suffer as I did."—Mrs. GEORGE R. NAYLOR, Box 72, Marysville, Pa.



Young women who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by this root and herb remedy.

DISRAELI MADE GREAT COUP

Purchase of Suez Canal by England Great Stroke From Both Political and Financial Standpoint.

As we move away from the day in which they labored, Disraeli looms larger as a British statesman and Gladstone smaller. Once these legislative gladiators appeared just the reverse.

Gladstone never did anything for his empire of such transcendent importance as Disraeli's financial coup in buying control of the Suez canal from the khedive of Egypt, Girard observes in the Philadelphia Ledger. That ended finally the French hopes of empire in the East.

Besides delivering a mighty political stroke for his country, which reminds one of Jefferson's purchase of Louisiana, Disraeli made a financial investment that was worthy of Rothschild.

The Suez canal stock which he bought—176,600 shares out of a total of 400,000—are now worth just seven times what England paid for them. Their par value is $100, and a dividend of 18 per cent has just been declared, and it was over 30 per cent before the war cut down canal traffic.

The Panama canal will in time become a Standard Oil type of investment for Uncle Sam.

What He Was Doing.

The motorist pushed his head through a wheel, removed a tire and a couple of cylinders from his left ear and glared at the much too cheerful idiot who stood looking on.

"Well?" he asked, after he had released the spare wheel from his back teeth. "What do you want?"

"Oh, nothing," replied the idiot. "By the way, have you had an accident?"

The motorist nearly swallowed the starting crank.

"Oh, no!" he hissed. "As a matter of fact, I'm just teaching an Egyptian haddock how to sew buttons on policemen's socks!"—London Ideas.

When the other fellow tells you a falsehood and you catch him at it, he thinks he is clumsy and you think you are clever.

That night she slept again where Kazan had lain, and three times she called for him without answer. A heavy dew fell, and it drenched the last vestige of her mate's scent out of the sand. But still through the day that followed, and the day that followed that, blind Gray Wolf clung to the narrow rim of white sand. On the fourth day her hunger reached a point where she gnawed the bark from willow bushes. It was on this day that she made a discovery. She was drinking, when her sensitive nose touched something in the water's edge that was smooth, and bore a faint odor of flesh. It was one of the big northern river clams. She pawed it ashore, sniffing at the hard shell. Then she crunched it between her teeth. She had never tasted sweeter meat than that which she found inside, and she began hunting for other clams. She found many of them, and ate until she was no longer hungry. For three days more she remained on the bar.

And then, one night, the call came to her. It set her quivering with a strange new excitement—something that may have been a new hope, and in the moonlight she trotted nervously up and down the shining strip of sand, facing now the north, and now the south, and then the east and the west—her head flung up, listening, as if in the soft wind of the night she was trying to locate the whispering lure of a wonderful voice. And whatever it was that came to her came from out of the south and east. Off there—across the barren, far beyond the outer edge of the northern timber line—was home. And off there, in her brute way, she reasoned that she must find Kazan.

The call did not come from their old windfall home in the swamp. It came from beyond that, and in a flashing vision there rose through her blindness a picture of the towering Sun Rock, of the winding trail that led to it, and the cabin on the plain. It was there that blindness had come to her. It was there that day had ended, and eternal night had begun. And it was there that she had mothered her first-born. Nature had registered these things so that they could never be wiped out of her memory, and when the call came it was from the sunlit world where she had last known light and life and had last seen the moon and the stars in the blue night of the skies.

And to that call she responded, leaving the river and its food behind her—straight out into the face of darkness and starvation, no longer fearing death or the emptiness of the world she could not see; for ahead of her, two hundred miles away, she could see the Sun Rock, the winding trail, the nest of her first-born between the two big rocks—and Kazan!

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Last of McTrigger.

Sixty miles farther north Kazan lay at the end of his fine steel chain, watching little Professor McGill mixing a pail of tallow and bran. A dozen yards from him lay the big Dane, his huge jaws drooling in anticipation of the unusual feast which McGill was preparing. He showed signs of pleasure when McGill approached him with a quart of the mixture, and he gulped it between his huge jaws. The little man with the cold blue eyes and the gray-blond hair stroked his back without fear. His attitude was different when he turned to Kazan. His movements were filled with caution, and yet his eyes and his lips were smiling, and he gave the wolf-dog no evidence of his fear, if it could be called fear.

The little professor, who was up in the north country for the Smithsonian Institution, had spent a third of his life among dogs. He loved them, and understood them. He had written a number of magazine articles on dog intellect that had attracted wide attention among naturalists. It was largely because he loved dogs, and understood them more than most men, that he had bought Kazan and the big Dane on the night when Sandy McTrigger and his partner had tried to get them to fight to the death in the Red Gold City saloon. The refusal of the two splendid beasts to kill each other for the pleasure of the three hundred men who had assembled to witness the fight delighted him. He had already planned a paper on the incident. Sandy had told him the story of Kazan's capture, and of his wild mate, Gray Wolf, and the professor had asked him a thousand questions.

But each day Kazan puzzled him more. No amount of kindness on his part could bring a responsive gleam in Kazan's eyes. Not once did Kazan signify a willingness to become friends. And yet he did not snarl at McGill, or snap at his hands when they came within reach. Quite frequently Sandy McTrigger came over to the little cabin where McGill was staying, and three times Kazan leaped at the end of his chain to get at him, and his white fangs gleamed as long as Sandy was in sight. Alone with McGill he became quiet. Something told him that McGill had come as a friend that night when he and the big Dane stood shoulder to shoulder in the cage that had been built for a slaughter pen. Away down in his brute heart he held McGill apart from other men. He had no desire to harm him. He tolerated him, but showed none of the growing affection of the huge Dane. It was this fact that puzzled McGill. He had never before known a dog that he could not make love him.

Today he placed the tallow and bran before Kazan, and the smile in his face gave way to a look of perplexity. Kazan's lips had drawn suddenly back. A fierce snarl rolled deep in his throat. The hair along his spine stood up. His muscles twitched. Instinctively the professor turned. Sandy McTrigger had come up quietly behind him. His brutal face wore a grin as he looked at Kazan.

"It's a fool job—tryin' to make friends with him," he said. Then he added, with a sudden interested gleam in his eyes, "When you startin'?"

"With first frost," replied McGill. "It ought to come soon. I'm going to join Sergeant Conroy and his party at Fond du Lac by the 1st of October."

"And you're going up to Fond du Lac—alone?" queried Sandy. "Why don't you take a man?"

The little professor laughed softly. "Why?" he asked. "I've been through the Athabasca waterways a dozen times, and know the trail as well as I know Broadway. Besides, I like to be alone. And the work isn't too hard, with the currents all flowing to the north and east."

Sandy was looking at the Dane, with his back to McGill. An exultant gleam shot for an instant into his eyes.

"You're taking the dogs?"

"Yes."

Sandy lighted his pipe, and spoke like one strangely curious.

"Must cost a heap to take these trips o' yourn, don't it?"

"My last cost about seven thousand dollars. This will cost five," said McGill.

"Scot!" breathed Sandy. "An' you carry all that along with you! Ain't you afraid—something might happen—?"

The little professor was looking the other way now. The carelessness in his face and manner changed. His blue eyes grew a shade darker. A hard smile which Sandy did not see hovered about his lips for an instant. Then he turned, laughing.

"I'm a very light sleeper," he said. "A footstep at night rouses me. Even a man's breathing awakes me, when I make up my mind that I must be on my guard. And, besides"—he drew from his pocket a shining blue-steeled automatic—"I know how to use this." He pointed to a knot in the wall of the cabin. "Observe," he said. Five times he fired at 20 paces, and when Sandy went up to look at the knot he gave a gasp. There was one jagged hole where the knot had been.

"Pretty good," he grinned. "Most men couldn't do better'n that with a rifle."

When Sandy left, McGill followed him with a suspicious gleam in his eyes, and a curious smile on his lips. Then he turned to Kazan.

"Guess you've got him figgered out about right, old man," he laughed softly. "I don't blame you very much for wanting to get him by the throat. Perhaps—"

He shoved his hands deep in his pockets, and went into the cabin. Kazan dropped his head between his forepaws, and lay still, with wide-open eyes. It was late afternoon, early in September, and each night brought now the first chill breaths of autumn. Kazan watched the last glow of the sun as it faded out of the southern skies. Darkness always followed swiftly after that, and with darkness came more fiercely his wild longing for freedom. Night after night he had gnawed at his steel chain. Night after night he had watched the stars, and the moon, and had listened for Gray Wolf's call, while the big Dane lay sleeping.

Tonight it was colder than usual, and the keen tang of the wind that came fresh from the west stirred him strangely. It set his blood afire with what the Indians call the Frost Hunger. Lethargic summer was gone and the days and nights of hunting were at hand. He wanted to leap out into freedom and run until he was exhausted, with Gray Wolf at his side. He knew that Gray Wolf was off there—where the stars hung low in the clear sky, and that she was waiting. He strained at the end of his chain, and whined. All that night he was restless—more restless than he had been at any time before. Once, in the far distance, he heard a cry that he thought was the cry of Gray Wolf, and his answer roused McGill from deep sleep. It was dawn, and the little professor dressed himself and came out of the cabin. With satisfaction he noted the exhilarating snap in the air. He wet his fingers and held them above his head, chuckling when he found the wind had swung into the north. He went to Kazan, and talked to him. Among other things he said, "This'll put the black flies to sleep, Kazan. A day or two more of it and we'll start."

Five days later McGill led first the Dane, and then Kazan, to a packed canoe. Sandy McTrigger saw them off, and Kazan watched for a chance to leap at him. Sandy kept his distance, and McGill watched the two with a thought that set the blood running swiftly behind the mask of his careless smile. They had slipped a mile down-stream when he leaned over and laid a fearless hand on Kazan's head. Something in the touch of that hand, and in the professor's voice, kept Kazan from a desire to snap at him. He tolerated the friendship with expressionless eyes and a motionless body.

"I was beginning to fear I wouldn't have much sleep, old boy," chuckled McGill ambiguously, "but I guess I can take a nap now and then with you along!"

He made camp that night fifteen miles up the lake shore. The big Dane he fastened to a sapling 20 yards from his small silk tent, but Kazan's chain he made fast to the butt of a stunted birch that held down the tent-flap. Before he went into the tent for the night McGill pulled out his automatic and examined it with care.

For three days the journey continued without a mishap along the shore of Lake Athabasca. On the fourth night McGill pitched his tent in a clump of banskian pine a hundred yards back from the water. All that day the wind had come steadily from behind them, and for at least a half of the day the professor had been watching Kazan closely. From the west there had now and then come a scent that stirred him uneasily. Since noon he had sniffed that wind. Twice McGill had heard him growling deep in his throat, and once, when the scent had come stronger than usual, he had bared his fangs, and the bristles stood up along his spine.

For an hour after striking camp the little professor did not build a fire, but sat looking up the shore of the lake through his hunting glass. It was dusk when he returned to where he had put up his tent and chained the dogs. For a few moments he stood unobserved, looking at the wolf-dog. Kazan was still uneasy. He lay facing the west. McGill made note of this, for the big Dane lay behind Kazan—to the east. Under ordinary conditions Kazan would have faced him. He was sure now that there was something in the west wind. A little shiver ran up his back as he thought of what it might be.

Behind a rock he built a very small fire, and prepared supper. After this he went into the tent, and when he came out he carried a blanket under his arm. He chuckled as he stood for a moment over Kazan.

"We're not going to sleep in there tonight, old boy," he said. "I don't like what you've found in the west wind. It may be a—thunderstorm!" He laughed at his joke, and buried himself in a clump of stunted banskians 30 paces from the tent. Here he rolled himself in his blanket, and went to sleep.

It was a quiet starlit night, and hours afterward Kazan dropped his nose between his forepaws and drowsed. It was the snap of a twig that roused him. The sound did not awaken the sluggish Dane but instantly Kazan's head was alert, his keen nostrils sniffing the air. What he had smelled all day was heavy about him now. He lay still and quivering. Slowly, from out of the banskians behind the tent, there came a figure. It was not the little professor. It approached cautiously, with lowered head and hunched shoulders, and the starlight revealed the murderous face of Sandy McTrigger. Kazan crouched low. He laid his head flat between his forepaws. His long fangs gleamed. But he made no sound that betrayed his concealment under a thick banskian shrub. Step by step Sandy approached, and at last he reached the flap of the tent. He did not carry a club or a whip in his hand now. In the place of either of those was the glitter of steel. At the door to the tent he paused, and peered in, his back to Kazan.

DESERVES WELL OF HIS COUNTRY

Ever since the war opened the British admiralty has been more or less continuously under the fire of public criticism. If it was accused of being unduly aggressive in the early stage of the war and taking risks that were not justified by the results, it has latterly been just as insistently charged with too much inactivity.

When the crime of Sarajevo was committed there was one man in England who had an apt perception of its possible consequences before most people realized that great events were ahead. That man was Winston Churchill, then first lord of the admiralty.

The British fleet had been in home waters for great maneuvers, and Churchill, who had been an alarmist concerning the European outlook for a long time before the assassination of the Austrian archduke, exceeded his authority in his effort to prevent the demobilization of the fleet and to get it on an absolute war footing. He provisioned the fleet for war, made every disposition as if he had known war was ahead and took the personal responsibility. The event proved that he was a better guesser than the government of which he was a part.

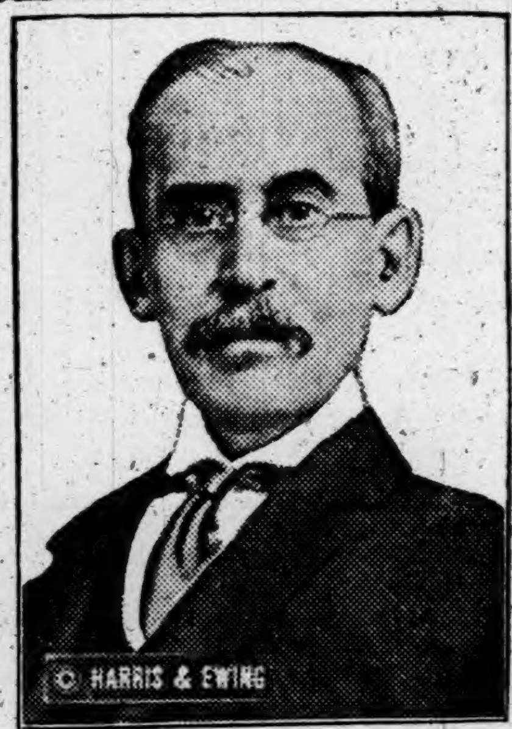
At the time it was not so well appreciated as it was later that Churchill's forehandedness possibly saved his country from a greater disaster, even perhaps from an attempted German invasion. Today, although Churchill was forced out of the cabinet because of the misfortunes of Antwerp and Gallipoli, the British public is regarding him almost as the man who saved Britain in the first crisis of the war.

GREAT ITALIAN STATESMAN

America, with her labor supply already affected by the cutting off of immigration from the European countries at war, must not look for a resumption of the flow of man power from abroad for some time after the end of hostilities, according to Francesco Saverio Nitti, a member of the Italian parliament, who visited this country as a member of the Italian war mission.

Doctor Nitti is the professor of economics in the University of Naples and was a member of the Salandra cabinet at the time Italy entered the war. As a member of that cabinet he created the labor councils throughout Italy for the purpose of developing co-operation between labor and the government. It was he who brought about the state monopoly of life insurance, so far as small policies are concerned, and he had much to do with the industrial mobilization of his country at the outset of the war. Upon his arrival in the United States he told Secretary Wilson of the department of labor, and the members of the Council of National Defense, all of the details of the very successful Italian methods of getting the utmost military strength out of the population without impairing the industrial energy in work essential to the maintenance of the armies and civil population.

HEAD OF ARMY SUPREME COURT



© HARRIS & EWING

As provost marshal general, Gen. Enoch H. Crowder was charged with the responsibility of registering all male persons in the United States and its territorial possessions between the ages of twenty-one and thirty years, inclusive, who are subject to military service under the selective draft law.

General Crowder was born in Missouri, April 11, 1859, and was appointed to the military academy at West Point from that state September 1, 1877. He first served in the cavalry and later attended the University of Missouri, where he received the degree of LL. B. in 1886, and in 1905 was appointed major and assigned to the office of the judge advocate general. February 15, 1911, he was appointed judge advocate general of the United States army. Upon the recent outbreak of histilities with Germany Gen. Crowder was appointed provost marshal general. The judge advocate general's office is the supreme court of the army. The proceedings of every general court-martial have to be reviewed by this office before being submitted to the president for approval, and the final findings of the judge advocate general, with his recommendations, are submitted to the president of the United States, who usually approves the recommendations.

Get up early and save daylight.

The picnic season is approaching.

Shooting off your mouth on the corner will not win the war—Did you buy a Liberty Bond or subscribe to the Red Cross Fund?

Splendid Cause.

A kaiser says: "I will destroy!" Uncle Sam says: "I will restore!" There can be but one side to this argument. It is easy to stand with Uncle Sam, the builder. It is impossible to join or to submit to any power that proclaims ruthless destruction.

The United States has registered almost 10,000,000 young men for military service for the restoration of peace and order. The Liberty Loan has been far oversubscribed. All this is an earnest of the upbuilding purpose of this government. And now comes the oversubscription of the gigantic Red Cross fund, perhaps the best and highest expression of this people's altruistic and conscientious intentions. There can be no finer manifestation of the high type of civilization for which we fight than is found in the marvelous response to the call for Red Cross funds.

Indiana has been at the front in all war activities. Especially do we shine as result getters for the worthy and necessary Red Cross cause. Never in her history did this community appear to better advantage than she does at this time, with her Red Cross allotment splendidly oversubscribed.

Let the word go to Berlin. A few more jolts such as awakened America has been landing on the kaiser's jaw will tend to enlighten the Prussian military autocracy as to our earnestness, our zeal and our effectiveness.—Daily Times, Indianapolis.

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

NOT just to have one, not merely for the purpose of saying that she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and undivided attention to any such accounts.

OLD SCHOOL REUNION

GREAT!

This one word describes the meeting of the Old School Association at Spencerville last Thursday. If it was not a success, the defination of the word, "The favorable or prosperous attainment of anything attempted," should be stricken from the dictionary. But it was a success in every respect; and if anyone doubt this statement, just ask anyone who was there and he will back up the NEWS. He may add, however, that this paper is not emphatic enough. Right here, permit the printer to state that it is a pleasure to write up such meetings. Occasions arise where the newspaper man is forced to say something good or give offense and is forced to employ "double barreled" language—languge both complimentary and meaningless—no easy matter, either. This time, though, good can be said—honestly and without any mental reservations.

People began to assemble at the Spencerville school house, where the meeting was held, about 10 o'clock, and immediately proceeded to have a good time—couldn't help it, for the "good time" spirit is infectious. The handshakes were fervent, the smiles welcoming and the "How d'ye do's?" eloquent. Eloquence comes from the heart, not the lips. This was one of the most pleasant parts of the day.

And then came dinner—such a dinner, too! The man with tight-fitting clothes had no busines there. The ladies who contributed to it must have lain awake nights planning how to outdo one another in preparing good things to eat, and all failed—in outdoing one another; for they (the good things) were there in abundance—and the ladies, too; also good. Over the food, old time friends renewed the past, and all passed an enjoyable hour. Candor compels the NEWS to state that at the conclusion of the feast the south end of the westernmost table looked like pictures of Newcastle after it had been swept by a cyclone—nothing was left but debris, and not much of that. A certain patriarchal, affable gentleman sat there; and he played the part of both Mr and Mrs. Jack Spratt, alone "licking the platter clean. He showed good taste—nothing got by him untasted. No wonder when called upon later, he could talk about nothing but the dinner. And—

There were others!

At 1 p. m., the association was called to order by the president, J. W. Henderson, and the day's program followed.

In a neat little speech, Miss Zona Horn welcomed members of the association and visitors to Spencerville. Glen Henderson, of Woodburn, responded. In the course of an entertaining address, he took occasion to compliment the Old School Association upon the good work it is doing.

A recitation by Vivian Christenbuy followed—a nice little effort by a nice little lady.

O. K. Shull gave a recitation—title, shaken out of writer by laughter upon his (the writer's) part Mr. Shull stated that he had not rendered a recitation for years. Now, it isn't polite to contradict, and the NEWS does not want to appear impolite; but we will whisper—not loud enough to be overheard—that we don't believe a word he said. Oh, no, no! no, no! we don't think he was fibbing—just mistaken, that's all. He might insist that he spoke the truth until he was too hoarse to speak, and we would continue to insist that he must be mistaken. We leave it to anyone who was there, can anyone do as well as Mr. Shull did without having practice? Impossible—ab-so-LUTE-ly impossible. Prolonged applause followed; but he did not respond, the reason being that he knew no other recitation.

By all odds, the greatest feature of the program was the work of Master Virgil Horn, a 7-year-old boy whose home is near Brighton, La-Grange county. It is phenomenal. He rendered "The Gladiator" in a manner equal to that of an experienced elocutionist. He comprehended the meaning of the language employed. Otherwise, his rendition of the piece would have lacked force and expression, neither of which was wanting. It seems almost incredible that a lad of his years should essay such a difficult role and acquit himself so articically. In response to an encore, he gave "Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star" as recited by a Boston girl. The chronicler of this veracious epitome of antecedent Spencerville scholastic occurrences is obsessessed by the idea—the logical sequence of non-intricate ratiocination—that the erudite scion of Boston culture employed naught but sesquipedalien words in giving audible expression to her panegyric on the scintillating orb that radiates luminosity above this terraqueous sphere. (Don't shoot!)

Another epidemic of sideache followed, occasioned by Frank Horn. Was he good? Well, the printer is too old at the business to lie when he is certain to get caught at it; and if he should say that Mr. Horn's recitation was poor, everyone who heard it would point an accusatory finger at him (the printer, of course). Mr Horn recited a German dialect piece, "A man's a man ef he's no pigger den mein thoomb." He should be scolded for his heartlessnes: he didn't seem to care whether his hearers went into convulsions or whether wearers of artificial teeth laughed until they shook out their masticators. The audience tried to call him back, but he did not respond.

Mrs. Chaney, association historian, and Dr. Carey, of Fort Wayne, reviewed early days in and about Spencerville, their work evincing considerable research. The doctor suggested that descendants of the early settlers look up the history of their respective families and report at the next meeting. By this means, a record of pioneer days can be gathered together and preserved. He also recommended that all relics, old legal papers, daguerreotypes, household utensils, etc., be brought and placed on exhibition. Both of these suggestions were approved.

There was music—plenty of it, too; and good music, too. The meeting would not have been complete without it.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President.—J. W. Henderson (re-elected).
Secretary.—Miss Golden Murray (re-elected).
Treasurer.—O. K. Shull.
Historian.—Dr. Carey.
Assistant Historian.—Mrs. Maude Brown.

It is to be hoped that the treasurer-elect is "quicker with figgers" than the Irishman he impersonated. If not, an expert accountant will be necessary to audit his books, particularly if he gets one two-dollar bill.

The Old School Association adjourned formally only to reconvene informally on the lawn. Here, final good-byes and good wishes were exchanged and heart warmed toward heart as the time for separation came.

We travel in a circle and life ends where it began, in childhood. For a majority of the members of the Old School Association the circuit is nearly completed. To them, the recollections of the days of long ago hallowed; to them, the parting words of old friends come as a benediction. It may be part of the Divine plan—who knows?—that old people should thus assemble and in the mind travel once more the paths of innocence that He may touch their hearts and soften their natures and make them more like little children, fitter to stand in the presence of Him who took little ones in His arms and blessed them and said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In conclusion, the NEWS congratulates the Old School Association upon the good it is doing The paper would like to make a few suggestions for the good of the society:

1. Meet more often.
2. Retain the present officers.
3. Have O. K. Shull and Frank Horn on the program. And—
4. Don't forget your friend, the Printer.

Kin Hubbard Essays

THE LIVER

Th' shameful treatment that is bein' accorded th' human liver in this day an' age is a reflection on our boasted civilization. We're rushin' ahead settling the affairs of the world while th' great American liver struggles along doin' two livers' work without a friend in either branch o' congress.

Th' human liver (Swedish "Lefver") is a large gland that reposes in th' upper right hand corner o' th' abdominal cavity an', when conditions are as they should be, it weighs one-fortieth as much as th' body t' which it is attached. It is th' main gazabo o' th' human works but, nothwithstandin' th' important roll it plays in our pursuit o' life, liberty an' happiness, it is th' most abused, most misconstrued, most ignored, most imposed on, most neglected an' lied about organ of which th' medical fraternity has any knowledge.

Next t' a yeller dog ther haint nothin' that responds as readily t' kindness as th' human liver. Prunes, when properly stewed, are fine fer th' liver, but how many of us are darin' enough to' order them? We occasionally eat an apple jest t' please th' liver, but we rarely take th' liver int' our confidence when we attend a Jefferson Day banquet. We are not chummy enough with th' liver. How many of us have any knowledge of it's plumbin'?

A feller's disposition is regulated by his liver. Th' liver is th' switchboard o' his inclinations an' impulses. We often hear it said of a feller that he entered int' this er that with his whole heart. It wuz his whole liver. Most o' th' credit that goes t' th' heart rightfully belongs t' an agile liver. Th' heart 'll often butt in where th' liver fears t' tread.

Some fellers are very lavish till ther asked t' do somethin' fer ther liver. Next t' a poor relative ther haint nothin' they're less interested in than ther own liver. Some girls become greatly exercised over a mole on ther back an' then laughin'ly powder over a liver spot on ther cheek.

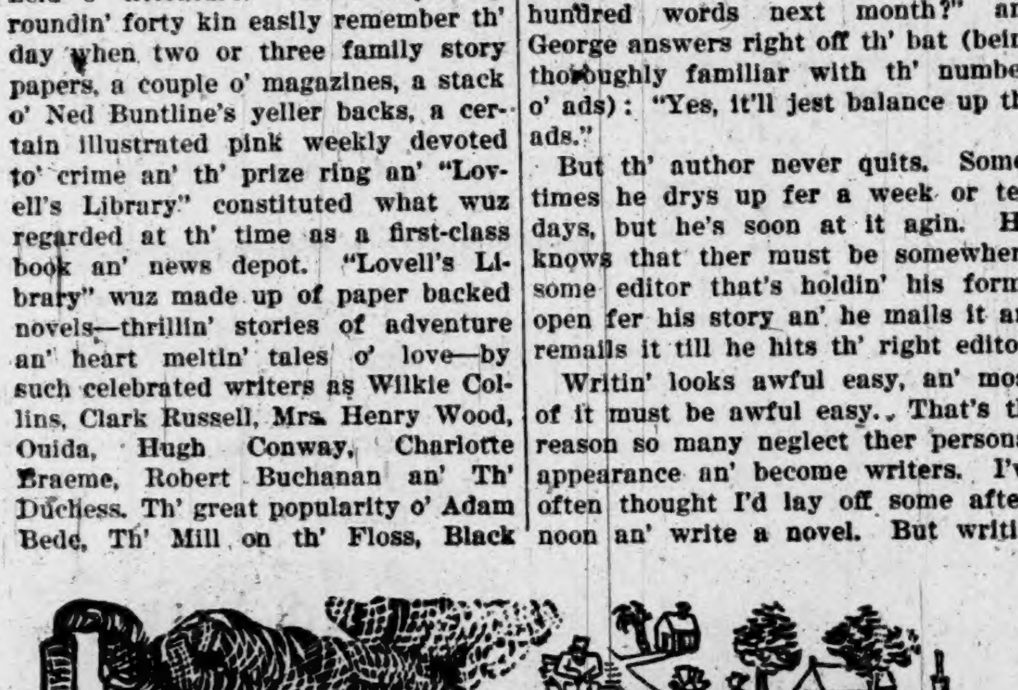
One o' th' hardest things that come up durin' th' liver's daily routine is handlin' a large steak after its owner has consumed it an' sunken heavily int' an easy chair t' ponder over th' complicated condition o' Mexican affairs an' view with alarm.

When th' human liver (Latin "Jecur") is happily situated an' th' lines leadin' therefrom are open to' traffic ther is nothin' that looks as bright an' beautiful as th' world.

When th' Human Liver (Latin "Jecur") Is Happily Situated, Ther Is Nothin' That Looks as Bright an' Beautiful as th' World.

OUR APPALLIN' LITERARY OUTPUT

When we look at th' great mass o' literature that tests th' capacity o' book stores an' news stands we can't help thinkin' what a scramble ther must be fer even standin' room in th' field o' literature. Most anybuddy roundin' forty kin easily remember th' day when two or three family story papers, a couple o' magazines, a stack o' Ned Buntline's yeller backs, a certain illustrated pink weekly devoted to' crime an' th' prize ring an' "Lovell's Library" constituted what wuz regarded at th' time as a first-class book an' news depot. "Lovell's Library" wuz made up of paper backed novels—thrillin' stories of adventure an' heart meltin' tales o' love—by such celebrated writers as Wilkie Collins, Clark Russell, Mrs. Henry Wood, Ouida, Hugh Conway, Charlotte Braeme, Robert Buchanan an' Th' Duchess. Th' great popularity o' Adam Bede, Th' Mill on th' Floss, Black Beauty, Lena Rivers, Uncle Tom's Cabin, Robinson Crusoe an' Enoch Arden had dwindled t' a fair demand, but were t' be found among th' others.



In th' Average Home th' Cartin' Away o' th' Accumulated Literature Has Come t' Be as Much of a Problem as th' Removal o' Ashes and Garbage. A Literary Disposal Plant Is One o' th' Urgent Needs o' th' Times.

Jest think o' th' appallin' literary output o' t'day. It would require an abandoned skatin' rink t' carry a full line o' current literature. In th' average home th' cartin' away o' th' accumulated literature has come t' be as much of a problem as th' removal o' ashes an' garbage. A literary disposal plant is one o' th' urgent needs o' th' times. On returnin' from a week's vacation one has t' tunnel thro' th' great drifts o' papers an' magazines t' reach th' front door. Ther's no longer any mystery about how th' other half o' th' world lives. It writes. Fer ever' mail box ther's an amateur writer. As th' days draws t' a close he may be seen skulkin' along thro' th' shadows t' a mail box bearin' a thick reel o' manuscript addressed t' some magazine publisher. He knows some magazine needs it t' balance up its advertisin'. When a magazine editor returns a manuscript it's because he hain't got room fer it. It's no sign he has read it. Writers know that. They jest remail it t' some other editor. Th' great difficulty in contributin' t' th' magazines is knowin' which magazine editor rips open a story he counts th' pages an' calls t' his assistant: "George kin we use about fourteen hundred words next month?" an' George answers right off th' bat (bein' thoroughly familiar with th' number o' ads): "Yes, it'll jest balance up th' ads."

But th' author never quits. Sometimes he drys up fer a week or ten days, but he's soon at it agin. He knows that ther must be somewhere some editor that's holdin' his forms open fer his story an' he mails it an' remails it till he hits th' right editor.

Writin' looks awful easy, an' most of it must be awful easy. That's th' reason so many neglect ther personal appearance an' become writers. I've often thought I'd lay off some afternoon an' write a novel. But writin' fer magazines is th' best sport. It's as lazy an' fascinatin' as fishin'. You're your own master. You don't even have t' be available. Jest so your story is long enough or short enough—jest so th' editor receives in August fer th' May number. All he wants is room fer it an' plenty o' time.

When we reflect that Pilgrim's Progress wuz writt'n in jail, that Silvio Pellico an' Tasso did ther best writin' behind th' bars, that Sir Walter Raleigh's admirable history o' th' world wuz written with his hands handcuffed behind him in th' Tower o' London, that Leigh Hunt wuz layin' out a fine when Rimini wuz written, an' that Daniel Defoe laid th' plans fer Robinson Crusoe while he wuz in a lock-up we must confess that th' world t'day is purty lenient after all.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Every person who builds a house which is to be used as his home finds himself confronted with the problem of deciding how much he can afford to spend for the beautification of the premises. Of course, everyone wants a beautiful home. Those who have studied art, and especially architectural art, insist upon the embodiment of a definite artistic scheme, agreeable with their particular conception of the beautiful, in the house design and layout of the premises. Such a person is usually able to convey to the architect the ideas which will enable him to shape the images in his mind so that they will conform with these definite ideas of the home builder. The architect then acts in the capacity of an adviser, suggesting details which seem, in his judgment, to add to the effectiveness of the scheme, while at the same time he analyses each idea with the object of determining just how it may be adopted in the structural sense. The average man must trust very largely in the architect's judgment. This does not mean that he has no conception of architectural beauty, but rather that he has not spent enough time in the study of this subject so that he is able definitely to transfer this conception into words. The architect may determine the principal features which are desired by reference to a number of photographs of houses of many different types, out of which the prospective home builder may select houses which have the features in which he is interested well worked out. The study of floor plans is usually based upon established ideas of the home builder more than the external appearance of the house is. Home builders, as a rule, have a better idea of the room arrangement which they desire than they have of the desired appearance of the exterior.

Floor Plan.

The value of beauty in the home is evidenced in many ways. Fundamentally, it affects the sale value of the property, and money spent in the beautification of the premises, within certain limits, is, therefore, a good investment. Beauty affects the atmosphere of the home, making it especially wholesome as the surroundings of the growing children whose early impressions are so important in the development of their dispositions and habits. A home which the owner cannot be proud of is hardly the kind of home for the average man.

Beauty in architecture is probably as widely defined as beauty in music or in painting. It can be defined only in the broadest terms, allowing each individual to add the personal elements which will complete the meaning for himself. An element which tempers beauty in architecture is serviceability. This element is largely responsible for the difference in opinions between people as to what is really beautiful and what is not. This practical element is also the influence which places beauty in architecture on a different basis from beauty in music or painting.

There may be beauty in a simple little house just as thoroughly as there is beauty in a mansion. The smallest of houses in the two-story type are usually beautiful in their simplicity. Some of the largest houses are beautiful in their dignity. The bungalow type of house may be beautiful because of its simplicity or because of its clever ornamentation, and it is, therefore, in somewhat of a distinctive class in regard to this quality.

The lawn surrounding a house is, of course, a strong factor in building up the appearance of the picture. Unfortunately, this factor cannot have the weight it rightly deserves in a great many cases because of the limitations of a thickly settled community. There are locations where land values are not excessive, and in such places the lawn is a most effective means of emphasizing the beauty of a well-designed house. Here, again, the bungalow type of construction has a distinctive place, since by suitably altering its architectural treatment a harmonious effect may be produced where the lawn is almost anything from simply a grass plant to an elaborate garden in which trees, shrubs, flowers and grass all have a place.

The illustrations will serve to suggest a moderate artistic treatment of the bungalow idea where there is sufficient lawn space to form an effective background for the novel building. This bungalow could hardly be beautiful if built on a small lot, closely flanked with buildings and erected too near the highway or street. Given the proper setting, it is decidedly beautiful in its outline, color scheme and general appearance.

The building carries a low gable roof with rafter and purlin decorations. The sides of the house are made of stucco up to the bottoms of the windows, from which point the remainder of the surface is finished with stained shingles. The most attractive feature of the exterior is the large pergola porch. There is a novel, artistic and decorative value possessed by a pergola, properly designed and placed and tastily arranged with flowers and vines. For this reason the pergola around the front of this home creates the idea of warmth, comfort and coziness which is one of the characteristics of the properly designed bungalow. Some people find objection to the pergola because it loses its serviceability in rainy weather. There is no reason why the pergola cannot be built to overcome this objection. Panels of wire glass may be fitted above and between the pergola beams in such a manner that the pergola roof will be just as effective as any porch roof in sheltering the porch from rain, yet the appearance is not noticeably changed.

The pergola porch is connected to both the living room and the dining room by French doors. These doors have the effect of brightening the rooms into which they lead, both because of their artistic design and large glazed area. Casement windows are also generously used in all parts of the house but the kitchen.

The main entrance is into a reception hall. A small closet is conveniently placed in this hall. Along the front of the house the living room and dining room form a pleasant combination, there being a large cased opening between them. The bedrooms, with bath between, kitchen and rear entrance stoop, grade door and stairs occupy the rear portion of the house. The bedroom arrangement is very convenient, and the kitchen has been designed to reduce the labor of housekeeping to a minimum.

THE BANKER'S STANDPOINT.

The effect of prohibition is well put by Hon. Nicholas Iserguine, inspector of state savings banks of the Russian empire, who, while visiting in Chicago gave an interview to the Daily News:

"Our country is 'bone dry' to the extent that not even beer or mild wines can be obtained. We are fighting in the world war, with every available man at the front, yet since the outbreak of the war the deposits in our state savings banks have increased from 1,800,000,000 rubles to 3,600,000,000 rubles.

"Thus in deposits we have about doubled in less than three years the amount accumulated in 73 years previous to the outbreak of the war, for our state banks are about 75 years old. This vast increase means nothing else than the enrichment of the poorer classes. They have become the capitalists through the mass of their savings.

"There have been many other gratifying results," he continued. "Insanity has decreased to a minimum. There are almost no mental disorders among the soldiers at the front, whereas in the Japanese-Russian war these formed a serious problem. Most of the Russian homes are of wood and in olden days the fire menace was constant and dreaded. Conflagrations have been reduced 90 per cent in towns and cities.

"The Russian peasant was not a regular drinker in the old days, but he expended his earnings about once a month on an orgy which ended in deep intoxication. Now he is sober all the time, not only because he has to be, but because in the light of fresh experience he desires to be."

PORTO RICO FOR PROHIBITION.

The Sixty-fourth congress provided in the Porto Rican citizenship measure for prohibition in the island subject to a referendum of the people within five years. Hoping to cut off the educational campaign of the drys, the liquor interests forced an early decision, and the question will be voted upon at the general election in July. The natives do not want any more rum, it is said, and credit for this dry sentiment is given to the missionaries who have been in the island for 19 years, and to the National W. C. T. U., who last year sent an organizer there. Mrs. Nelle Burger, president of Missouri W. C. T. U., experienced as an organizer in Mexico and as an all-round prohibition campaigner, has been appointed to lead the W. C. T. U. forces in the Porto Rican fight for a dry island.

The Decatur (Ill.) Herald says that in a recent raid of bootleggers in that city all were sent to the county jail because no "professional bondsmen" appeared to bail them out. Which shows that the professional bondsman is a product of the saloon.

MORE CLEAN PROFIT.

The talk of the wets about confiscation and compensation falls rather flat when the facts are known. Former breweries for example, are many of them employing more men and making more money than when they were manufacturing beer. These examples may be mentioned as typical:

The Rainier Brewery of Portland, Ore., as a brewery employed 156 men. It now gives employment to 1,600 men as a tannery.

The Portland Brewery employed a hundred men in making beer. It now gives work to 500 men in making furniture.

The Pacific Coast Brewery gave work to 125 men when beer was manufactured. Now as a shoe factory it has on its pay roll 2,500 men.

VON LIEBIG SAYS.

It is now possible to demonstrate with mathematical certainty that, so far as enriching the blood is concerned, the flour that will lie on the point of a knife affords more nourishment than four measures of the best Bavarian beer. Anybody who drinks a measure of beer daily would thus imbibe in one year about as much nourishment as is contained in a pound of bread. This is the positive statement made by Baron von Liebig, after scientific investigation, in "Chemische Briefe."

TO BE EXPECTED.

"More whisky consumed under prohibition than when the city had saloons." This is what the mayor of Davenport, Ia., said. Wonder if he's telling the truth! Anyway, as The Commoner pertinently puts it, "the mayor of a city ought to be enforcing the law instead of bragging about lawlessness—but this is what may be expected when the liquor element is allowed to pick the officials."

LABOR'S MORTAL ENEMY.

I say that the saloon is the labor union's mortal enemy and that unionism will never rise to its proper place, will never stand erect in pride and power if it allows the liquor traffic to hang around its neck and strap upon its back this cursed thing which men call the saloon.—Rev. Father James E. Cassidy.

LABOR'S TRIBUTE.

The vast fortunes of the brewers and distillers are built up by the hard-earned dollars of the workingman.

Is Your Work Hard?

Work which brings any unusual strain on the back and kidneys tends to cause kidney ailments, such as backache, lameness, headache, dizziness and distressing urinary troubles. Kidney complaints make any kind of work doubly hard and if neglected there is danger of gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease. If your work is hard on the back, keep your kidneys in good condition with Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands rely on them.

An Indiana Case

Theo. S. Payton, 505 W. Main St., New Albany, Ind., says: "I suffered a great deal from irritation, caused by kidney complaint. I had medical treatment and used many remedies, but got no benefit until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. Since using them, my kidneys have been normal and my system has been practically free from kidney complaint. Whenever I feel the least need of a kidney medicine, however, Doan's Kidney Pills bring good results."

MOVIE FORCE IN EDUCATION

Test Made in London Shows That Children Remember Film Plots Two Years After Seeing Pictures.

That moving picture films play an important part in a child's educational development is revealed by a test conducted recently in London by the Cinema commission. In one of the schools where a test was made, many of the girls who have refrained from attending the theaters since the beginning of the war were able to give good accounts of the films they had seen more than two years before.

The test revealed that films portraying domestic and fairy stories were favorites with the girls, while the boys preferred the cowboy and adventure pictures. Comics were far more popular with the boys than with the girls. The interest in war films varied, while love films were more interesting to the girls eleven years old and over.

Opening the Eggs.

He was a great pedestrian, but one day his physical energy seemed to give out. Weary and worn and sad, he was beginning to despair of finding rest and refreshment when a small wayside house came into view. The good lady of the house executed her commission to supply her visitor with eggs, toast and tea.

"May I open the eggs for you?" she asked, smilingly.

The young man nodded assent, but although the shell looked well enough, appearances are often deceptive, and that egg would not have done credit to any self-respecting hen.

He drew back his chair with a sigh.

"Hasn't it been boiled long enough, sir?" queried the lady.

"Yes," he replied, wearily; "but it was not boiled soon enough."

A Desperate Fight.

It was in the smoke-room of the village inn. The members of the company had been letting off some pretty tall tales when a rustic in the corner who had hitherto been quiet, fired off:

"I well remember a vicious old tom cat I had which used to attack all the cats and dogs in the neighborhood. Hearing of another celebrated pugilistic tom in the district, I got the two together, placed them in a box, and weighted the lid. After I finished my tea I went out to see which was the winner, but all was quiet. I quietly opened the lid, and what do you think I saw inside? Only a pair of tails!"—London Ideas.

GAME FISHING

THE BAIT-CASTING REEL.

My Dear Buck:

There is one part of your bait-casting outfit that sure must be right in material and workmanship, old scout, or you might as well make up your mind that your bait-casting days will be a grand old series of backlashes and cuss words and that little old important feature is your reel. You can slip a set of guides on a cane or any old stick and with a good free-running reel make a cast, but without a reel that runs smooth and even, your bait casting will be one darned bit of trouble after another, and to save your standing in the home burg you'll go back to still fishing and lead a peaceful, quiet life.

The quadruple multiplying reel and the short rod have put bait casting in the past few years in first place as the most popular method of fishing, because it is easy to learn and generally gets the fish. There is nothing mysterious about the q-m, it simply means that the gears are toothed to make four revolutions of the spool of the reel to one revolution of the handle, this increases the speed of recovering the line with the least amount of hand work. In shape the reel should be of the long, low spool design. The ordinary 60-yard reel having end plates of 2 inches in diameter and the 80-yard reel 2¼ inches. A reel of this size is plenty large enough for any bait casting and the long, low spool design aids in the thumbing of the line.

In the selection of a reel you will make no mistake in making it a point to choose one made of German silver, which by all odds is the best material used in the construction of bait-casting reels.

Jeweled Bearings Are Fine.

Without a doubt jeweled bearings on the reel make it run more smoothly and add to its life. The lengthened life of a reel due to the fact that it is jeweled more than overbalances the added cost over the ordinary kind. As a general thing the jewels are set in removable caps at the end of the bearings which makes it easy to keep them clean and oiled. Of course the jeweled reel nicks you deeper in the bank roll, but after a fellow has put in practice work on the lower-priced reels and feels like investing in one that will last forever, if handled right, then the jeweled reel is the only one to buy.

Care of the Reel.

The life of any reel will be mighty short if it is not given care and attention. The finest machine in the world will not run without oil, yet many fellows will use a reel week after week, and not think of feeding it a little soothing sirup until it begins to scrape and rattle like the 5:15. When this stage is reached they will drop a little oil in the cups, but the damage is done through overheated bearings and pinions, and the reel will never again run with freedom of friction and as smoothly as before the rough grind handed it.

The reel should be cleaned and oiled after each day's fishing. The ordinary thin oil is not sufficient, as no thin oil will last through the different temperatures to which a reel is subjected during a day's casting. Heated by the hot sun or chilled by the night air, as well as drenched with water during the day makes a combination that would eliminate any thin oil. While the thick oils soon churn into a creamy paste and hamper and clog the reel so that you think you are losing your speed at the game when your casts slow up. You make no mistake when you invest in a bottle of "real" reel oil and the best comes from the jawbones and lubber of the porpoise. This oil is refined up in the Arctic circle and will stand the gaff of any temperature. After you buy the oil, use it, don't stand it away in the tackle cabinet and forget it.

Oiling the reel is not all that is necessary to keep the little old pleasure producer in good shape. Like the line, the reel should be entirely dried after each day's fishing. Although German silver does not rust, it will corrode and the main cause for corroding is dampness. Be fair to the reel and dry it thoroughly in the open air or sunlight, drop a little oil in each oil cup before you tuck it away for the night.

As a final tip on the reel, old man, here's hopin' you don't take it apart every once in a while to see what makes it go. The smooth-running qualities of many a fine reel have been ruined by the inquisitive cuss with the itching palm and a screw driver. Of course you would never think of taking your watch apart and assembling it again, and a finely adjusted reel is just as accurately set as a fine watch. If anything goes bad with the reel, take it down to a reel doctor and let him feel its pulse.

DIXIE.

What Can We Do?

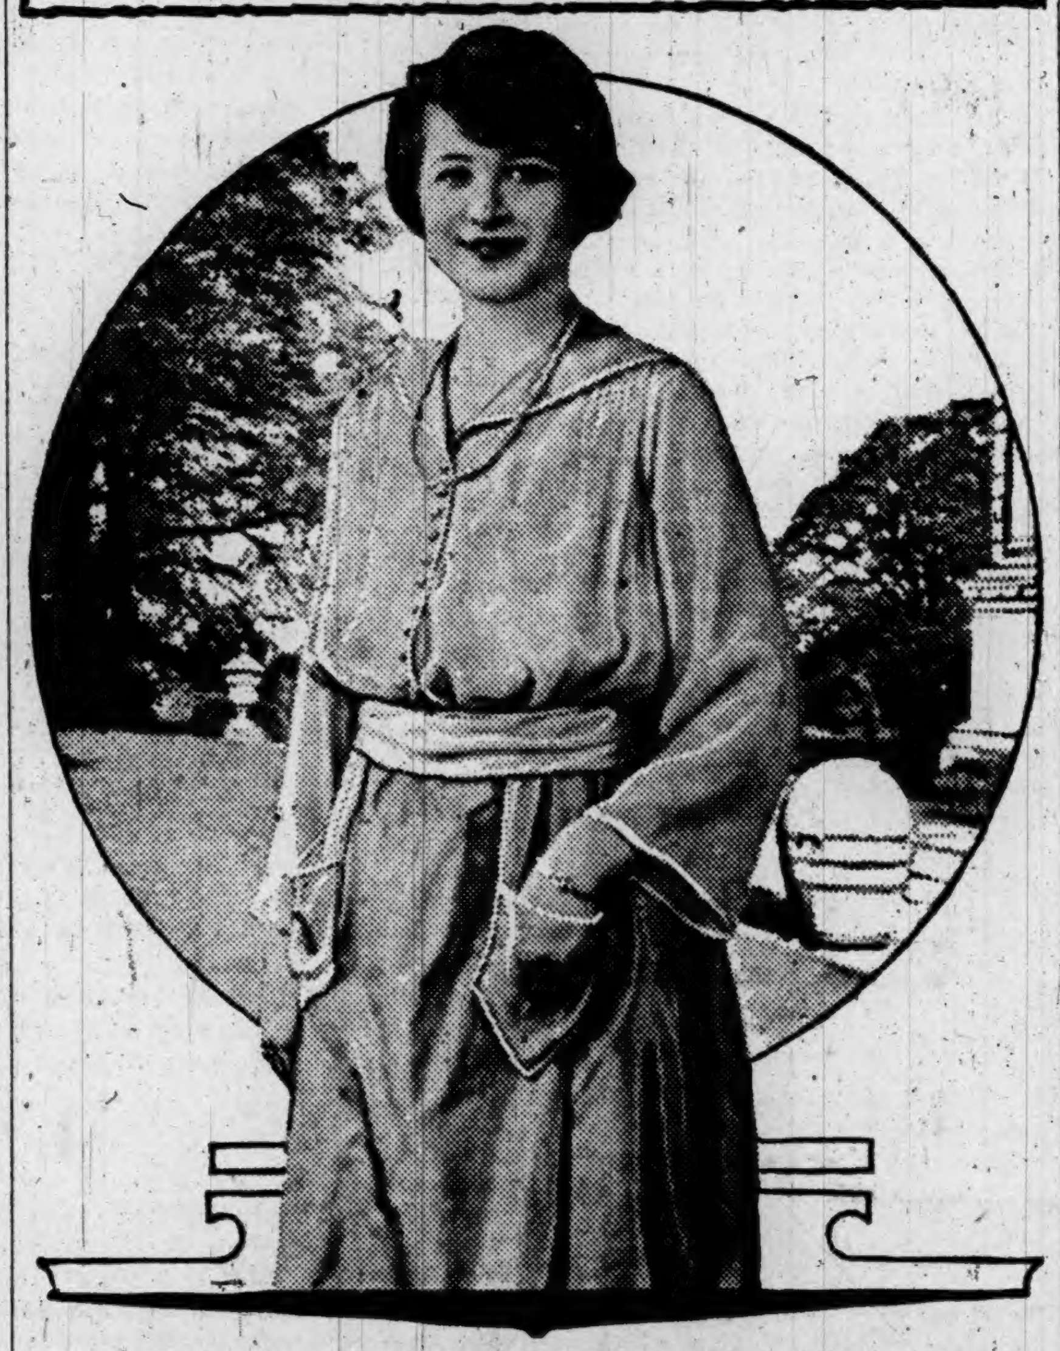
In previous articles directions for forming a Red Cross chapter and directions for forming an auxiliary to a chapter, have been given, together with suggestions for campaigns to secure members. When an auxiliary has been formed, the next thing to do is to determine what branch of Red Cross work this particular auxiliary will take up and how to go about doing the work.

The American Red Cross is anxious to have available for use at any time a great quantity of surgical dressings and hospital supplies ready for the demands that come from hospitals where wounded soldiers and sailors are cared for. In the preparation of these supplies most women can help, if they will. A newly formed auxiliary can begin its services to the best advantage by taking up this branch of the work, for war makes the need for hospital supplies imperative and volunteer workers can do the work. Women in the churches throughout the country are interesting themselves in this means of service.

All surgical dressings and hospital supplies must be made, packed and shipped according to the specifications and standards of the Red Cross, which meet the requirements of the United States army and navy. In order that women may know how to prepare supplies that will conform to adopted standards, the Red Cross is directing much effort to the spread of instruction. The educational courses are under the supervision of Miss Clara D. Noyes, director of the bureau of nursing service, in Washington. This instruction is carried on in two forms—either by supplying instructors for individual classes or in teaching centers, where permanent quarters are engaged and a corps of teachers conduct continuous classes. These centers are established now in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles and other places. For information concerning course of instruction, preparation of surgical dressings, address "Bureau of Nursing Service, Red Cross Headquarters, Washington, D. C."

Last Word in Summer Blouses



The last word in summer blouses is convincing that they, with many other things, are devoted to simplicity. They are close to plain in design, satin bindings give them an exquisite finish, and the resourcefulness of designers has managed girdles, peplums and pockets in the cleverest ways. These items had to save the day for the plain blouse, otherwise it would have met with defeat and been branded as commonplace.

There are many plain sleeves widened at the wrist, or near it, among the newest blouses, and bead and silk embroidery continue to appear in more of them. By means of soft, loose girdles, peplums or hanging pockets the blouse is so well adjusted to separate skirts that they seem made one for the other. The blouse shown in the picture is an example of the good arrangement of pockets and girdle. It is of sand-colored georgette crepe, bound with satin the same color, and the small buttons down the front are satin-covered. There are two reticule pockets suspended from the waist and a soft folded girdle of the crepe.

The pockets are decorated with a conventional flower, which appears to be done in French knots of colored silk. They emphasize this new evolution of the pocket which places the blouse in the ranks of distinguished new arrivals.

Georgette crepe and fine voile remain unchallenged favorite among materials for midsummer blouses. On the crepe models soutache braid, needlework, beads and fine lingerie laces are available for decorations. Laces and embroidery are liked best for voile blouses. A fine voile will repay its owner for a considerable outlay of time and work and for the price of good lace in making it, for it is about the most handy of all sheer materials and looks as well after laundering as before.

How to Apply Beads.

Beads continue to be of great importance in the fashion world. Women realize that they introduce a clever dash of color without adding bulk. The application of the beads is a tedious but not a difficult task. There are two ways to do the work. One is to take a stitch as each bead is strung. The other is to string the beads and couch the entire string to the material. The former method is more satisfactory.

Made With Borders.

Many of the new stuffs are made with borders, and most of the new gowns show borderings that are part of the material or added, while rich stuffs will be framed in handsome embroidered or woven bands.

Blouses Collarless Behind.

Some new blouses for tailored suits have a neckband attached only in front, leaving the neck bare at the back when the jacket is off.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 8

AHAZ, THE FAITHLESS KING.

LESSON TEXT—II Chron. 28:1-5, 20:27.
GOLDEN TEXT—Without faith it is impossible to please him.—Heb. 11:6.
LESSON TEXT—II Chron. 30:1-13.

Ahaz reigned sixteen years from about 739 to 723 B. C., over the kingdom of Judah, its capital being in Jerusalem. The kingdom was nearing its end, and was destroyed within a few years after the death of Ahaz. His character presents many interesting questions for discussion; the character of his reign, the wealth and prosperity of his father and grandfather, the development of his character from the home wherein he originated, why a nation can be successful and not be righteous or virtuous, that is, outwardly successful, and the application of these questions to our present-day political and commercial lives.

I. Ahaz, the Ruler, (vv. 1-5). The character of Ahaz is not to be admired. He played a prominent and evil part in the history of the Kingdom of Judah. We find his name recorded among the Syrian inscriptions of the year 732 B. C., the Hebrew historian having dropped the prefix "Jeho" from his name. The full name indicates that he had "grasped Jehovah," yet he was untrue to his name. The historian says "he did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord." This puts it mildly, but indeed few of the kings of Judah did otherwise, and he patterned his conduct not after the good model of his father, but the thoroughly bad conduct of the kings of the northern nation, Israel. He was but twenty years of age when he took the throne, but had already entered upon a course of action opposed to that of his father.

II. Ahaz Ruined. The choice lay before him of following in the steps of his grandfather Uzziah and his father Jotham (II Chron. 1:10). He chose to defy God, openly disobeyed him and was disloyal to his God and his country, walking in the ways of the kings of Israel, (v. 2), burnt his children in the fire, after the abominations of the heathen, (v. 3), made molten images of Baal, (v. 2), and spread that worship into the high places on the hills and under every green tree (v. 4), made sacrilegious use of the temple's treasury, and was dishonest as well as profane. He trusted Baalim more than he trusted God.

III. Ahaz Rebuked. God did not allow him to pursue his course of action without protest. When the children of good men go wrong, there is no measuring the extent of depravity to which they will sink. Nevertheless, God was opposed and tried to save the young man and the nation. God used the king of Syria as one agency for rebuking this mad young man. He carried away great multitudes captive, one hundred and twenty thousand in one day (v. 6), and "two hundred thousand women, sons and daughters" (v. 8) at another date. Ahaz himself was filled with terror at the great calamity that overtook him. (Isa. 7:2.) While he received temporary help (II Kings 16:9, 10), he received ultimately ruin from the king of Assyria, for he became a vassal and was summoned to Damascus to pay homage to that king, as appears from the account II Kings 16:7-9, and also from the Assyrian inscription, above referred to. Other enemies also attacked him—Edomites from the southeast carried away captives, and the Philistines from the southwest invaded the cities of the low plains, south of Judah, and took possession of them (vv. 17-19) and the army of the Assyrian, which Ahaz led to rob and profane the temple and its treasures in order to buy them off (v. 22-24), completed the ruin of his nation. Ahaz was forced to pay a heavy tribute to the Assyrian king (v. 21), and got no help for his outlay. He put his trust in an arm of flesh instead of in the mighty arm of God, which brought upon him the curse that always comes to those who trust in man (Jer. 17:5, 6). There is a blessing which always awaits those who trust in Jehovah (Jer. 17:7, 8). The wise man turns to God not in the time of his distress but at all times. Instead of sacrificing to the God who saved his father and who would save him, Ahaz sacrificed to the god "which smote him." His defiance knew no bounds (v. 24). He seemed to have dabbled in every known form of false worship, thereby "provoking to anger the Lord God of his fathers" (II Kings 23:11, 12). God is long-suffering to those who wander from him, but there comes an end to his patience (II Peter 3:9, 10).

IV. The Reverse Picture. There are several problems to be solved as we view this picture, for it is a story of real life, not only of the early times but is being repeated even today and in this country. (1) Men will reap that which they sow. One cannot sow wild oats and reap the fruits of righteousness. (2) Jehovah places righteousness above security or prosperity. (3) God's purposes are for the uplift and the making of the nation and the individual better. God never does evil that good may come out of it. A loving father must exercise discipline, and let us not be mistaken.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

To Hunt Coyotes.

The remaining few "dead shots" in the state of Montana are polishing and oiling the old "six gun" and Winchester, for the decree has gone forth that the coyote must be exterminated. State Veterinarian W. J. Butler approved the plan to send out the best shots in the state to kill off the animals.

Evidence has been brought to light that coyotes are infected with rabies. A cow was found to be infected after having been bitten. Coyotes and wolves, when infected with rabies, will attack any living thing.

In Danger.

"Do you believe that kissing transmits microbes?"

"No; but if my fiancee doesn't quit fondling that dog I expect to get fleas."

His Most Exciting Experience.

A Welsh officer, well known as a Rugby footballer, was asked what was his most exciting experience at the front. He said he could not decide, but that the following incident was one of his most thrilling experiences. He had come from the trenches, and was looking forward to a fairly restful time in billets. Entering his room, he was about to throw himself into a seat when he heard a hissing noice. It sounded just like a lighted fuse, and, with thoughts of spies and bombs flashing through his mind, he forgot his fatigue in a wild dash outside. Getting to shelter, he waited to hear the building being blown up, but a minute passed and nothing happened. Then his orderly poked his head out from somewhere and said, "Kettle's singing, sir."

Gentle Sarcasm.

"Do you regard the price of coal as high?" asked the dealer.

"No," replied the patient citizen. "You seem to regard the stuff as so precious I am surprised you let go of it at any price."

Trade Paradox.

"Icemen can do something no other class of men can succeed in."

"What is that?"

"They can stay where they are and steal a weigh at the same time."

Save the Babies

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twenty-two per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirty-seven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save many of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity, they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. There can be no danger in the use of Castoria if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher as it contains no opiates or narcotics of any kind.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher

Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. Write for literature as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Can., or to Irish Flags.

Since sooner or later home rule will be a fact in Ireland, the question of an Irish flag is one which should be settled as rapidly as possible. A good deal of thought has been given the subject since the passing of the Home Rule Act. Apparently the proposals which have met with most approval are a red St. Patrick's cross on a white ground, charged with four shamrocks and a "golden sunburst on a blue ground." The latter was the banner of Fionu MacCumball's Fenians. Another design which has supporters consists of three golden crowns on a blue ground, part of the arms of Munster. This was Ireland's national emblem from the twelfth century until the three were replaced by the harp, by order of Henry VIII. Nobody has proposed green as one of the colors; green first being used by the United Irishmen in 1798 as an "amalgamation" of the orange of the North with the blue of the South, blue being Ireland's own heraldic color.—Christian Science Monitor.

Sure to See It There.

Jinks was always complaining of his wife's memory. "She can never remember anything," said he. "It's awful!"

"My wife was just as bad," said Brown, "till I found a capital recipe."

"What was it?" asked Jinks eagerly.

"Why whenever there's anything particular I want the missus to remember, I write it on a slip of paper and gum it on the lookingglass."

Jinks is now a contented man.

No Use.

"Are you going to contest her suit for divorce?"

"What's the use? I never won an argument with that woman in my life."

Her Arm Paralyzed

While dipping water from a rain barrel, Friday afternoon, Mrs. John Petrie was painfully injuried from a stroke of lightning, which paralyzed her arm. The stroke followed the telephone wires to the house and there being no ground wire, it jumped to the eaves spouting and thence to the barrel. The barrel was but half full of water. Had it been full, the accident might have been more serious for she was helpless for some time. After medical attention, the paralyzed arm was relieved.—Woodburn News.

Settle Electric Lights

At the meeting of the town board Monday evening, a settlement of the street light bill for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1917, was effected. This is due semi-annually, but the board refused to settle in January because of poor service. Mr. Farnsworth, representing the Butler Public Utilities company, of Delphos, which now supplies the lights, was present. He was very fair, and there was no trouble reaching a settlement. He admitted that the service had been poor and readily agreed to a discount of 15 per cent. The bill for the year was $550; the discount was $82.50, leaving $467.50 to be paid. Mr. Farnsworth assured the board that the new company will furnish better lights than the old one.

Records Restored

W. A. Austin, who for the past four years and more has been busy restoring the burnt records, completed his fifty-first book last week and has placed it with the others in the court house. It is the book of final records for the years of 1880-81-82 and 83. Mr. Austin has a contract for two more books.

During the time he has been at work on the books he has had some help, but for the last year and a half, he has worked alone. Part of the previous time he was assisted by one or two persons.

These restored books have been of great value to people wishing to trace back avents and their compiling has meant considerable labor, too.—Butler Herald.

Spreading Infection

A German, posing a neutral, has been arrested in Sweden upon his return from Russia, where he had secretly spread hog cholera and infectious deseases among hogs and cattle. He carried the poisin germs in lumps of sugar, imitation lead pencils and in other harmless looking devices. It is possible that recent out breaks of cholera in the corn belt are due to a similar cause. Why may not contagious deseases among humans be secretly distributed? Would that be any worse than aeroplane attacks on defenseless women and children, or the work of submarine?

Young Boy Operated On

On Wednesday of last week, Glen, the six-year-old son of William Levy, east of Coburntown, was taken to the Lutheran Hospital, Ft. Wayne, where he was operated on by Drs. W. C. and H. R. Farnham and Dr. Rowles, for appendicites. The appendix had ruptured and peritonitis had set in. The operation was successful.

> He who loathes war, and will do everything in his power to avert it, but who will, in the last extremity, encounter its perils, from love of country and of home—who is willing to sacrifice himself, and all that is dear to him in life, to promote the well-being of his fellowman, will ever receive a worthy homage.—Abbott.

THIS MOTHER GAVE HER ALL

Touching Incident of Sacrifice on the Altar of Her Country's Need.

One of the touching incidents of General Lyons' march to Wilson creek was that of a Tennessee mother bringing her little boy to the captain's tent and offering him for the service of his country. The boy's father had been killed in battle and the mother and boy were alone in the world. The bright eyes and alert bearing of the little chap, for he was scarcely thirteen years of age, caught the eye of the captain and he asked what the boy could do. "I can drum," he said proudly stretching himself to his full height. And he could as the fifer soon found out as he played "The Flowers of Edinborough," a most difficult piece to follow with the drum. "Madam, I'll take the boy," said the captain. The mother kissed her boy and turning to the captain said: "Bring him back, captain," and to the boy she said as she placed her hand on his eager little head, "God bless you, my boy. You're all I have left, but I give you to my country, and drum right bravely for the boys in blue." During the heavy fatiguing marches from Rolla to Springfield it was amusing to see the long-legged fifer wading through the mud with our little drummer hero mounted on his back. During the fight at Wilson creek the cheery fife and brave drum beat time for the soldier boys in battle. The fight led down into a deep ravine and it was not long before our drummer boy was in the midst of the fray. That night the detail on guard duty near the ravine thought he heard faintly the sound of a drum. He listened in the moonlight and when the relief came he asked permission to go in search of the little drummer lad. He followed the sound of the drum and soon found our hero seated on the ground with his back against a tree and his faithful drum hanging on a bush. He dropped his drum sticks as the guard came up and exclaimed: "Oh, corporal, I am so glad to see you. Give me a drink," and as he turned to go to get him water, he pleaded: "Oh, don't go and leave me. I can't walk." His little legs had been shot off at the knees. Looking closer he discovered a dead soldier lying in the grass, but evidently before he died he had put a tourniquet about the stumps of the little legs. The brave lad was carried into camp and given surgical attention, but the brave little spirit went out into the brightness and glory of a duty well done and a country served even unto death.

The National Guard

By Kenneth MacDougall

Pushers of pens and pencils,
Workers of wood and steel,
Doctors, lawyers and business men,
Answer the bugle's peal.

Hurrying throngs of khaki,
Rumble of wagon train,
Clatter of cavalry horses,
The Guard is called out again.

Back from the sun-baked desert,
Stalwart, alert and hard,
Protecting the nation's vitals,
Is the much-knocked National Guard.

Give them the praise that's due them,
For the regular calls 'em "pard."
Watch out for the wives and families of the men of the National Guard.

ASK THAT SINK HOLE BE FILLED

Delegation of Farmers from Concord Township Appeal to Commissioners to Fill Low Place in Road.

ROAD SINKS BELOW SURFACE

Charles Rugman of Auburn, who was Awarded Contract to Fill the Hole Last August, Agrees to Resume Work Next Week.

The county commissioners of DeKalb county met in Auburn Monday morning for their regular July meeting. The first matter up before the board was the filling of the E. W. Saylor sink hole along the public highway two and one-fourth miles north of St. Joe.

The board awarded a contract for the filling of the sink hole to Charles Rugman of Auburn, last August and considerable work was done on the job last fall. In a short time the fill disappeared, however, and during the winter months it was impossible to get through the sink hole. A road, however, was opened to the east of the fill so that the sink hole might be passed.

A delegation of farmers together with Postmaster E. R. Curie of St. Joe, appeared before the board Monday together with Trustee H. C. Hathaway of Concord township, and asked that the sink hole be filled at once. They based their plea on the fact that the postoffice department will take away their mail service unless the place is fixed as the carrier is forced to go over the road twice to reach the patrons near the sink hole. This adds two miles to his trip which would be unnecessary if the sink hole was filled.

The board of commissioners called the contractor in and laid the matter before him. It was thereupon decided that the work should be resumed next week and the trustee agreed to assist in putting in about 80 feet of bridge work so that the traffic may not be held up any longer. The board of commissioners agreed to purchase the planking for the work. Trustee Hathaway agreed to have the material for the temporary bridge on the ground this week together with men.

Fort Wayne coal dealers believe that the drop in coal will have no effect in that city for several months at least. The shortage of cars and labor and the increased demand by the industries of the country are the chief reasons given for the belief.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland [illegible] Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Visits His Son, Paul

A. D. Perry returned on Thursday from a four-day visit with his son, Paul, at Sparta, Wis. Paul is numbered among those who have donned Uncle Sam's uniform and are training for service in France. He is in the artillery department of the service. The government has purchased a large tract of land near Sparta and is converting it into a gun range. It is in the midst of a forest, and here the boys will practice at shooting at an object they can not see. Land has been cleared upon which quarters are being erected. It is laid out in streets, with electric lights and sewers. Instead of tents, wooden houses will be erected for the soldiers.

Carr School Farmer Club

The Carr School Farmers' club is proving to be a success in every way.

Thursday evening, July 5, forty members met at the home of Ray D. Herrick and wife to discuss farm topics in general. A short program was rendered, consisting of music and recitations.

County Agent Arehart was the principal speaker of the evening. He spoke to the ladies concerning a canning demonstration to be held at Coburn's Corners, emphasizing the importance of their being there. To all, he spoke with reference to the potato blight, insects that destroy vegetable crops, the need of limestone on the farm and other important problems that confront the farmer at this time.

Everyone present spoke in favor of continuing the club.

Ice cream and cake were served, after which the club adjourned to meet on Thursday, Aug. 2, at the home of C. G. Shilling and wife.

WEEKLY BRAINSTORM

To THE kaiser: "Eeventually. Why not now?"

* * *

GERMAN school children are taught that Germans are the chosen people of God; that anything their rulers do is justifiable. The wars of conquest waged in the past are justified, and the kings who waged them are held up as national heroes. The English saying, "The king can do no wrong," has been broadened into "Germany can do no wrong." Germany may have a god on their side, but his name begins with the same letter ours ends with.

* * *

RECENTLY, at Folkestone, England, a bomb dropped from a German aeroplane landed among a group of four little girls, killing all of them. Such atrocities may comport with the kaiser's conception of "civilized warfare;" but to Americans, who have had much to do with savage Indians, they sound much like a page from colonial history. At the time the little ones were killed, the kaiser, who devoutly mixes religion with humanity, may have been on his knees imploring the blessing of the God of Germany on his efforts.

* * *

HUNDREDS of civilians were executed in Belgium by the Germans, their offense being shooting at the invaders. No one but regularly organized soldiers are authorized to kill each other, according to German usage; and any other person who commits a hostile act is summarily shot. An English captain of a merchant vessel, who defended himself against a submarine, was adjudged a pirate and was put to death. In other words, the kaiser claims the right to kill non-combatants on the land and on the sea and dedies them the right to defend themselves. Reversing the rule, if the killing of a soldier on land is murder and on sea is piracy, when done by a civilian, why is not the killing of civilians—including children, women and old men—murder or the sinking of all vessels—including pleasure craft and hospital ships—piracy; and why should not the perpetrators, when captured, be treated as bandits or pirates?

* * *

THE following editorials are clipped from the Hicksville News; and, strange to relate, they appeared in adjoining columns: "Whenever a man starts to finding fault with his neighbor's business, you can depend upon it that there is a reason." Thus endeth No. one, all of which is true. Then, with ludicrous inconsistency, the editor continues, dealing his competitor verbal knockout: "There are two reasons to account for Mr. Shell's spleen and further than tell them we do not propose to besmirch the News with more of an explanation. First, Mr. Shell realizes that his busines is on the decline. Square dealing has put his broadest knocks to naught, and since he is losing business he needs must raise the latter part of his name with his competitor. The second reason is more of a personal one. Most men retain their normal faculties until late in life. However, extreme irregularities early in life bring on the abnormal stage long before it would naturally appear. The editor of this paper together with other good citizens of Hicksville have noted a gradual change in the mental make-up of our worthy competitor. In fact, Mr. Schell is entering his dotage and we would consider any unwarranted attack on Mr. Schell as entirely out of harmony with conditions as we actually know them to exist." The foregoing is not printed for the purpose of "starting something," but simply to show how a man flounders around and roils up verbal waters when he ventures out beyond his depth.

It has been reported that peddlers, manifestly enimies of America, have been traveling through the country, (including both town and rural districts,) offering for sale court plaster which is said to contain germs of leprosy, and stock food which contains germs of disease, presumably with the idea of destroying as much as possible of American live stock.

This sounds like a blast from the realms of SATAN, so horrible is its import, and we hope that it is not true, but, to play safe in these times of varied troubles, it is suggested that you warn your readers to beware of buying or accepting as a gift anything from strange peddlers, or any peddlers, for even some of our own good citizens might be induced to distribute stuff of this kind, perfectly innocent of the real nature of the preparations.

Card Playing in Public

Card playing is none too elevating, at the best; but when it comes to playing out-doors on the main street of the town—on Sunday, too—the limit is passed Such was the case last Sunday afternoon, affording a poor example to the young boys who stood around and witnessed the game.

Mrs. Smith No Better

Mrs. Rebecca Smith, whose serious illness was announced in these columns last week, is no better. She is afflicted with heart trouble; and, as the nature of that disease, her condition varies from day to day.

Accepted Styles in Summer Suits

By way of reducing the high cost of living, silk appears to be the chosen fabric for summer suits, rather than woolen fabrics. The industrious silk worm, aided and abetted by other things known to manufacturers, have made silks cheaper in comparison with woolens than they used to be. Silk jersey, poplin and taffeta are cool and elegant substitutes for light woolens, and besides these there are the new weaves, made especially for summer wear, and pongee to strengthen the cause of silk.

A beige-colored suit of silk poplin shown in the illustration measures up to the highest standard in new styles. It has a wide cape collar, of the epaulette variety, and the inevitable pockets that appear on all well-regulated models. The collar is extended into revers at the front of the coat and there is an overcollar of printed silk, the same silk being used to line the flaring cuffs. Buttons are inconspicuous on this suit and are covered with the silk. The skirt is plain. A pretty costume blouse of crepe worn with a suit of this kind, makes up a formal suit toilette for summer afternoon or evening semidress affairs.

The street suit of serge, with edges bound with silk braid, is noticeable for clever and original management of the belt and the introduction of fine plaits in the skirt. The best is an extension of the side bodies, cut with rounded ends and decorated with bone buttons. A tab at each side of the coat simulates a pocket.

The skirt hangs straight in approved slim lines. It has a panel at the back and front, with side plaits at each side. They are pressed very flat, but provide a comfortable width for walking.

How to Secure and Fit Up a Red Cross Workroom

After an auxiliary of the Red Cross has been formed and has determined upon the specific work which it will do, a place of meeting must be secured. A light room will be needed where work tables will accommodate the women who volunteer to do the work in hand. In many cities and towns business men donate vacant rooms in commercial buildings for this purpose. In all the large department stores in the country, floor space has been allotted to this work and placards, posted throughout the stores, invite shoppers to give an hour or so of their time to Red Cross work.

The workrooms of millinery shops are turned over to Red Cross workers in the evening, in some of the smaller cities and towns. It is best to secure a vacant room in a store building or space in a store, to be used solely for Red Cross work. Club women and members of various women's organizations, church societies, etc., can be allotted a definite time during each week, to meet in a body and work together, in these rooms.

When a room has been secured it must be fitted with work tables and chairs. Plain wooden chairs and long tables are best and the tables are to be covered with oilcloth, if possible, so that they can be easily kept clean. Nails along the walls, or elsewhere, will be needed in which big overall aprons are to be hung. Above each nail a small ticket pasted to the wall carries the name of the owner of the apron, or a string ticket may be used on the apron. A few extra aprons should be provided for volunteer workers who may not be able to come regularly, but drop in at odd times to give an hour or so to the work. Two or three women can share an apron among them, if each has a definite time set aside for using it.

A place for storing the supplies made and facilities for packing them in boxes when they are to be shipped away, must be provided. And an important item not to be overlooked, is a place for washing the hands; for this must be done, without fail, as a preliminary to any work done for the Red Cross. Small towels, not larger than a small table napkin are used for drying the hands. Members of the auxiliary can make and donate these, using old linen for the purpose.

It is a good idea, when a room has been secured and fitted up, to pay some woman a small weekly fee to keep it clean and orderly. She will be expected to see that it is swept and dusted and that the tables are washed when necessary.

Having secured a room and its fittings, and someone to keep it in order, the women of a new auxiliary are ready to go to work. Military hospitals are using and will use enormous quantities of surgical dressings and hospital supplies and these are the things that women who are anxious to be of patriotic service to the government can make. Directions for going about this work will be given in the next article.

THE BAIT-CASTING OUTFIT.

My Dear Buck:

So you are sure stumped old man, when it comes to getting together a bait-casting outfit. Been hitting her up with the old cane pole and any old hook or line, and getting the fish, but every time you pass a tackle layout in a sporting goods store, your hands fairly itch to swing one of those short bait casting rods, and then you sorta hold back. 'Cause you don't just know what's really needed and you sure don't want to tip off your hand to the fellow on the "inside" that you are shy on tackle dope.

Slip this into your card index, you can get a good outfit together for $12 to $15 that will give you rattling good service and at that, be a line of tackle that you need never be ashamed of. It'll stand up under the hard knocks that you probably will hand it and with a little practice, will get you fish for your stringer. At the same time it will make a good showing with any other fellow's tackle, unless of course, he happens to be a "he-whop" for coin and overdoes the tackle stunt.

Rod Either Split Bamboo or Steel.

For a rod it can be either split bamboo or steel and between 5 and 5½ feet in length. In split bamboo you can get a good one for $4 to $7. The two-piece rod is a fine bender without straining at the ferrule, which is below the center, well to the butt; it is full of snap and whip.

A steel rod is strong and durable, and is just stiff enough to make long casts with precision and whippy enough to make a short cast with ease. The reel seat is close to the grip, which makes thumbing the reel less tiring. The extra large guides and tip are an aid to casting as the line shoots out freely without much friction on the guides.

Reel is the Heavy Worker.

For a reel you will want a quadruple multiplying, or in other words old "hoss," there are four revolutions of the core of the reel to one turn of the handle—that's for speed in giving you casting distance and also to retrieve the line quickly with the smallest amount of hand work.

By far the biggest end of the bait-casting work depends upon the reel, it is the most important item in the outfit. The average days fishing runs about six hours of continuous casting, at all of which time the reel is hard at work playing out line and recovering it. This is a steady grind and the reel must be a good one to stand up under the strain. This only goes to show that a poorly constructed reel will shortly throw up the sponge with a few wheezy shrieks and about that time, far away from a tackle outfitter, you will let out a few choice cuss words and give it the Christy Mathewson into the weed beds.

There are many good reels that you can get, ranging from $4 to $7.50, and they will all do the work and do it well.

Goodby to Backlashes.

If you are shy on time to practice thumbing the ordinary reel, and you don't want to bother with "backlashes," which happen more or less to even the sure-enough fishermen, you can get an antibacklash reel and start casting with practically no practice.

For a line, get a fifty-yard spool of waterproof soft square braided silk No. 6, which runs freely from the reel and with the least amount of friction on the guides and is easily thumbed without burning. A line of this kind will cost you 50c and it will not get fuzzy nor swell up when wet.

Artificial Plugs and Wobblers.

Of lures or artificial baits there are legion and they range from 10c up. Some are worth it and some are not. You'll probably want to buy every one you see, and try 'em out. That's part of the game, but for a starter, a few minnow-shaped lures, of white, red, green, rainbow and perch, will make a selection in color that ought to interest any old bass or other game fish. You can pick up a collection of plugs for a few dollars, that contains every kind of a wiggle, wobble, dive and movement in the deck and if you keep them moving when in the water, there is no reason why any high-brow bass won't strike them out of pure inquisitiveness just to see what makes 'em do it.

For your pork rind, frogs and live minnows you will need a few spinners and spoons. Get a single and tandem, Slim Eli No. 3, and a couple of new casting spoons 4-x, bright nickel and white enamel.

With a couple little odds and ends such as sinkers, extra hooks and an oil can, you have a bait casting outfit that should help you "bring home the bacon," of course you have to learn how to use it.

"DEAD MAN'S HILL."

I have seen a picture inexpressibly sad of "Dead Man's Hill in France" with its 300,000 graves and as many wooden crosses. Far as eye can reach are the figures of black shrouded women; they bend themselves above the graves; they lift themselves with outstretched hands toward the unrelenting heavens. But for them there is a pitiful compensation: They have the trinkets of the Legion of Honor and the memories of heroism that will never die. Powder-blackened and disemboweled, their sons were hurled into long trenches, but above them float the tri-color of France and the flag of the fatherland and they will live forever.

I see today another dead man's hill—a hill that rises in my own land, and from this proud, imperial city. The picture of this hill is infinitely sad. Women crowd it with their forms and cover it with their lamentations and for them there is no compensation, no flag to drape above the picture, no cross of honor to press into the baby's hand, no memory but one of infamy and shame. They weep and through their tears no rainbow ever shines, for their dead have died in vain.

Who speaks for these women, for these who mourn the unnumbered slain of alcohol, who have followed their sons to the drunkard's grave and their daughters to the stake of man's alcohol-fed lust? Who speaks for them? By the blood of the innocent and by the flag of the free, we speak for them! And we will speak, until, by the grace of God—the God of Washington, and Lincoln, and Lee—until by the grace of the Lord God of Hosts and the votes of the American people we have consummated a saloonless nation, a sober people and a stainless flag!—Daniel A. Poling.

FIGURES AND FIGURES.

The number of bushels of grain consumed annually in the manufacture of alcoholic beverages has been variously stated by the press, but the figure most generally used has been 600,000,000. The distillers and brewers now are calling the attention of the newspapers to the fact that they use only the trifling amount of approximately 135,000,000 bushels.

The interesting point in the case is that the inflated figure, 600,000,000, originated with the liquor interests some years ago and has been used to impress the men engaged in agriculture with the immensity of the market for grains afforded by the liquor business and the calamity that would necessarily result to the farmers from prohibition.

Not a word of protest was ever uttered by the liquor interests concerning the use of this figure until the war prohibition question loomed large. Then it was made to shrink in astonishing fashion. The figure now named by the liquor interests is approximately the same as that which appears in W. C. T. U. literature, notably in Prof. John Nicholl's booklet, "Does It Pay?"—The Union Signal.

SALOON REVENUE NOT NEEDED.

After the saloons were driven out of Kansas City, Kan., the state's largest city, for the first time in 20 years that municipality made no debt for current expenses. And this without saloon revenue, as its mayor at that time, U. S. Guyer, has recorded in a signed statement.

The first year the saloons were effectively suppressed in Kansas City, it is recorded by a former attorney general of Kansas, that the cost of public prosecutions, which the public had to bear, fell off $25,000. Another saving of $25,000 was made by a reduction of the police force. How much was saved the merchants in the better collection of accounts, and how much was saved the people in other ways, cannot be estimated.

LIQUOR LIES ANSWERED.

Through the misuse of statistics, through cribbing brief statements of fact from official reports and adroitly stripping them from their qualifying clauses, the desperate saloon interest still is trying to fool the nation into believing that prohibition is harmful to Kansas, where the people voluntarily have just added the most stringent bone-dry law in existence to keep liquor from seeping across the state border from the outside.—Capper's Weekly.

SAVE GRAIN FOR BREAD.

On March 8 the Berliner Tageblatt asserted that the suspension of all beer brewing in northern Germany was imminent, "due to the desire to save maize for bread and malt to take the place of coffee."

DECREASE IN NUMBER.

The report of the commissioner of internal revenue for the last fiscal year (ending June, 1916) shows decrease in the number of liquor dealers as follows: Rectifiers, 29; retailers, 5,751; wholesalers, 178; brewers, 82.

When the first shipment of frozen eggs had arrived, their extreme hardness astonished the brokers, and a gentleman calling at a broker's office was amazed to see him taking aim at the wall with an egg.

"What the dickens are you doing?" he asked.

But the man let drive, the only result being a slight dent in the wall.

The thing being explained to him, he took a couple of eggs and put them in his trousers pocket, intending to startle his wife with them. Arriving home, he waited till the family were seated at dinner and then banged one of the eggs at the new wallpaper.

But the smile quickly faded from his face. The egg had thawed.

A Paternal Error.

The young man of age had disobeyed his father and joined the colors preparatory to going to the border. After he had been in camp a month he got a day off to visit home.

"My son," the father greeted him sternly, "I didn't raise you to be a soldier."

The son gulped a great gulp.

"I know you didn't, dad," he replied, "but if you could only see the way those officers have been man-handling me to correct your mistake, you would kick yourself thoroughly, if you had the slightest filial regard."—Judge.

DOG FANCIERS FACING RUIN

Dealers in England See Disaster in High Taxes Placed on Animals to Conserve Food Supply.

Dog fanciers in England, especially the women, say that the new dog taxes are going to kill the business they have been carefully building up for years. They do not object to the suggested increase on old licenses, but they fear the big tax on new dogs is going to frighten away all their customers.

There are many British women with small incomes, living in the country who have invested most of their money in dogs as a business. They were willing to mark time till the end of the war, looking forward to a revival in their business afterward. Trade is of course slack just now, but with no money coming in at all they will be unable to retain their kennels.

One fancier spoke bitterly of the sensational stories told in certain quarters about pampered dogs and the impossible amount of food they were accused of eating.

Matter of Sex.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox said at a literary luncheon in New York:

"The poet must be accurate. The loftiest flights of poetry become ridiculous if they contain mistakes. It's like the town girl in the country.

"A town girl in the country said to a farmer friend:

"'Oh, look at the adorable little cowlets in the poppy fields!'

"'Them ain't cowlets,' he said. 'Them's bullets.'"

One way for a man to get the better of a woman in an argument is to state his version of the case—and then run.

FARM MORE LAND

Cultivate for the Soldier at the Front.

This question of conservation of food has become so agitated by those who have a knowledge of what it means in the preservation of life, who have made a study of the food conditions, and the requirements of the country, that it is beginning to arouse the entire nation. The economist whose duty it is to study the output and compare it with the consumption, sees a rapidly creeping up of one on the other, and, when the appetite of consumption gets a headway on the output, where will the nation be? It is time the people were aroused, for there is danger ahead unless the intelligence of the people is awakened to the facts. The crop of 1917 will be less than an average one, and see the work it has to perform. It has to feed the man producing it, and he is of less efficiency today than a year ago. His strength has been reduced by the drawing away of the thousands from the farms, who are now in the ranks of the consumer instead of in that of the producer. There is an inverse ratio here that can only be understood when confronted with the appalling figures presented by those in charge of the conservation work. The army has to be fed, dependents cared for, the navy has to have provisions, and we cannot sit idly by and see the women and children of the countries across the sea starve. There is such a great call for active participation in the matter of providing food, that those who are left at home in charge of this work have a responsibility placed upon them fully as great as has the man at the front who has gone out to protect the homes, the sanctity and the honor of those who are left behind. The producer should think only of this; there should be economy, not only of labor. Every acre of available land should be producing. Advantage should be taken of every daylight hour. It must not be a case of how much can we make. It must be a case of "fight" with those who have gone overseas, but in our way, fight to win the war. Where that spirit pervades will be found the spirit of the patriotic American. There is no difficulty in securing land in any of the states. It may be rented on easy terms or purchased at low prices, and there should be little difficulty arranging with bankers to get the necessary funds to carry on operations. Should you not be able to get what you want in your own state, Western Canada offers an immense wide field for operations at the lowest possible cost, and Americans are welcomed with open arms. Homesteads of 160 acres each may be had on easy conditions, and other lands may be purchased at low prices on easy terms. The yields of all kinds of small grains are heavy. The prospects for a 1917 crop are excellent, and it looks today as if there would be as good a return as at any time in the past, and when it is realized that there have been yields of forty and forty-five bushels of wheat over large areas this should be encouraging. Now that the two countries are allies and the cause is a common one there should be no hesitation in accepting whatever offer seems to be the best in order to increase the production so necessary, and which should it not be met, will prove a serious menace. Particulars as to Canadian lands, whether for purchase or homestead, may be had on application to any Canadian Government Agent.—Advertisement.

VALUE OF CATTLE MANURE

Do Not Let It Accumulate and Rot on Stable Premises—Much Fertilizing Value Goes With Loss of Waste Liquids.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

A good share of the profit from dairy, or beef farming is in the manure. In selling butter and feeding the warm skim milk, very little soil fertility leaves the farm. No other kind of farming will approach the value of dairying in this respect. Fattening beef cattle in the stable runs a close second.

In computing dairy profits, the manure value is seldom taken into account, because it is set off against labor. In a lump sum manner, the manure is supposed to be worth about as much as the labor of taking care of the cow.

As the result of a series of experiments conducted for the purpose of trying to arrive at the money value of cattle manure, $30 per cow per year was found to be a fair valuation for the manure made by an animal weighing 1,000 pounds, when fed a liberal milk ration in a good dairy stable, where both the solids and the liquids could be saved. Keeping up the richness of the soil is the greatest problem that farmers have to deal with. If the cow will help the farmer in this respect to the extent of $30 a year, the problem is obviously simplified greatly.

To save this fertilizer, the stable floor must be made of concrete and manure absorbents must be used. The cattle must be supplied liberally with bedding, which should consist of straw. If the straw is run through the cutting box, it makes a better bedding and absorbs a great deal more moisture than long straw. The next best absorbents for liquid manure are ground phosphate rock and gypsum. Gypsum is sulphate of lime and phosphate rock carries phosphoric acid, both of which, under usual conditions, are very beneficial to the soil. They are both known as ammonia fixers, as they absorb ammonia from manure and hold it until they are applied to the soil.

There is a great deal more ammonia in liquid than in solid manure. Ammonia is a strong nitrogen compound and is extremely volatile, so unless it is combined with some chemical of an affinitive nature, it floats away in the atmosphere and is probably lost to that particular farm.

By the proper and careful use of cut straw for bedding, together with liquid manure absorbents, the manure is collected and temporarily preserved, but it must be applied to the land almost immediately or heavy losses will occur.

While the properly fed and housed cow will supply $30 worth of manure, it is up to the farmer to utilize this valuable by-product to the best advantage in order to secure the benefits. The best method would be to make daily application with a good manure spreader on land that is thoroughly well fitted to receive it. With a properly arranged manure carrier it costs very little to load the manure into the spreader and unload it upon the land. There are, however, difficulties and limitations which no farmer can control. Climatic conditions in the winter time are such as to render this kind of disposal almost impossible for days together. There are weather periods when the ground is too soft for a load and it is difficult to have a field prepared to receive manure at all times. It is possible to forestall such difficulties to a certain extent by starting operations on the land during the summer and fall, making ready for emergencies.

In order to obtain the best results, the manure must be spread on the soil evenly. The theory is that a small particle of manure carries different kinds of bacteria that are beneficial to the soil. Even distribution will scatter these different forms of bacteria and distribute them to every square foot of soil surface. Growing plants protect these minute forms of life and encourage their multiplication in the soil and the bacteria break down the particles of manure for soil enrichment.

Manure left in piles will soon lose its strength. The old-fashioned idea of piling manure to rot it has passed on its way. Very few farmers pile manure nowadays, and it is noticeable that manure pits are very scarce and the few that are in use are much shallower than those formerly used. In fact, the new ones are nothing but depressions to collect liquid manure from stable drains. When the value of stable absorbents and their proper use is well understood, the manure pit will become obsolete and the expression "well-rotted manure" will disappear from agricultural literature.

The cow barn shown in the illustrations is a sensible building so designed that the farmer may exercise his judgment in the arrangement of one-third of the stable, fitting it closely to his needs. Every provision may be installed for the economic handling of the stock and because of the efficient lighting and ventilation of the stable, this barn is excellent for its particular purpose. When a farmer starts in the dairy business, he is not always sure whether he will like it or not, but when he discovers that it pays there is no further question. The farmer is lucky who starts a real dairy business in a carefully designed and well constructed dairy barn, whether it be little or big. A good dairy stable is just as necessary to dairy farmers as a store is to a merchant.

The barn illustrated is only 60 by 30 feet in size, but it embodies all the essential features of a good dairy stable without any of the fancy frills that run into unnecessary expense. In the dairy stable end of the building there are a pair of foul air ventilating flues to carry off the stable air from the alleyways behind the stalls. The stock shed end of the barn is supposed to ventilate through the big door and windows.

This stock enclosure was designed to suit farmers who raise a few head of purebred cattle each year and want a safe, comfortable place to keep them during the winter. Any special arrangement of this part of the building is easily made.

One silo is sufficient for a barn of this size. In the plans, provision is made for an overhead track to extend from the silo through the feed alley to the cattle shed. Other overhead tracks are intended for manure carriers and these may run through into the cattle shed in the same way. The location of these tracks will be determined by the manner in which the farmer takes care of shed manure.

There is only one way to handle cow stable manure, and that is to get it entirely away from the premises as quickly as possible. In a stable of this kind it would be much better to remove the shed manure at the same time because this shed is intimately connected with the cow stable and the odor from a carelessly kept cattle shed would be objectionable. Dairy men cannot be too particular. The nature of the business demands the strictest cleanliness.

THE NOSE AN' IT'S RELATION T' CHARACTER

As th' weddin' day draws nigh th' prospective bride should take a few moments each day from her sewin' an' devote 'em t' sober reflection. Th' step she is plannin' t' take is th' real, big headliner act o' her life. Let her consider it well. Let her study th' teachin's o' th' world's greatest physiognomists, whose theories are interwoven with th' findin's o' ever' known science, before she leaves th' ole home, or resigns her downtown job. Let her take up nose readin' durin' th' few golden weeks that remain.

I wonder how many girls o' t'day who are filled with rose-tinted visions o' a happy married life know that th' septum o' th' nose is th' partition between th' nostrils? I wonder how many girls o' t'day who are countin' th' minutes till th' month o' roses know that the'r whole future happiness depends on th' thickness o' her fiance's septum an' its inclination t' droop or not to droop? If his septum is thin an' not disposed t' droop let her take warnin' ere it is too late, fer it is a never failin' sign of a retired liver.

Th' nose is nature's most humble organ next t' th' big toe. Th' whole human character is boldly written thereon, so that even she who runs may read. Ther's no reason fer anybuddy but a blind girl gittin' stung. Whether th' nose is pale, red or veined, it is now regarded as th' only reliable index o' character.

Idealty, veneration, constructiveness, cautiousness, mental imitation, sublimity an' especially acquisitiveness (a disposition t' acquire property, money, etc.), are all factors in th' success o' life which may be easily read in th' nose, an' which should be carefully considered by ever' girl before she signs away her happiness.

Th' eyes, long regarded as th' windows o' th' soul an' th' true index o' character, are worthless without a gilt-edged nose. A fullness o' th' upper an' soft part o' th' cheek o'er th' malar bone is another overworked sign that counts fer nothin' when appearin' in conjunction with a thin septum. A square nose indicates a well developed conscience, which is all well an' good if th' accompanyin' septum is of standard gauge. Th' septum is th' thing whether th' nose is concave or convex.

Fullness an' breadth o' th' nose above th' nostrils indicate a capacity fer gettin' th' goods—a quality rarely considered durin' th' first week o' married life, but later regarded as bein' of inestimable value in th' pursuit o' happiness. Such a quality, too, avails but little, however, if th' septum is lackin' in th' peculiarities o' th' genuine. Even an ample septum will not save a pug nose, which indicates an early divorce on th' ground o' inhuman treatment.

O' course, it's pretty hard t' associate any sentiment with th' nose, no matter how close we occasionally git t' it, but jest th' same if th' prospective bride, while holdin' hands, 'll jest make a careful analysis of her fiance's nose while ther is yet time it may be th' means o' savin' her th' embarrassment o' th' pale, hungry expression that is t' be found all too often on th' faces o' those who have sought happiness at th' altar o' love.

Th' Nose Is Nature's Most Humble Organ Next t' th' Big Toe. Th' Whole Human Character Is Boldly Written Thereon So That Even She Who Runs May Read. Ther's No Reasons fer Anybuddy but a Blind Girl Gittin' Stung.

ANCIENT AND MODERN PHOTOGRAPHY

What ever become o' th' ole time tall, cuffless photographer that wore a flowin' tie an' smelled like collodion an' called his abattoir a "art studio"? I wonder where he went when he died, fer ther must have been some special arrangements made ahead fer him? Who kin fergit how he used t' pose us in front o' a screen showing a castle with a rustic bridge leadin' up t' it an' a couple o' swans?

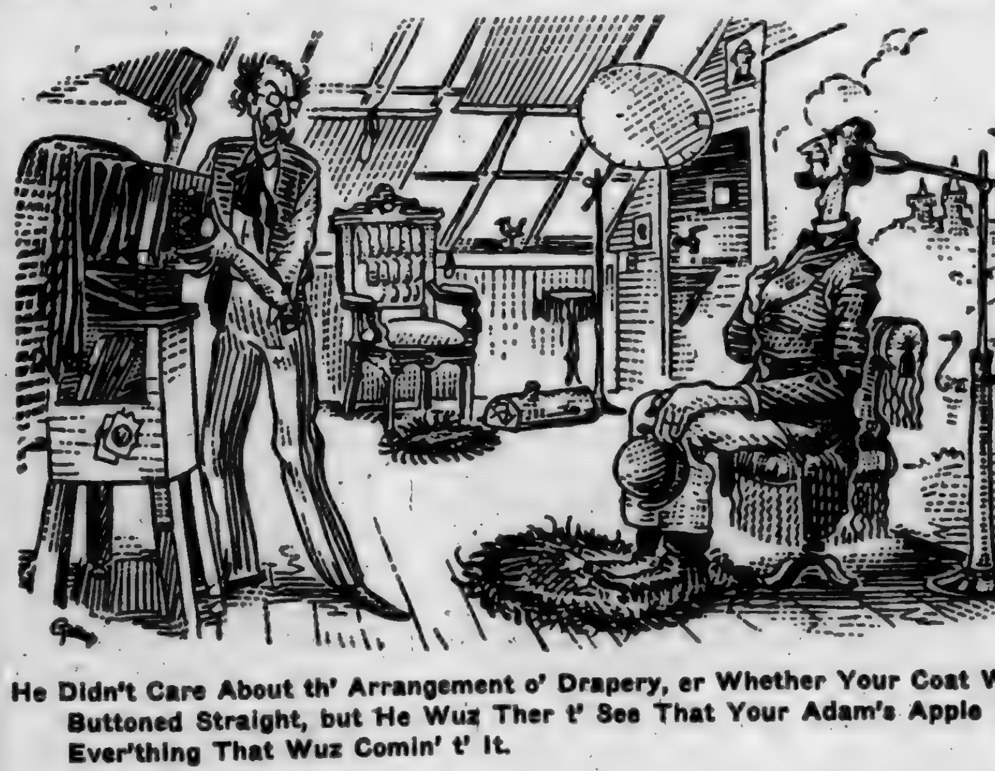
"Now, then set perfectly still an' look about here. Raise your chin a little more. Higher, higher. That's fine. Now, turn th' head a little slantin' like. That's it, that's it. Now, that's fine. Ah, that'll do." Then he'd turn out a photograph lookin' like you had a stiff neck augmented by a little dash o' spinal trouble—like you had just murdered a whole family with an ax an' wuz facin' th' judge without a pang o' remorse.

Th' early photographer had a sort o' a pritch that had been handed down from th' celebrated Spanish inquisition days which he used as a prop fer your head. When applied t' th' back o' th' neck it produced an expression like you wuz puttin' on a collar.

"Oh, I see, you wish t' be taken t'gether. That'll be fine. Now, then jist you please take this seat. That's it. Put th' feet closely t'gether. Now th' hands on th' knees. That's fine. Now throw th' chin up. Up a little more. That's fine. Now, you stand by th' left. Perfectly erect with feet t'gether carelessly. Let th' left hand hang limp. That's fine. Now place th' right hand on his shoulder showin' th' ring finger—oh, I see. Th' ring is on th' left hand. We'll have t' change sides. That's fine. Now throw th' chin well back—a little tiny bit more. That's fine. Now, all feet close t'gether an' steady. That'll do." Then Friday you got th' proofs an' you an' your wife looked like Lewis an' Clark takin' the'r first view o' Mt. Tacoma after a ten days' march on empty stomachs.

Th' ole time photographer allus posed you in such a way as t' feature your Adam's apple. He didn't care about th' arrangement o' drapery, er whether your coat wuz buttoned straight, but he wuz ther t' see that your Adam's apple got ever'thing that wuz comin' t' it. If you had a hairlip er a wend in th' neck he allus made 'em th' principal points o' interest in your photo. If you had a bulgin' forehead he'd powder th' high lights an' pull in your chin. If you had a retreatin' chin he'd pry it out an' make an interior o' your nostrils. If you looked like a turnip he'd insist on a front view, an' if you looked like a hatchet he'd prescribe a side view. If you wanted t' stand up an' show your feet an' watch chain he'd bring forth a little column-shaped pedestal t' stand by an' you looked like you wuz waitin' fer somebuddy t' shoot a apple off your head.

T'day if you want t' look like Theda Bara or Douglas Fairbanks an "artist" 'll fix it fer you. If you look like a sewin' machine agent an' feel like you would like t' look like a great author t'day's photographer 'll show you how t' git th' desired expression by restin' th' left cheek in your hand an' lookin' anxiously int' th' future.



He Didn't Care About th' Arrangement o' Drapery, er Whether Your Coat Wuz Buttoned Straight, but He Wuz Ther t' See That Your Adam's Apple Got Ever'thing That Wuz Comin' t' It.

Deceptive but Effective.

Tobias Knowal peeped through the window of his office, then tiptoeing to his desk, put a flannel bandage around his neck, put his arm in a sling, ran his hands through his hair, and limped to the door.

"Mr. Knowal?" inquired the caller.

"Yes," groaned Knowal. "What can I do for you?"

"You appear to be far from well," said the caller.

"Appear to be?" exclaimed Knowal. "Do you think I'm doing this for fun? But what can I do for you?"

"Oh—er—I won't trouble you now," said the caller, hurriedly. "Any time will do." And he departed.

It's some trouble, murmured Knowal, pulling off his bandages. "But it's really the quickest way to get rid of these life insurance agents. That one won't trouble me again, anyhow!"

"Can't Cut Off My Leg," Says Railroad Engineer

"I am a railroad engineer; about 20 years ago my leg was seriously injured in an accident out West. Upon my refusing to allow the doctor to amputate it I was told it would be impossible to heal the wound. I have tried all kinds of salves and had many doctors in the past 20 years, but to no avail. Finally I resolved to use PETERSON'S OINTMENT on my leg. You cannot imagine my astonishment when I found it was doing what over 100 things had failed to do. My leg is now completely cured."—Gus Hauft, 799 Myrtle Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"It makes me feel proud to be able to produce an ointment like that," says Peterson. "Not only do I guarantee Peterson's Ointment for old sores and wounds, but for Eczema, Salt Rheum, Ulcers, Itching Skin and Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles, and I put up a big box for 25 cents, a price all can afford to pay and money back from your druggist if not satisfied." POULTRY DEALERS TO BE LICENSED

Every Person Making Business of Purchasing Poultry in DeKalb County Must Secure Permit.

Purchaser Must Also Keep a List of Persons Poultry is Purchased of, so That Thieves May Easily be Apprehended.

Application and license blanks for the issuing of permits to poultry dealers in DeKalb county reached the office of County Clerk W. W. Mountz in the court house Friday. Under a new law passed by the 1917 legislature each poultry dealer in the county must take out a license at the county clerk's office.

The law makes it unlawful for any person or firm to engage in the business of purchasing poultry without first having obtained a license at the cost of $1 per year.

The purpose of this act passed by the last Indiana legislature is to help in the detection of poultry thieves.

The law further requires that a complete record of all purchases be kept and that it is to be a record open to the public inspection. The information required in such record is the date of purchase, from whom purchased, address, kind of fowls, and the weight. Packers and shippers will also be compelled to keep a record the same as the dealer who goes through the country buying up the poultry.

Failure to comply with this law will be punishable with a fine of not less than $5 or more than $50 with the license being revoked for a period of one year.

BLUFFTON YOUNG MAN WRITES OF EXCITING TRIP.

Was Aboard S. S. Mongolia Recently When it was Attacked by a Submarine—All on Board Told to Get Life Belts.

Writing from England where his unit enjoyed a brief rest after landing on British soil, Herman Ashbaucher, son of Mrs. Ida Ashbaucher, of Bluffton, and a member of the Base Hospital Unit, No. 12, which was organized at Northwestern university, Chicago, tells of the attack on the steamship Mongolia by two German submarines and the subsequent sinking of one of the U-boats by the naval gunners on the liner. Concerning the encounter between the liner and the submarine, he says:

"Friday, June 1, was a day which shall remain very vividly in my mind for many moons to come. It was 12:30 p. m. and I had just stepped out on our deck from the dining room when I heard the lieutenant of the gun crews call to the gunners and order the captain of the aft gun to fire at random.

"He had no sooner uttered the words than they fired and the ship's fog horn gave the signal for everyone to rush inside and get on their life belts. I sure did go some. Everybody, of course, wanted to see the submarine, so we all went on deck. About thirty yards away we saw the torpedo speeding toward us. Our captain had the boat swung around and, thank Heaven, it missed us about forty yards.

"Our gun fired two more shots at our unseen foe and we were told the danger was all over. About forty minutes had elapsed since the first shot. Then somebody yelled, "There it is,' and sure enough there was a periscope sticking up out of the water and going to beat the band and trying to get another shot at us. We all watched and waited for something to hit us but it didn't and our gun was fired again. This time when our shell struck the water, a big cloud of smoke went up and there was another explosion and they (the gunners) said that they had hit the submarine.

"Never have I had such an experience before and the Lord knows I don't want another. There is no question in our minds but that two U-boats were after us and had just been waiting for us to come along. There was no sleep on board the Mongolia that night, and Saturday morning, when we landed at one of the big English harbors, I never heaved so big a sigh of relief in my life."

Mr. Ashbaucher also stated that after the first gun was fired in the battle with the submarine a British destroyer appeared in the distance and arrived on the scene after the submarine had been sunk. The destroyer convoyed the Mongolia to port.

2 New Drains Petitioned

Both are Short Ones, Affecting Only a Few Land Owners—One in Newville Township and the Other in Butler Township.

During the week two petitions for the establishment of drains have been filed with the county auditor, Stanley P. Nelson, to come before the board of commissioners at their next meeting.

The first petition is that of Nancy A. Davis of Newville township, in which she states that she desires a drain established and that it cannot be accomplished in the best and cheapest manner without affecting the lands of others.

The route of the proposed drain is as follows: Commencing about twenty feet north and about four feet east of the north quarter post in section eight in township thirty-three, north of range fifteen east in DeKalb county, Indiana, and running thence in a southernly, westerly and southwesterly direction and ending about four hundred feet south and about twenty feet west of the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of section seventeen in township 33, north of range 15 east in DeKalb county.

A lateral to the main line of drainage is also asked, commencing on the line between the lands owned by Nancy A. Davis and Neff Culler and running thence in a southernly direction and ending at station 12 plus 91 in the main line of the Nancy A. Davis drain.

In the laying of this drain fifteen different tracts of land will shed water in the channel, according to the petition. Alto A. Blood and William Wineland are petitioners asking for the proposed drain to be located and constructed. Charles S. Smith is the petitioners' attorney.

P. B. Helbert, of Butler township, is the second petitioner, with Charles S. Smith, as the attorney. The tile drain as petitioned will have the following course to follow: Commencing about 10 rods north and about 10 rods west of the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the south-east quarter of section 25, in township 33, north of range 12, east, running thence in a southerly, westerly, northwesterly northerly, and northwesterly direction and ending in the main line of the F. A. Squires drain at about the center of the north one-half of the south-east quarter of section 26 in township 33, north of range 12 east in DeKalb county, on land owned by Marion Rickey.

The petition calls for the necessary laterals to be laid. The drain will effect but eight land owners as shown in the petition.

Big Prices For Wool

DeKalb county farmers have no reason for complaint when they come to sell their wool crop this year. Auburn dealers are now paying on an average of about twice as much per pound as they did last year.

The price being paid is around 68 and 69 cents per pound. At this same time last year wool was selling for about 36 cents per pound.

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

NOT just to have one, not merely for the purpose of saying that she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and undivided attention to any such accounts.

NEWVILLE

OBITUARY

JOHN WYATT was born in Ashland county, Ohio, on Nov. 28, 1831; and departed this life on July 4, 1917, aged 85 years, 7 months and 6 days.

In 1841, Mr. Wyatt came to DeKalb county, where he resided, excepting three years spent in Missouri, until his death. In 1862, he was married to Ellen Maxwell.

Deceased was baptized in 1882 and united with the Church of Christ at Newville. In his younger days, he took great interest in all church activities; and as the shadows lengthened, he looked hopefully for the calling of his Master. He possessed a gentle and sympathetic nature, ever appreciative of and responsive to the courtesies which brighten the pathway of life.

After his companion's demise, Mr. Wyatt took his father and sister into his home, for both of whom he kindly cared during their declining years. After their departure, a niece, Mrs. Stella McNabb, moved to his home, where she lovingly administered to his wants until the time of his death.

Deceased leaves one brother and a hoast of friends to mourn his departure.

CARD OF THANKS

To the many friends who assisted during the sickness and death of our uncle, we extend our sincere thanks.

Mr. and Mrs. W. D. McNABB.

HUNTERS MUST OBSERVE CHANGE IN SQUIRREL LAW

The squirrel law has been changed this year making the time of legal hunting to begin August 1, instead of July 1, as heretofore. Ignorance of this change in the law will not excuse anyone. While the license gives the date of July 1, this is due to the fact that they are printed in such large quantities that the change has not been made.

TREES SHOULD BE SPRAYED WELL IN JULY

American Forestry Association Says That Large Number of Insects Work on Plant Life During This Period.

July is the one month when most of one's attention should be given to trees by spraying for insects and watering and cultivating says a bulletin from the American Forestry association, of Washington D. C.

Spray fruit trees with Bordo-lead.

Spray elms for elm leaf bottle with arsenate of lead, one pound to ten gallons of water.

Spray tussock moth and other leaf-eating insects with arsenate of lead, one pound to ten gallons of water.

Examine the under side of beech trees, and if wooly aphis is present, spray with whale oil soap, one pound to ten gallons of water.

Examine evergreens, especially prostrate junipers, box, yew, etc., for red, spider, and if necessary spray with whale oil soap, one pound to ten gallons of water.

Examine sycamore trees for sycamore blight which produces a white, wooly mass on the under side of the leaves and causes them to curl and wilt. If this disease is present, spray with Bordeaux mixture, one pound to eight gallons of water.

Examine the peach trees for leaf curl, and watch all the other trees for some insect infestation, because this is a month when the insects most commonly appear. If you discover something new to you, write to the American Forestry association in Washington.

Trim shrubs after flowering. Do not destroy the natural, drooping effects of the shrubs, but confine yourself principally to dead and old wood and superfluous branches.

COMPANY K WILL MOBOLIZE AT ANNISTON, ALABAMA

Unless future plans of the war department change, the Indiana and Kentucky national guards will mobolize August 5 at Anniston, Ala., according to a notice received by Major A. L. Moudy of Company K, I. N. G. Anniston is a city of 20,000 in the northeastern part of Alabama, and is located on the Louisville & Nashville railroad.

Upon notice of mobolization the guards will move at once to Anniston. They will not remain in Indiana long enough to receive the typhoid innoculation, but will leave as soon as transportation facilities can be made.

The decision of the war department to send the guard south as soon as mobolized was reached as a result of the urging of the war college that all possible speed be made in the training of the national guard troops in order that they may be transported abroad at an early date.

NO DIVORCES FOR WOMEN WHO DRINK, SAYS JUDGE

That women who marry men who drink intoxicants, hoping to reform them, and women who themselves are accustomed to indulge in liquor in their homes, need not apply to him for divorces, Judge W. A. Thompson, of the Marion circuit court, made plain in dismissing the complaint of one woman under those circumstances, this week.

"Women who know their prospective husbands are drinking men take a great chance in marrying them, whatever may be their purpose in such marriages," said the court at the conclusion of the long-drawn divorce trial. "The woman has even less cause for complaint about her husband's drunkenness or other faults if it be shown that she, too, was accustomed to take a social glass with him."

WOMEN DENIED RIGHT TO VOTE

Decision of Judge W. W. Thornton Nullifies Act of Legislature.

TO APPEAL TO HIGHER COURT

After Judge Thornton Had Stopped Registration of Women, He Reconsidered and Ordered It to Continue.

Indianapolis.—Judge W. W. Thornton of the Marion superior court holds that the act of the 1917 legislature providing for the holding of a constitutional convention is valid. He also held that the attempt of the 1917 legislature to enfranchise the women to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention and to vote upon the submission of a constitution to the people is invalid. The second decision was based on that part of the woman suffrage law proper.

The decision was rendered in the suit instituted by Henry W. Bennett of Indianapolis, who asked for an order permanently enjoining Secretary of State Ed Jackson, the clerks of the circuit courts of the 92 counties and other officials, from proceeding with the arrangements for the election of delegates September 18.

The ruling on the limited suffrage law was confined to the question of the right of the women to participate in the election of delegates and to vote on the submission of a new constitution.

Charles Martindale of counsel for the complaint, said that an appeal will be filed with the supreme court immediately. The attorneys for the state will file an appeal from the decision on the suffrage law.

Registration Stopped.

Registration of women throughout the state as voters in the election of delegates to the constitutional convention was stopped with the entering of judgment in superior court where Judge W. W. Thornton declared unconstitutional that part of the woman suffrage law which provides that women may exercise the right of franchise in the election of delegates to the constitution convention.

The decision affects only the special registration for the constitutional convention election.

The registration period for the constitutional convention election was from June 22 to August 23. A decision is expected from the supreme court in the case decided in the lower court in time to enable women to register if the decision of the lower court is reversed with regard to the suffrage question.

Ele Stansbury, attorney general, gave out a statement, in which he said the decision in no way affected the special registration, and that women might continue to register as part of the electorate to take part in the proposed election of delegates to the convention.

Judge Thornton's Opinion.

Judge Thornton made it clear later that his decision, in his opinion, does affect the registration of women, insofar as the constitutional convention is concerned. His explanation of the decision was terse and to the point.

Judge Reconsiders.

To clear up misunderstandings, Judge W. W. Thornton of the superior court suggested that all county clerks continue to register women for the constitutional convention delegate election. Judge Thornton said that he had been misquoted. While he held that women do not have the right to vote, he suggests that a liberal construction be placed on the injunction issued by him, and that women be allowed to register, so that if the supreme court reverses his decision the women will be prepared to vote. Suffrage leaders here declared women in every part of the state should insist that they be allowed to register. If they do not register, and the supreme court holds they are entitled to vote for delegates, they will be unable to do so. The state supreme court set July 10 as the date for hearing oral arguments on the appeal from Judge Thornton's decision on the suffrage law.

Mrs. Richard Edwards, president of the Woman's Franchise league of Indiana, proposes that every league in the state open headquarters, where notaries will register them. She and other officers of the league say they are delighted with the victory won by the attorneys in proving the constitutionality of the constitutional convention law. A new state constitution, they said, was the first thing toward which their efforts were directed, and, now that is assured, turned to write full enfranchisement for women in the new constitution.

Forestry Work Outlined.

The new state board of forestry met this afternoon at the state house to organize and map out the first work in the preservation and the conservation of the woods of Indiana. Richard Lieber, secretary of the board, formally announced the appointment of C. C. Deam of Bluffton, formerly state forester under a former administration, as the new state forester. Mr. Lieber discussed the aims of the newly reorganized board as follows: "The thought of conservation in this country is utterly new.

Grants Temporary Increase.

The Indiana public service commission has made its first decision relative to a petition from an electric utility company for increased rates to its customers because of the heavy increase in cost of operation, and particularly the high cost of coal. The decision came in the case of the Muncie Electric Company of Muncie, which had petitioned for authority to add a special charge of fifteen-hundredths of a mill to the cost of each kilowatt of energy supplied for every 5-cent increase in the cost of coal above $1.90 a ton f. o. b. Muncie. The commission's order did not grant the prayer of the petition, although it granted temporary relief to the company.

Small User Not Affected.

The order permitted the company to make a temporary surcharge, above its fixed rates of 10 per cent on bills to large power consumers. The increase will not affect any small consumer and will not affect any consumer of electricity for lighting purposes. Small power consumers also are exempt from the surcharge, as the only schedules affected are those providing rates for the large power consumers.

The commission held two hearings on the Muncie petition and then some commissioners made a trip to Muncie to ascertain whether there was opposition to the proposed increase. At no point, according to E. I. Lewis, chairman of the commission, was opposition to the petition apparent.

Not All That Was Asked.

"In this case the public service commission does not propose to free this company from all the burdens of the present price situation," one commissioner said. "We did not give the company as much relief as was asked, but we did give it a safe operating revenue. Thus the company does not escape participation in the present extraordinary costs, brought on by the war and war conditions. The decision is merely temporary, extending to January 1, 1918, or until modified by the commission, or revoked."

A commissioner declared that if the commission's order did not give the company all the relief prayed for, certain payments to the American Gas & Electric company—the parent company—might be curtailed until such time as the present costs of operation decrease.

Artillery Arrives at Fort.

The first field artillery units to arrive at Fort Harrison rolled in from Camp Perry, O., just before daybreak. The special trains brought 600 officers and enlisted men in the battalion of Ohio field artillery. Artillery units arrived in the afternoon. The National Guard organizations will train with the men of the officers' reserve corps seeking commission in the artillery branch of the army.

Much Bread Wasted.

Will Hayes, chairman of the state council of defense, met with representatives of Indiana bakers to discuss means of effectively preventing the return of unsold bread by retailers. Dr. H. E. Bernard, state pure food and drug commissioner, has issued an order prohibiting bakers from accepting the return of "stale" bread, bread that is a day old, but the bakers are having difficulty in enforcing the rule. Thousands of loaves of bread are wasted in these returns.

Committee for Lawyers.

The Indianapolis Bar association has authorized the appointment of a military committee to look after affairs connected with the participation of lawyers in the war preparations. The committee will be announced soon. Many of the men now in training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison are lawyers and members of the profession are taking a prominent part in all the patriotic activities.

Compel Coal Regulation.

The railroads and the Indiana public service commission will allow no excuse for coal operators failing to furnish coal at the price fixed by government agencies. After weeks of close co-operation, the railroads have shown that with the aid of state inspectors they can furnish better than 90 per cent of the cars asked for at the mines. Prompt transit also is assured by drastic shipping regulations. The price of $3.50 a ton at the mine for bituminous coal in Indiana is regarded by many officials here as too high. Testimony recently adduced before the public service commission showed the average cost of producing a ton of coal was $1.46.

For Chief Engineer.

The state highway commission met at the statehouse and took up the consideration of names of men suggested for the post of chief engineer for the commission. Men considered were: W. S. Moore, Grand Rapids, Mich.; H. W. Klausmann, Indianapolis; A. E. Loder, first chief assistant engineer in the highway department at Washington; H. K. Bishop, engineer for the federal district including Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland and North Carolina and others.

Children of School Age.

The children of school age in Indiana increased in number this school year over last by 300, according to the official school enumeration of the state, made public by Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction. The total number of children, between the ages of six and twenty-one years, reported to the state superintendent this year from the counties was 774,642, while the total for the preceding school year was 774,342. The figures will be used eventually as basis of distributing school funds.

RULES OF ARMY DRAFT ISSUED

Regulations to Govern Work of Exemption Boards Made Public.

EACH CASE ON ITS MERITS

"Be Fearless and Impartial," Is Final Admonition of President Wilson—No Class Exemptions Will Be Permitted.

MEN WHO ARE EXEMPT

Officers of United States, states, territories and District of Columbia.

Ministers of religion and students of divinity.

Persons in military or naval service of United States.

Subjects of Germany and all aliens who have not taken out first papers.

County or municipal officers.

Customhouse clerks and workmen in arsenals and navy yards.

Pilots, merchant marine sailors.

Married men with dependent wives or children.

Sons of dependent widows, sons of dependent, aged or infirm parents, or brothers of dependent orphans under sixteen years of age.

Men morally deficient.

Members of recognized religious sect existing prior to May 18, 1917, whose creed forbids participation in war.

Washington.—The drafted armies of the United States will be drawn with "the least inequality and personal hardship."

President Wilson, in issuing regulations for the working of the draft, urged upon every member of every draft board "impartial and fearless performance of the delicate and difficult duties intrusted," in order that "our armies at the front may be composed of men free from sense of injustice in their mode of selection."

To Fix Date for Board Meetings.

In the near future a date will be set by Brig. Gen. Crowder, provost marshal-general, for the meeting and organization of the boards. At the same time it is expected that the selection regulations will be promulgated so that the process may be put under way without delay. The present intention is to call the men selected to the colors about September 1.

All Forces on Equal Footing.

President Wilson's statement follows:

"The regulations which I am today causing to be promulgated, pursuant to the direction of the selective service law, cover the remaining steps of the plan for calling into the service of the United States qualified men from those who have registered; those selected as the result of this process to constitute, with the regular army, the National guard and the navy, the fighting forces of the nation, all of which forces are under the terms of the law placed in a position of equal right, dignity and responsibility with the members of all other military forces.

"The regulations have been drawn with a view to the needs and circumstances of the whole country and provide a system which it is expected will work with the least inequality and personal hardship. Any system of selecting men of military service, whether voluntary or involuntary in its operation, necessarily selects some men to bear the burden of danger and sacrifice for the whole nation. The system here provided places all men of military age upon an even plane, and then, by a selection which neither favors the one nor penalizes the other, calls upon the requisite number for service.

Urges Boards to Act Impartially.

"The successful operation of this law and of these regulations depends necessarily upon the loyalty, patriotism and justice of the members of the boards to whom its operation is committed, and I admonish every member of every local board and of every district board of review that their duty to their country requires an impartial and fearless performance of the delicate and difficult duties intrusted to them. They should remember as to each individual case presented to them that they are called upon to adjudicate the most sacred rights of the individual and to preserve untarnished the honor of the nation.

"Our armies at the front will be strengthened and sustained if they be composed of men free from any sense of injustice in the mode of selection, and they will be inspired to loftier efforts in behalf of a country in which the citizens called upon to perform high public functions perform them with justice, fearlessness and impartiality."

Methods of Making the Draft.

Upon organizing the local boards will take over from the registration boards all registration cards, which they will number serially and list for posting to public view. Then, after having been advised of the method by which the order of liability for service shall be determined and of the quota to be drawn from its territory (minus credits for enlistments in the National Guard or regular army), each board will prepare a list of persons designated for service in the order of their liability, post the list, give it to the press, and within three days send notice to each designated person by mail.

As the men so notified appear the boards first will make a physical examination in accordance with special regulations to be provided, bearing in mind that all persons accepted by them will be re-examined by army surgeons. If the physical examination is passed successfully, then comes the question of exemption.

Those Entitled to Exemption.

Persons who must be exempted or discharged by the local board include:

Officers of the United States, of the states, territories and the District of Columbia; ministers of religion, students of divinity, persons in the military or naval service of the United States, subjects of Germany, all other aliens who have not taken out first papers, county or municipal officers, customhouse clerks, workmen in federal armories, arsenals and navy yards, persons in the federal service designated by the president for exemption, pilots, merchant marine sailors, those with a status with respect to dependents which renders their exclusion desirable (a married man with dependent wife or child, son of a dependent widow, son of dependent, aged or infirm parent, or brother of dependent orphan child under sixteen years of age), those found morally deficient, and any member of any well-recognized religious sect existing May 18, 1917, whose creed forbids participation in war and whose religious convictions accord with the creed.

Man or Wife May Make Claim.

Claims for exemption because of dependents may be made by the man himself, his wife or other dependents, or by a third party who has personally investigated the case. A claim made by the husband must be accompanied by supporting affidavits signed by the wife and by the head of a family residing in the same territory. A claim by the wife or a third party must be accompanied by two supporting affidavits signed by heads of families. Similar rules govern claims on the grounds of other dependents when the dependents or third parties being authorized to file claims with supporting affidavits. In each case the board must be satisfied before it grants exemption or discharge that the dependent or dependents actually are supported mainly by the fruits of the man's mental or physical labor.

Local boards are required, subject to appeal, to pass upon claims for exemption or discharge within three days after the filing of affidavits.

Must Decide in Five Days.

District boards must decide appeal cases within five days after the closing of proofs and their decisions are final. If the ruling of a local board is affirmed the person in question stands finally accepted for military service.

In passing on claims for exemption on the ground of employment in necessary industrial and agricultural occupations the district boards must be convinced that the particular enterprise affording such employment actually is necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment of national interest during the emergency.

"The evidence must also establish," the regulations say, "even if the particular industrial enterprise or particular agricultural enterprise is found necessary for one of the above purposes, that the continuance of such person therein is necessary to the maintenance thereof and that he cannot be replaced by another person without direct, substantial material loss and detriment to the adequate and effective operation of the particular industrial enterprise or agricultural enterprise in which he is engaged."

May Designate Certain Industries.

Later the president may from time to time designate certain industries or classes of industries that are necessary and the district boards will be so notified. It will be the duty of each board, however, to ascertain the available labor supply for such industries outside the men called for military service and to take the result into consideration in determining such things.

"If, in the opinion of the district board," this section of the regulations concludes, "the direct, substantial, material loss to any such industrial or agricultural enterprise outweighs the loss that would result from failure to obtain the military service of any such person, a certificate of discharge may be issued to him X X X."

Certificates of exemption will not necessarily be permanent. They may be revoked with changing conditions, or may be granted only for prescribed periods.

Wasted Time.

We don't miss the little here and the little there. Yet in a year the amount of time wasted is enormous. Learning that he was always called to dinner several minutes before the dinner was really ready to eat a certain man started and wrote a book in the spare minutes between the call and the actual dinner time. It only shows how we waste time. If you want to be among earth's benefactors you will begin now to conserve your time and use it to profit.—Exchange.

Earth Grows Slowly Now.

In the early days of its history the earth grew rapidly by the addition of meteoric matter. It is still growing in the same manner, scientists say, though scarcely to an appreciable extent, for the mass of meteoric matter added yearly is reckoned to be only 20,000 tons. In the course of ages the larger planets have swept up practically all the fragments of the original disruption, and the only available source of supply of meteoric matter seems to be brought by comets.

KAZAN

The Story of a Dog That Turned Wolf

By
James Oliver Curwood

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

—18—

Silently, swiftly—the wolf now in every movement, Kazan came to his feet. He forgot the chain that held him. Ten feet away stood the enemy he hated above all others he had ever known. Every ounce of strength in his splendid body gathered itself for the spring. And then he leaped. This time the chain did not pull him back, almost neckbroken. Age and the elements had weakened the leather collar he had worn since the days of his slavery in the traces, and it gave way with a snap. Sandy turned, and in a second leap Kazan's fangs sank into the flesh of his arm.

With a startled cry the man fell, and as they rolled over on the ground the big Dane's deep voice rolled out in thunderous alarm as he tugged at his leash. In the fall Kazan's hold was broken. In an instant he was on his feet, ready for another attack. And then the change came. He was free. The collar was gone from his neck. The forest, the stars, the whispering wind were all about him. Here were men, and off there was—Gray Wolf! His ears dropped, and he turned swiftly, and slipped like a shadow back into the glorious freedom of his world.

A hundred yards away something stopped him for an instant. It was not the big Dane's voice, but the sharp crack—crack—crack, of the little professor's automatic. And above that sound there rose the voice of Sandy McTrigger in a weird and terrible cry.

CHAPTER XIX.

An Empty World.

Mile after mile Kazan went on. For a time he was oppressed by the shivering note of death that had come to him in Sandy McTrigger's cry, and he slipped through the banskians like a shadow, his ears flattened, his tail trailing, his hindquarters betraying that curious slinking quality of the wolf and dog stealing away from danger. Then he came out upon a plain, and the stillness, the billion stars in the clear vault of the sky, and the keen air that carried with it a breath of the Arctic barrens made him alert and questioning. He faced the direction of the wind. Somewhere off there, far to the south and west, was Gray Wolf.

For the first time in many weeks he sat back on his haunches and gave the deep and vibrant call that echoed weirdly for miles about him. Back in the banskians the big Dane heard it, and whined. From over the still body of Sandy McTrigger the little professor looked up with a white tense face, and listened for a second cry. But instinct told Kazan that to that first call there would be no answer, and now he struck out swiftly, galloping mile after mile, as a dog follows the trail of its master home. He did not turn back to the lake, nor was his direction toward Red Gold City. As straight as he might have followed a road blazed by the hand of man he cut across the forty miles of plain and swamp and forest and rocky ridge that lay between him and the McFarlane. All that night he did not call again for Gray Wolf. With him reasoning was a process brought about by habit—by precedent—and as Gray Wolf had waited for him many times before he knew that she would be waiting for him now near the sand-bar.

By dawn he had reached the river, within three miles of the sand-bar. Scarcely was the sun up when he stood on the white strip of sand where he and Gray Wolf had come down to drink. Expectantly and confidently he looked about him for Gray Wolf, whining softly, and wagging his tail. He began to search for her scent, but rains had washed even her footprints from the clean sand. All that day he searched for her along the river and out on the plain. He went to where they had killed their last rabbit. He sniffed at the bushes where the poison baits had hung. Again and again he sat back on his haunches and sent out his mating cry to her. And slowly, as he did these things, nature was working in him that miracle of the wild which the Crees have named the "spirit call." As it had worked in Gray Wolf, so now it stirred the blood of Kazan.

With the going of the sun, and the sweeping about him of shadowy night, he turned more and more to the south and east. His whole world was made up of the trails over which he had hunted. Beyond those places he did not know that there was such a thing as existence. And in that world, small in his understanding of things, was Gray Wolf. He could not miss her. That world, in his comprehension of it, ran from the McFarlane in a narrow trail through the forests and over the plains to the little valley. If Gray Wolf was not here—she was there, and tirelessly he resumed his quest of her.

Not until the stars were fading out of the sky again, and gray day was giving place to night, did exhaustion and hunger stop him. He killed a rabbit, and for hours after he had feasted he lay close to his kill, and slept. Then he went on.

The fourth night he came to the little valley between the two ridges, and under the stars, more brilliant now in the chill clearness of the early autumn nights, he followed the creek down into their old swamp home. It was broad day when he reached what had once been his home and Gray Wolf's, and for many minutes Kazan stood silent and motionless sniffing the air. Until now his spirit had remained unbroken. Footsore, with thinned sides and gaunt head, he circled slowly through the swamp. All that day he searched. And his crest lay flat now, and there was a hunted look in the droop of his shoulders and in the shifting look of his eyes. Gray Wolf was gone.

Slowly nature was impinging that fact upon him. She had passed out of his world and out of his life, and he was filled with a loneliness and a grief so great that the forest seemed strange, and the stillness of the wild a thing that now oppressed and frightened him. Once more the dog in him was mastering the wolf. With Gray Wolf he had possessed the world of freedom. Without her, that world was so big and strange and empty that it appalled him.

Late in the afternoon he came upon a little pile of crushed clam shells on the shore of the stream. He sniffed at them—turned away—went back, and sniffed again. But the scent she had left behind was not strong enough to tell Kazan, and for a second time he turned away. That night he slunk under a log, and cried himself to sleep. Deep in the night he grieved in his uneasy slumber, like a child. And day after day, and night after night, Kazan remained a slinking creature of the big swamp, mourning for the one creature that had brought him out of chaos into light, who had filled his world for him, and who, in going from him, had taken from this world even the things that Gray Wolf had lost in her blindness.

CHAPTER XX.

The Call of Sun Rock.

In the golden glow of the autumn sun there came up the stream overlooked by the Sun Rock one day a man, a woman and a child in a canoe. Civilization had done for lovely Joan what it had done for many another wild flower transplanted from the depths of the wilderness. Her cheeks were thin. Her blue eyes had lost their luster. She coughed, and when she coughed the man looked at her with love and fear in his eyes. But now, slowly, the man had begun to see the transformation, and on the day their canoe pointed up the stream and into the wonderful valley that had been their home before the call of the distant city came to them, he noted the flush gathering once more in her cheeks, the fuller redness of her lips, and the gathering glow of happiness and content in her eyes. He laughed softly as he saw these things, and he blessed the forests. In the canoe she had leaned back, with her head almost against his shoulder, and he stopped paddling to draw her to him, and run his fingers through the soft golden masses of her hair.

"You are happy again, Joan," he laughed joyously. "The doctors were right. You are a part of the forests."

"Yes, I am happy," she whispered, and suddenly there came a little thrill into her voice, and she pointed to a white finger of sand running out into the stream. "Do you remember—years and years ago, it seems—that Kazan left us here? She was on the sand over there, calling to him. Do you remember?" There was a little tremble about her mouth, and she added, "I wonder—where they—have gone."

The cabin was as they had left it. Only the crimson bakneesh had grown up about it, and shrubs and tall grass had sprung up near its walls. Once more it took on life, and day by day the color came deeper into Joan's cheeks, and her voice was filled with its old wild sweetness of song. Joan's husband cleared the trails over his old trap-lines, and Joan and the little Joan transformed the cabin into home. One night the man returned to the cabin late, and when he came in there was a glow of excitement in Joan's blue eyes, and a tremble in her voice when she greeted him.

"Did you hear it?" she asked. "Did you hear—the call?"

He nodded, stroking her soft hair.

"I was a mile back in the creek swamp," he said. "I heard it!"

Joan's hands clutched his arms.

"It wasn't Kazan," she said. "I would recognize his voice. But it seemed to me it was like the other—the call that came that morning from the sand-bar, his mate?"

The man was thinking. Joan's fingers tightened. She was breathing a little quickly.

"Will you promise me this?" she asked, "Will you promise me that you will never hunt or trap for wolves?"

"I had thought of that," he replied. "I thought of it—after I heard the call. Yes, I will promise."

Joan's arms stole up about his neck.

"We loved Kazan," she whispered. "And you might kill him—or her."

Suddenly she stopped. Both listened. The door was a little ajar, and to them there came again the wailing mate-call of the wolf. Joan ran to the door. Her husband followed. Together they stood silent, and with tense breath Joan pointed over the starlit plain.

"Listen! Listen!" she commanded. "It's her cry, and it came from the Sun Rock!"

She ran out into the night, forgetting that the man was close behind her now, forgetting that little Joan was alone in her bed. And to them, from miles and miles across the plain, there came a wailing cry in answer—a cry that seemed a part of the wind, and that thrilled Joan until her breath broke in a strange sob.

Farther out on the plain she went and then stopped, with the golden glow of the autumn moon and the stars shimmering in her hair and eyes. It was many minutes before the cry came again, and then it was so near that Joan put her hands to her mouth, and her cry rang out over the plain as in the days of old.

"Kazan! Kazan! Kazan!"

At the top of the Sun Rock, Gray Wolf—gaunt and thinned by starvation—heard the woman's cry, and the call that was in her throat died away in a whine. And to the north a swiftly moving shadow stopped for a moment, and stood like a thing of rock under the starlight. It was Kazan. A strange fire leaped through his body. Every fiber of his brute understanding was afire with the knowledge that here was home. It was here, long ago, that he had lived, and loved, and fought—and all at once the dreams that had grown faded and indistinct in his memory came back to him as real living things. For, coming to him faintly over the plain, he heard Joan's voice!

In the starlight Joan stood, tense and white, when from out of the pale mists of the moon-glow he came to her, cringing on his belly, panting and wind-run, and with a strange whining note in his throat. And as Joan went to him, her arms reaching out, her lips sobbing his name over and over again, the man stood and looked down upon them with the wonder of a new and greater understanding in his face. He had no fear of the wolf-dog now. And as Joan's arms hugged Kazan's great shaggy head up to her he heard the whining gasping joy of the beast and the sobbing whispering voice of the girl, and with tensely gripped hands he faced the Sun Rock.

"Good heavens!" he breathed "I believe—it's so—"

As if in response to the thought in his mind, there came once more across the plain Gray Wolf's mate-seeking cry of grief and of loneliness. Swiftly as though struck by a lash Kazan was on his feet—oblivious of Joan's touch, of her voice, of the presence of the man. In another instant he was gone, and Joan flung herself against her husband's breast, and almost fiercely took his face between her two hands.

"Now do you believe?" she cried pantingly. "Now do you believe in the God of my world—the God I have lived with, the God that gives souls to the wild things, the God that—that has brought—us all—together—once more—home!"

His arms closed gently about her.

"I believe, my Joan," he whispered.

"And you understand—now—what it means, 'Thou shalt not kill?'"

"Except that it brings us life—yes, I understand," he replied.

Her warm, soft hands stroked his face. Her blue eyes, filled with the glory of the stars, looked up into his.

"Kazan and she—you and I—and the baby! Are you sorry—that we came back?" she asked.

So close he drew her against his breast that she did not hear the words he whispered in the soft warmth of her hair. And after that, for many hours, they sat in the starlight in front of the cabin door. But they did not hear again that lonely cry from the Sun Rock. Joan and her husband understood.

"He'll visit us again tomorrow," the man said at last. "Come, Joan, let us go to bed."

Together they entered the cabin.

And that night, side by side, Kazan and Gray Wolf hunted again in the moonlit plain.

THE END.

Submarine Diseases Studied.

Passed Assistant Surgeon R. W. McDowell has compiled some interesting facts in connection with disease incident to submarine duty. The most frequent ailments observed in the submarine service include effects of gasoline fumes inhaled, gastro-intestinal disturbances, ear troubles, infections of the respiratory tract, conjuctivitis, rheumatism, or myalgia, burns and injuries and nervous complaints. Of special interest is gasoline poisoning, the effect of inhaling gasoline fumes producing what is known as "gasoline jag." The D class of submarines have gasoline engines, and Surgeon McDowell has seen a large number of cases of poisoning due to the inhalation of the fumes of raw or burned gasoline.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 15.

HEZEKIAH, THE FAITHFUL KING.

LESSON TEXT—II Chron. 30:1.

GOLDEN TEXT—He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Heb. 11:6.

The reformation under Hezekiah is one of the bright and attractive spots in the latter history of the kingdom of Israel. It was a most thorough reformation and God set his seal upon it in many wonderful ways. Teachers ought to give their classes a comprehensive view of all that Hezekiah did, as recorded in II Chron., chapters 29-32.

I. Hezekiah's Proclamation. (vv. 1-6). The proper introduction to this lesson would be to return to chapter twenty-nine and note the restoration of the worship of Jehovah. How it began in one man's heart, Hezekiah; how he called the people to be clean (29:15), then called upon a cleansing of the house of God and its restoration (vv. 18, 19). How he called them to renewed sacrifice and worship (vv. 20, 21). The restoration of the sin-offering and of the burnt-offering, and the result of these offerings in the Levitical music and in the worship of the great congregation (29, 28). The sequel of song always follows and accompanies a true revival of religion. Having consecrated themselves unto the Lord, Hezekiah sends out this proclamation. The consecration of the people, as referred in chapter 29, was very complete. (See vv. 31-36.) Hezekiah was a man of deep discernment as well as of true piety. He saw the meaning of the sacrifice of redemption and put the passover forward as the very heart-center of the worship of Jehovah. (See vv. 1, 2.) Whoever understands the passover understands God's way of salvation. (See Exodus 12:13-23; I Cor. 5:7, 8; Rom. 3:25, 26; John 1:29.) Hezekiah did not confine his call to those of Israel alone, but extended it beyond its borders to those of Ephraim, thus manifesting the true missionary spirit. Hezekiah had ample Scriptural warrant keeping this passover out of its regular order (vv. 9-13). God is not a God of time or place. Wherever obedience is possible, whether it be a matter of time or not, God approves. Hezekiah, however, did not act upon his own initiative, but sought counsel. (See v. 2.) The man who is the most clearly led of God is the man who is most eager and anxious to know how God is leading other men and will listen most patiently to their counsel. The fact that the people had not "gathered themselves together at Jerusalem" for a long time, might have warranted a further delay. Not so with this enthusiastic young king. He was not bound by precedent, but was anxious to please God.

II. Hezekiah's Exhortation (vv. 7-13). Hezekiah began his exhortation by calling attention to the trespasses of their fathers (v. 7). At the same time he reminds them that if God gave them over to desolation because they themselves were stiff-necked (v. 8) and yielded not themselves unto the Lord to enter his sanctuary, which he had sanctified unto them, they would come under the fierceness of God's wrath, for they had turned from the Lord; they had "trespassed against the Lord God of their fathers." Because of that trespass God had "given them up to desolation." Literally he had made them "an astonishment." This astonishment and desolation was well known, "as ye see" (v. 7). Anyone with eyes open can see today the desolation of individuals, of families, communities and nations who trespass against God. For a generation we have had the deity of Christ and the inspiration of his Word called into question and that the individual man is the dictator of his own conscience and life, and it is because men have departed from their faithful allegiance to Jesus Christ and fail to obey his command, that we see the strife and desolation of today.

The first departure caused people to be "stiff-necked" and Jehovah is calling them to repentance, but they would not hear (see Ch. 36:13; Ex. 32:9; Rom. 10:21). In place of this "stiffneckness" of their hearts Hezekiah entreats them to turn again to the Lord and not to be stiff-necked as were their fathers (v. 8), that if they will turn again unto the Lord (v. 9) they will find compassion so that they shall again enter his gracious and merciful dealings. Having yielded themselves they were to enter into communion with him and "enter into his sanctuary, which he had sanctified forever."

They were also to serve him. Most blessed results were to follow for them and for their brethren and their children, but all of this bright prospect is conditioned upon repentance, surrender, communion and service, which is based upon the fact that Jehovah "is gracious and merciful" (Ex. 34:6, 7; Ps. 86:5; Jonah 4:2; Mark 7:18). Then, even as now, there were those who would not yield themselves to God's gracious invitation. As the priests passed through the country of Ephraim and Manasseh, even unto Zebulun, they were "laughed to scorn and some mocked" (v. 10). Alas that they did so, as we read their subsequent history! Yet even in these places there were some who "humbled themselves and came to Jerusalem," and in Judah the hand of God was to give them one heart to do the commandments of the king and of the princes (v. 12). If we are faithful ambassadors of Jehovah, he will bless our efforts, but we must expect to be laughed at and to be mocked. This, however, does not delay the wrath of Jehovah, the escaping from which there is remedy. The wise accepted and humbled themselves; the fools fell by the wayside.

"Farewell" and "Good-By."

Dr. Lyttleton in preaching his farewell sermon as head master at Eton said:

"'Farewell,' and 'good-by!' Think what they mean. 'Fare' means 'journey on,' so farewell reminds us that we are pilgrims and sojourners here on earth only for a time, a brief and broken time, yet a time meant to be one of progress and growth. But the word 'Good-by' speaks out a more positive note—'God be with you.'

"There is the secret of faring well. He who speaks the word utters a lofty prayer reverently, for he leaves it to be understood that, while for the moment he fosters a high hope, he forbears to look into the future, but commits it into the hands of him who alone can give us the warrant for looking forward without profound misgiving, when the powers of this world are being terribly shaken and the pride of human achievement is reeling at the spectacle of its own downfall. Let us nourish that holy assurance in our hearts when we say to each other, 'Good-by.'"

Blind and Destructive.

Envy is blind, and has no other quality but that of detracting from virtue. —Livy.

Our Soldier Boys

LETTER FROM GRAY WOODCOX

Ft. Myer, Va., July 1, 1917.

My Dear Grandma:—

I have been so very busy the past two days that I have scarcely had time to turn around. Yesterday was muster, and we have all the muster and pay rolls to make out in the office. We worked until 11 o'clock and all of today so far, but I am off for an hour or so now to attend church at the Y. M. C. A. We have only about half of the pay rolls done; and today about 200 slips with requisitions for clothing came in, and they all have to be copied and recopied. So, you see, there isn't much time to waste, and there are only two of us to do the work.

I have already received one promotion, now being a first class private. The first lieutenant told me today that he wanted me to notice everything that goes on in and about the office so that I become acquainted with the work, preparatory to continuing it indefinitely as a clerk. The officers are very kind to me. I have now moved my bunk into the tent where the first (or head) sergeant of the battery and mess sergeant sleep, together with one reservist that just came in yesterday. There are just we four in the tent, while the other tents have eight in them. It makes them pretty crowded, too.

I do not see why you nor grandpa haven't been receiving my mail. I have written to you every day for the past two weeks, and twice to him in the same time. Tell him I will write him again as soon as I possibly can and that I think of him often.

I hope everyone is well. Do not overwork this hot weather. Profit by your past experience and stay out of the hot son. Give each of the boys a kiss and a hug for me. Tell them to be good little men, and God will always remember them.

I received a letter from you and a card from Simon H. today. Was truly glad to hear from you, as I always am. You couldn't have found anything better to send me, if you had hunted the wide world over, than your picture. It was so splendid; and you are looking so well, too.

Must close for this time. I hope the time may soon come when we will be together again; but if it is God's will that I shall go across the ocean, let's leave all in His hands and live in hopes. If I have to go over, I probably will not get to write to you for a long, long time; but do not despair. I shall always have you uppermost in my thoughts and remember you with the feeling that you are one that practically gave your life that I might have a home and be a happy boy. Oh! that I could get back again to show my appreciation in person.

Of course, we know nothing about what we are going to do, whether stay here or go somewhere else; but in all likelihood, if we move, it will be kept a secret. So if you should not hear from me for several days, you will know that we are moving. It may not happen, though. So do not try to cross the bridge before we come to it by worrying about something that we know nothing about. I have faith in God and that will carry me through all trials and temptations.

With love and good wishes to all, I remain, as ever, your affectionate grandson, Willie G. Woodcox.

F. M. Thornton and wife entertained the following company last week: C. W. Thornton, on the Fourth; Frank Thornton, wife and daughter, of Elkhart, from Tuesday untii Friday.

The News is in receipt of a card from Rev. and Mrs. E. C. Corn, of Kellogg, Idaho, announing the arrival of Ernest Edgar, in their home on June 7.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church will meet on Saturday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, with Mrs. J. C. Hull. Every member please be present.

Homer Stackhohse and family took Sunday dinner with Mrs. E. Bills. Mr. Wm. Teagarden, wife and children, of Hicksville, were callers in the afternoon.

Francena Lowe and Thelma Ames of Butler, spent from Thursday until Saturday with Susan Sechler. On Saturday Mrs. Lowe and Mrs. Dora Sechler came and spent the day.

Youth and age have too little sympathy with each other. If the young would remember that they may be old and the old remember that they have been young, the world would be happier.

Fred Reeder and family went to Pleasant Lake, Saturday and returned home Sunday, bringing with them their daughter Gertrude, who visited her annt, Mrs. Ada Loftus, the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Brown, and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Clous, all of Auburn, spent Sunday evening at the home of Grady Woodcox and family. Miss Beatrice Woodcox returned with them for a week's visit.

Miss Emma Warstler and Roscoe Freeman, of Auburn, came Saturday evening to visit the former's sister, Mrs. Mell Herrick and husband. On Sunday they all took dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rhoads at Spencerville.

The following company were entertained on the Fourth at the home of C. A. Patterson and wife: Dr. Wyatt and wife, Mrs. Grace Nichols and daughter, Margaret Ellen, Miss Anna Bell Tullever, of Lagrange and W. C. Stevic and wife of Cedarville.

Four Classes Exempt

Four classes of men are named as exempt from military service in the draft regulations to which President Wilson gave final approval Thursday.

These classes are:

Men physically unfit.

Men employed in essential positions in war industries.

Those with certain religious beliefs.

Men with wives or other relatives wholly dependent on them for support.

The regulations cover fifty printed pages. They will be made public at a date to be fixed later and have been given the press to be held for release.

The rules provide that local exemption boards already named, have power to exempt the physically unfit and members of certain religions. The appellate board in each judicial district will have the power to excuse men for occupational reasons and will hear the pleas of those of dependents.

Under the new act of the last legislature, the squirrel season is open only between August 1 and December 1. In past years the squirrell season opened on July 1.

NEARLY 2,000 AUTOMOBILES IN DEKALB COUNTY

According to statistics compiled by the Campbell Circular Advertising company, of Indianapolis, there were 1,925 automobiles registered at the secretary of state's office from DeKalb county up to July 1, or for the first half of 1917. This is far in excess of the total registration for last year.

T. H. Elson of Concord township, with his Overland, was the first to register from this county and the last was H. J. Collett of Garrett, license No. G6915 having been issued for his Ford on last Saturday.

The total number of registrations for the entire state of Indiana is 167,181, the last license number being G7181. The letter A on a license number is between 100,000 and 110,000; B is between 110,000 and 120,000, and so on, each succeeding letter indicating an additional 10,000 licenses. The estimated value of all automobiles in Indiana is $85,000,000.

UNCLE SAM'S THRIFT THOUGHT FOR TODAY

What are you going to do with that half bottle of left-over milk in your refrigerator, Madam Housewife?

The cream has been taken off but there is good food value in what is left!

Here is one possibility, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture, for a nourishing dish for either luncheon or supper:

Nourishing Milk Gravy.

(Enough for family of two adults and three children. Reduce proportions if for smaller number.)

1 pint skim milk.
¼ cup flour.
2 level teaspoons butter or cooking fat.
½ teaspoon salt.

Melt butter or other fat in saucepan. Add flour and salt mixed. Blend. Add milk gradually. Heat, stirring constantly until thick.

Flavor, if desired, with any left-over minced meat or fish which may be on hand, or minced ham or a slice of broiled bacon, crumbled.

Serve on boiled hominy, samp, rice, potatoes, macaroni, or slices of corn or other bread, or toast.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganids are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipadon, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

VOL. XXXI ST JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1917 NO. 29

Them 'Lectric Lights

INDIANAPOLIS, July 11, 1917.
EDITOR ST. JOE NEWS.—

Dear Sir: Many complaints have been filed with the public service commission of Indiana regarding the inadequacy and insufficiency of the service as rendered by the Northwestern Ohio Light company to the citizens of St. Joe and Butler.

This matter has been set for hearing at the office of the public service commission, state house, Indianapolis, Ind., on Saturday, July 21, 1917, at 10 a. m. Kindly give this matter publicity.

Yours Very Truly,
CARL H. MOTE, Sec'y.

The foregoing letter needs no explanation, and will be read with pleasure by patrons of the electric light company hereabouts. At the same time, would it not be well for St. Joe to have a thorough cleaning up; and while showing the light company where to head in at, start legal procedure to make the telephone company give petter service? As long as St. Joe people submit to being held up for 'phone rent and receive such inadequate return for their money just that long will it be continued. There is but one way for the people to secure proper service, and that is to protest to the proper authorities. It is evident, from past action upon the part of those having the matter in charge, that no improvement will be made unless something ie done so enforce it. This article does not apply to those St. Joe people who are connected with the telephone company either as stock holders or as employes. Everyone knows that Mr. Geauque, of Edgerton, is the owner of the line and he alone is responsible for the poor service received

Two Surprise Parties

The Pi Alpha class of the Lutheran Sunday school enjoyed two successful surprise parties last week. The first was on Tuesday evening, when members of the class and friends to the number of twenty invited themselves to the home of Mrs. John Ulm, south of town, and accepted the invitation. "Eats" and a social hour were enjoyed by all, the first being furnished by the visitors and the second by the entire party. The event was in honor of Mrs. Ulm's birthday. A second birthday occurred within the week—that of the teacher, J. C. Buckingham, on Friday. Without so much as saying, "By your leave" and aided and abetted by Mrs. Buckingham, members of the class took possession of the vacant building adjacent to their teacher's home. When the latter returned from work—dressed a la mode de potato patch—he found cheery faces and a fine supper awaiting him. Anyone who thinks a good time didn't follow has another guess coming.

Red Cross Buttons

In the near future—in fact, as soon as the buttons can be obtained—there will be a house-to-house canvass made in St. Joe for Red Cross memberships by the following committee:

Mrs. F. R. Bowman.
" Charles Koch.
" Alva Perry.
" H. L. Dunkle.
" C. A. Patterson.

After the canvass of the town, the rural part of Concord township will be looked after; and if there is anyone whose patriotism or enthusiasm for Red Cross work runs high enough to offer his services to either the chairman or H. M. Widney, his offer will be gratefully accepted.

MRS. F. R. BOWMAN, Ch'm.

The Civic League

One by one, the great questions of the day are being settled—right here in St. Joe, too. Nothing is too great for the Civic League to tackle, from the best method of discouraging a hen that is obsessed with an ambition to prevent race suicide among the feathered population to "Who sthruck Billy Patterson?"

But, laying jokes aside, the meetings of the Civic League are proving both interesting and profitable, and the one held at the Lutheran church last Friday evening was no exception to the rule. Freedom of thought, speech and press was discussed, and a lively exchange of opinions took place. A chorus, under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. William Staman, Sr., furnished music; and the best compliment that can be paid them is the fact that they are down on the next program. Mrs. C. R. Price entertained the audience with a fine recitation. Following is the program for the next meeting, July 27.

LETTERS FROM THE FRONT

From Paul F. Krabill:—

FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan., July 5, 1917.

DEAR SISTER PRINCESS:—

Well, I wish I could be with all of you for a few hours. I know that this is impossible, but I can not help wishing it.

How are everything and everybody coming around St. Joe?

Well, I suppose you think it funny that I don't write, but I have been busy night and day since I joined the army; but most anything is pleasant when done for Uncle Sam.

This is certainly a beautiful place, and I would like to stay here; but that is impossible. They have cancelled my trip to Honolulu, and I have been informed that I will leave Saturday for California. I have received all my training for the army and am ready to go to France. I think they are going to make me train raw recruits somewhere along the western coast. I do not relish that very much.

Say, Princess, I am raising a moustache. I look like—well, never mind. You need not be afraid of anyone's kidnapping your brother.

Well, I will try and tell you a few facts about Fort Leavenworth. The last few weeks have transformed the fields here into a battle ground that might be, as far as trench works are concerned, a bit of France transported whole into the United States, for the war practice of new recruits. There are large trench systems that stretch away underground in mysterious tunnel systems—barbed wire fortifications that are hidden in the brush until the "rookie" suddenly comes upon them, face to face with one of the realizations that will confront him one day "somewhere" in France. They have underground hospitals, where the toll of a sudden assault upon the barricades may be taken for emergency treatment. In fact, everything that has to do with trench warfare has been set at Fort Leavenworth to be used in the training of the recruits that are rapidly filling the army to its war strength.

It is a grim course of education in death dealing—a death defying that Uncle Sam is teaching his soldiers at this training ground.

What England accomplished in six to twelve months with her army the United States generals are determined their men shall learn in three months, at the most. These days, it is all work and no play.

Every basic unit of the army is represented on the reservation. The work each will have to do at the front is mapped out for it to do from sun up to sun down on the parade ground. There is an absence of shot and shell and there is no gas; but, otherwise, it is a terrible, weird battle field that greets the visitor. There are trenches which bore underground, so cleverly constructed that even the fort officers could not find them unless the way was pointed out to them. The trenches are from 8 to 10 feet deep, and were built by prisoners from the military prison.

Everything is wonderful around here!

This drive and hurry-scurry that is going on at Fort Leavenworth augurs ill for the Germans, who are making light of the khaki-clad army that is going to cross the pond.

Don't write until you hear from me again.

PAUL.

From Lester Curie:—

FORT LOGAN H. ROOTS, Ark., June 29, 1917.

MY DEAR PARENTS:—

We have had a most strenuous week. We marched 8 miles Wednesday, with field equipment, and pitched tents for the night at 7:30 p. m. My company was detailed for night reconnoissance and outpost duty, but we were out only two hours. The next morning, we had skirmish formation across the hills for two hours; and then made a forced march of 7 miles, with only one stop. Quite a number of the men fell out, and things were going round and round with me when we received an order to rest; and, believe me, it was most welcome. I was ready to fall from exhaustion, and only by sheer will power was I able to resume the campward march. When you read of forced marches, just say to yourself that the men are being tested to the fullest physical extent and that they are undergoing the fullest endurance strain a man can be possibly put to.

We had regimental review today, accompanied by the 1st Arkansas regimental band. It was wonderful—one felt like soaring to the skies. Major General Wood will be here tomorrow, when he will review us.

These seven weeks have done me a great deal of good in many ways. My respect for the army is very deep. Before coming here, I had almost none.

It is with regret that I have to inform you of my resignation from this camp. In rechecking the physical examination cards, Colonel Lewis, of the medical corps, discovered that I failed to pass the visional test, although it was marked "Accepted." I was called for re-examination and the test was confirmed. I was then informed that my defection was a bar to a commission. He informed me, however, that I could continue the three months if I wished to do so. I then advised my captain of the same and that I should resign and not impede his work and waste time that could be devoted to those who were able to continue the work. I was then called before a board of officers and explained in every way. They treated me very fine and complimented me upon the sensible manner shown in the matter. My record here has been excellent, and there is not a mark against me. Have not missed a formation—have not been on a sick report once. Have had

The foregoing poem is dedicated to those "feller citizens"—in St. Joe and elsewhere—who are reverse English prophets, after-telling instead of foretelling events. Wise prophets are they, too, always ready to declare their own wisdom.

"I told you so!"

Doesn't that sound familiar?

Last Saturday, when the abdication of the kaiser was rumored, these reverse English prophets got busy and proved beyond the shadow of a doubt to the satisfaction of nobody but themselves that they had prophesied the downfall of the kaiser.

"I told you so!" (Foot off the soft pedal at the pronoun "I.")

Now, these tiresome fellows can predict the outcome of the war with about as much certainty as they can next month's weather unless they guess it will rain.

Two things are certain, however:

1. the war will end some time.
2. It will end right if our fellows lick and wrong if the other fellows do (which they won't).

Dr. Schlosser Visits St. Joe

Dr. W. K. Schlosser—the affable, genial good scout of yore—accompanied by his wife and two sons, let the light of his countenance fall upon St. Joe, Tuesday; and if there was a single person in town who was not glad to see "Doc," that person does not know a good thing when he sees it. The doctor and his family visited Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Emme, of Spencerville, Sunday. On Monday, Mrs. Schlosser and children came to St. Joe, while the doctor went to Fort Wayne on business. He came here on Tuesday, going home with his family the same day. They reside at Plymouth. While here, they were the guests of S. W. Tustison and wife.

The ice cream social given by the Baraca Cadets of the M. P. Sunday school on the F. M. Monroe lawn Saturday evening was a decided success. The attendance was good and all had a good. Music—plenty of it—was furnished by a sheepskin band. The class cleaned up a neat little sum.

Starts For Wyoming

On Tuesday evening, Miss Ethel Wallace left for Thermopolis, Wyo. She expects to reach her destination Friday afternoon, going via Ft. Wayne, Kansas City and Denver. She has a brother, Harry Wallace, in business at Thermopolis; and whether she will accept employment with him or pay him an extended visit depends upon how well she likes the West. At any rate, it will be a novel and interesting experience for the young lady. Unless she changes her mind, she will at least stay all winter.

Motored to Valparaiso

A party of young men—Stanley Koch, Herbert Curie, Ray Sailer and George Tustison—on Sunday motored to Valparaiso and visited Vernie Monroe. They report a good time.

PRESIDENT HITS DOLLAR PATRIOTS

Asks Business Interests to Put Aside Selfishness and Give Aid to Nation.

SHIPOWNERS ARE CONDEMNED

There Must Be but One Price for Government and for Public, Says Wilson—Justice Is Keynote of Appeal.

Washington.—President Wilson appealed to the country's business interests Wednesday to put aside every selfish consideration and to give their aid to the nation as freely as those who go to offer their lives on the battlefield.

The president's statement follows:

"The government is about to attempt to determine the prices at which it will ask you henceforth to furnish various supplies which are necessary for the prosecution of the war, and various materials which will be needed in the industries by which the war must be sustained. We shall, of course, try to determine them justly and to the best advantage of the nation as a whole; but justice is easier to speak of than to arrive at, and there are some considerations which I hope we shall keep steadily in mind while this particular problem of justice is being worked out.

Promises Just Price.

"Therefore I take the liberty of stating very candidly my own view of the situation and of the principles which should guide both the government and the mine owners and manufacturers of the country in this difficult matter.

"A just price must, of course, be paid for everything the government buys. By a just price I mean a price which will sustain the industries concerned in a high state of efficiency, provide a living for those who conduct them, enable them to pay good wages, and make possible the expansions of their enterprises which will from time to time become necessary as the stupendous undertakings of this great war develop.

Must Face the Facts.

"We could not wisely or reasonably do less than pay such prices. They are necessary for the maintenance and development of industry, and the maintenance and development of industry are necessary for the great task we have in hand.

"But I trust that we shall not surround the matter with a mist of sentiment. Facts are our masters now. We ought not to put the acceptance of such prices on the ground of patriotism."

"Patriotism has nothing to do with profits in a case like this. Patriotism and profits ought never in the present circumstances be mentioned together.

"It is perfectly proper to discuss profits as a matter of business, with a view to maintaining the integrity of capital and the efficiency of labor in these tragical months, when the liberty of free men everywhere and of industry itself trembles in the balance; but it would be absurd to discuss them as a motive for helping to serve and save our country.

"Patriotism leaves profits out of the question. In these days of our supreme trial, when we are sending hundreds of thousands of our young men across the seas to serve a great cause, no true man who stays behind to work for them and sustain them by his labor will ask himself what he is personally going to make out of that labor.

"No true patriot will permit himself to take toll of their heroism in money or seek to grow rich by the shedding of their blood. He will give as freely and with as unstinted self-sacrifice as they. When they are giving their lives, will he not at least give his money?

Assails "Bribery."

"I hear it insisted that more than a just price, more than a price that will sustain our industries, must be paid; that it is necessary to pay very liberal and unusual profits in order to 'stimulate' production; that nothing but pecuniary rewards will do—rewards paid in money, not in the mere liberation of the world.

"I take it for granted that those who argue thus do not stop to think what that means.

"Do they mean that you must be paid, must be bribed, to make your contribution, a contribution that costs you neither a drop of blood nor a tear, when the whole world is in travail and men everywhere depend upon and call to you to bring them out of bondage and make the world a fit place to live in again, amidst peace and justice?

Appeals to Honor.

"Do they mean that you will exact a price, drive a bargain, with the men who are enduring the agony of this war on the battlefields, in the trenches, amidst the lurking dangers of the sea, or with the bereaved women and pitiful children, before you will come forward to do your duty and give some part of your life, in easy, peaceful fashion, for the things we are fighting for, the things we have pledged our fortunes, our lives, our sacred honor to vindicate and defend—liberty and justice and fair dealing and the peace of nations?

"Of course you will not. It is inconceivable. Your patriotism is of the same self-denying stuff as the patriotism of the men dead or maimed on the fields of France, or else it is not patriotism at all.

Full Dollar's Worth.

"Let us never speak, then, of profits and of patriotism in the same sentence, but face facts and meet them. Let us do sound business, but not in the midst of a mist.

"Many a grievous burden of taxation will be laid on this nation, in this generation and in the next, to pay for this war; let us see to it that for every dollar that is taken from the people's pockets it shall be possible to obtain a dollar's worth of the sound stuff they need.

"Let me turn for a moment to the ship owners of the United States and the other ocean carriers whose example they have followed, and ask them if they realize what obstacles, what almost insuperable obstacles, they have been putting in the way of the successful prosecution of this war by the ocean freight rates they have been exacting.

Making War a Failure.

"They are doing everything that high freight charges can do to make the war a failure, to make it impossible.

"I do not say that they realize this or intend it. The thing has happened naturally enough because the commercial processes which we are content to see operate in ordinary times have without sufficient thought been continued into a period where they have no proper place.

"I am not questioning motives. I am merely stating a fact, and stating it in order that attention may be fixed upon it.

"The fact is that those who have fixed war freight rates have taken the most effective means in their power to defeat the armies engaged against Germany. When they realize this we may, I take it for granted, count upon them to reconsider the whole matter. It is high time. Their extra hazards are covered by war risk insurance.

Warning Is Sounded.

"I know, and you know, what response to this great challenge of duty and of opportunity the nation will expect of you; and I know what response you will make.

"Those who do not respond, who do not respond in the spirit of those who have gone to give their lives for us on bloody fields far away, may safely be left to be dealt with by opinion and the law—for the law must, of course, command those things.

"I am dealing with the matter thus publicly and frankly, not because I have any doubt or fear as to the result but only in order that in all our thinking and in all our dealings with one another we may move in a perfectly clear air of mutual understanding.

Must Have Same Prices.

"And there is something more that we must add to our thinking. The public is now as much a part of the government as are the army and navy themselves; the whole people in all their activities are now mobilized and in service for the accomplishment of the nation's task in this war; it is in such circumstances impossible justly to distinguish between industrial purchases made by the government and industrial purchases made by the managers of industries, and it is just as much our duty to sustain the industrials of the country with all the industries that contribute to its life as it is to sustain our forces in the field and on the sea.

Think Not of Self.

"We must make prices to the public the same as the prices to the government. Prices mean the same thing everywhere now. They mean the efficiency or the inefficiency of the nation, whether it is the government that pays them or not. They mean victory or defeat. They mean that America will win her place once for all among the foremost free nations of the world or that she will sink to defeat and become a second-rate power alike in thought and in action. This is a day of her reckoning and every man among us must personally face that reckoning along with her.

"The case needs no arguing. I assume that I am only expressing your own thoughts—what must be in the mind of every true man when he faces the tragedy and the solemn glory of the present war, for the emancipation of mankind.

"I summon you to a great duty, a great privilege, a shining dignity and distinction. I shall expect every man who is not a slacker to be at my side throughout this great enterprise. In it no man can win honor who thinks of himself."

687,000 MEN IN FIRST DRAFT CALL

President Issues Order Calling Soldiers Into the Service of United States.

1,262,985 MEN IN THE ARMY

War Department Announces the Quotas to Be Furnished by Each State—Credit Given for Men Now in Service.

Washington.—The war department has promulgated a formal order from the president drafting 687,000 men into the military service of the United States under the selective conscription law. The order shows what part of the total must be furnished by each state and territory.

The only steps now remaining are distribution by the governors of state quotas among the local exemption districts and the great lottery, which probably will be held next week and which will establish the order in which registrants are to present themselves for service or exemption.

The men summoned for service will be used to fill the regular army and National Guard to war strength and to organize the first 500,000 of the new national army.

Total to Be 1,262,985.

The total of these three forces will be 1,262,985 men.

Later another 500,000 will be called out, supplemented by sufficient men to make up losses and maintain reserve battalions.

Following is Secretary of War Baker's announcement of the order:

"By virtue of the authority vested in him by an act of congress, entitled 'An Act to Authorize the President to Increase Temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, the president of the United States has ordered the aggregate number of 687,000 men to be raised by draft for the military service of the United States in order to bring to full strength the organizations of the regular army and the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the military service of the United States and to create the national army, and has caused said aggregate number to be apportioned to the several states and territories and the District of Columbia as set forth in the schedule hereto appended.

Must Apportion Quotas.

"The governor of each state and territory and the commissioners of the District of Columbia, acting for and by the direction of the president and in accordance with said act of congress and rules and regulations prescribed pursuant thereto, shall apportion the quota so apportioned to such state, territory or district and shall communicate to each local board established in such state, territory or district notice of the net quota to be furnished by such board, and such net quotas shall thereupon be furnished by the respective local boards as required by said act of congress and rules and regulations prescribed pursuant thereto."

In computing the number of men to be required from the various states the government put to the credit of each state every man it now has in the National Guard and every man it has contributed since April 1 as a war volunteer to the regular army.

Computation Method.

Placing on the debit side of the ledger the national army of 500,000, the entire National Guard at war strength and the number of war volunteers needed on April 1 last, to bring the regulars up to the war strength, the grand total was apportioned according to population.

This gave a gross quota for each state, from which a net quota was computed by checking off the number of National Guardsmen available for federal service and the number of men given by the state to the regular army since April 1.

The apportionment was made on the basis of an estimated grand total for the United States and its possessions of 105,366,056 inhabitants.

Total of 1,152,985.

Each will furnish under this apportionment the men its total registration would indicate as a fair proportion, rather than the number the actual population of the district would indicate. The total of these gross quotas is 1,152,985 men.

Credit is given to the various states for a total of 465,985 voluntary enlistments in the National Guard and regulars, making the total net quota for all states 687,000 men.

NUMBER OF MEN TO BE RAISED IN EACH STATE

Allotment by states of quotas to be raised by selective draft for Uncle Sam's national army was announced by the war department.

The quotas assigned are on a basis of proportionate population of each state to the population of the nation as recently fixed by the census bureau. In the allotment each state is given credit for its total enlisted National Guard strength, plus the men enlisted in the regular army between April 2 and June 30, 1917.

The following table gives the war department allotment, gross quotas, net quotas and National Guard and regular army credits—the total of the latter two appearing in the final column of the table:

Governor Goodrich Determined to Get Adequate Action on Coal Situation.

WILL CALL LEGISLATURE

"Outrageous" Prices Must Cease—Recent Attempt at Washington Considered by Many Officials as a "Gigantic" Hoax.

Indianapolis.—Unless the congress enacts legislation that will enable President Wilson to fix prices on coal and control distribution, the Indiana legislature will be called into extraordinary session by Governor Goodrich in August to deal with the Indiana fuel problem.

The plan became known on the highest possible authority. There also was a belief in some quarters that the governor might make a trip to Washington concerning the coal situation in the near future, unless some definite action is taken immediately by the government, looking to a real solution of the problem. The governor, it is known, feels that valuable time is slipping by the nation while the coal operators continue to reap what the Indiana public service commission has termed "outrageous" prices.

Publicly, at some of the former hearings and conferences, the governor indicated that he believed the four summer months should be used for storing coal by the small consumers so that the usual winter blockade might be avoided in this war year.

Regarded as a Hoax.

The recent agreement on coal prices between the representatives of the operators of the country and the representatives of the council of national defense is regarded by some Indiana officials as a gigantic hoax. The maximum prices fixed for Indiana coal are far above what business men and others are paying now for the same coal.

Many agencies throughout the state are uniting to obtain all possible facts for the use of state authorities in their next big drive on the coal situation, and rumor after rumor is heard to the effect that the next step of the state will be attended by consequences that will make the Indiana operators realize that the people of the state will brook no continuance of present famine conditions.

The car shortage in the state to all practical purposes, has been remedied by the public service commission. Still the mine owners continue to advertise coal at "outrageous" prices.

Automobile Association Holds Meeting.

The board of directors of the Hoosier State Automobile association and representatives of 57 affiliated clubs convened in the second annual meeting of the organization. A. P. Lupton of Hartford City, president of the state association, read the president's report for the year. "Shall the Hoosier State Automobile Association Organize and Mark a System of Highways in Indiana," was the subject of a paper read by A. R. Nisson, former secretary of the state association.

Secretary of State Resigns to Enlist.

Ed Jackson, secretary of state, has handed his resignation to Governor Goodrich and announced that he had resigned to enter the second officers' reserve corps training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, beginning August 27. Governor Goodrich did not name his successor immediately, but it is understood the governor will appoint Pliny W. Wolfard of Newcastle, deputy to Mr. Jackson, as his successor, in case Mr. Jackson is accepted as a member of the training camp. The formal resignation of Mr. Jackson was conditional on his being accepted at the camp and it will take effect August 27, the date of the beginning of the camp, in case he is accepted.

Several Appointments Made.

Edward Barrett, state geologist, appointed A. H. Felker of Lebanon state supervisor of oil and Felker in turn named a number of deputies over the state. Barrett is a Democrat and most of the appointees are Democrats who formerly held the offices. Indiana has another state oil inspector appointed by Governor Goodrich so that an appeal could be taken from the federal court injunction against the enforcement of the amended law. Barrett acted under an old law, passed in 1891. Six women are to be included in the Democratic appointees. Some of the appointments follow: South Bend, George Goetz; Michigan City, W. B. Flynn; Hammond, S. C. Swain; Logansport, John Riley; Garrett, F. L. Feick; Laporte, W. W. Hans; Angola, Mrs. W. W. Morley.

Cultivate New State Park.

Cultivation of 150 acres of land at McCormick's Creek canyon, one of the new state parks located in Owen county, the products to go to one of the state institutions, will be proposed by Richard Lieber, member of the state park commission, and Superintendent Talkington of the Indiana state farm. Mr. Lieber returned from a tour of the 450-acre tract recently purchased by the state as a part of the new park system. With him was Mr. Talkington, who suggested that a model garden on a large scale might be planted.

Indiana Cities Object to Raise.

The public service commission has received protests from various cities in Indiana against the proposed reduction of heat units in gas provided by companies in the Indiana Gas association, which has filed a petition with the commission, asking authority to reduce the heat units. The protests came from the city of Crawfordsville, the citizens of Lebanon, the city of Franklin and the city of Martinsville. In some instances the protests asked the commission to postpone the hearing o fthe gas association's petition.

The commission also received a protest from the Indianapolis Business Men's association against the recent petition from the Indiana coal carrying railroads, which asked authority to increase coal rates 15 cents a ton. The Indianapolis petition says the proposed increase in freight rates "is out of all proportion as to the increase of costs for moving such freight."

Knitting Socks Keeps Growing.

The number of Indiana women knitting wool socks to be worn by Indiana soldiers of the National Guard when they go overseas has now increased to 570, according to reports compiled at the state headquarters of the "Socks for Soldiers." From 30 to 50 pairs of perfectly knitted socks—without a seam in the heel or a knot in the toe—are now being received daily at the state headquarters from the dozen stations in the state, but it is expected that this number soon will be increased to 100 pairs. Four thousand pairs by September 1 is the goal. Among the knitters are sisters and mothers of boys who soon are to go away with the National Guard.

Indiana Firemen Organize.

At a special meeting of officers and directors of the Indiana Firemen's association in the offices of the Gamewell department in the city hall, it was decided to hold the first annual convention of the organization August 3-4 in Indianapolis. The convention meetings of the 60 delegates are to be held in the Chamber of Commerce building.

Although the association was organized only last March, it now has a membership of 850, representing 2 Indiana cities. Carl E. Evinger of Terre Haute, president, declared that, although Indiana was the thirty-third state to organize its fire fighters, the state will have one of the strongest associations in the country before fall. Plans are considered for enrolling most of the 4,000 firemen of the state before the state convention. It is the plan to enroll members of all departments, even volunteer organizations in the smaller communities.

Pension Law Considered.

The object of the association, as outlined in the bylaws and expressed by representatives at the meeting, is to promote the social and fraternal interests of firemen. One of the special subjects to be taken up at the convention will be the firemen's pension law. Other topics to be considered will be fire prevention, modern means of fire fighting and the inspection of new apparatus.

Nominal Fee Fixed.

A nominal membership fee of $1 annually has been decided upon. It will thus be comparatively easy to enlist members in the association.

The present officers are Carl E. Evinger, Terre Haute, president; Thomas Golden, Hammond, vice president; Harry H. Fulmer, Indianapolis, treasurer, and Frank H. Miller, Terre Haute, secretary. The directors are Robert Gaskill, Fort Wayne; Joseph Byanskie, Fort Wayne; William Nill, Hammond; Ira R. Garrison, Evansville; Conrad Borger, Indianapolis, and John E. Zener, Indianapolis. All were present at the business meeting and the luncheon in the Chamber of Commerce building except Vice President Golden.

The cities now represented in the association are Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Evansville, Hammond, Shelbyville, Winchester, Connersville, Laporte, Logansport, Anderson, Richmond, Muncie, Newcastle, Elwood, Marion, Kokomo, Peru, Frankfort, Lafayette, Whiting, Alexandria, Greenfield, East Chicago and Fort Wayne.

More Oil Inspectors Named.

Marion Caldwell, appointed by Governor Goodrich as state oil supervisor, has announced additional deputy inspectors he has appointed and he said his offices would be opened in the house of representatives at the statehouse, other rooms being filled at the capitol. Caldwell and some of his deputies already have qualified officially as oil inspectors at the offices of the secretary of state, and others were hurrying to give their official bonds as qualification, it was announced.

None of the Democratic inspectors, named recently by Edward Barrett, state geologist, has qualified as an inspector, although it has been understood for some time that the Democratic state organization intended to make a fight for the oil inspectorships, basing it on the theory that Barrett, under an old statute, and not Governor Goodrich, has the appointing power.

Young Men Wanted.

Lieut. Col. Crawford, examining officer for the second officers' reserve camp, announced that applications from men under thirty-one years of age are desired. Although the war department has announced that preference will be given to men above the draft age, Colonel Crawford stated that this would apply only when qualifications are equal. There is a dearth of applicants above the draft age. Men between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five are said to be the most desired.

SHEEP'S CLOTHING

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

Real Entertainment.

In peace times the Atlantic steamship lines offer smooth rascals a fruitful field of labor. Some are gamblers, some are smugglers, some are thieves of every known variety, including blackmailers. In "Sheep's Clothing" Mr. Vance has written a story whose action takes place principally during a single voyage from England to America, and at least three of his characters are smart rascals posing as honest men—wolves in sheep's clothing. This story points no moral. Its chapters are filled with honest, cheerful, entertaining people; the kind we all like to meet and know—and the ending is happy. No, this isn't a problem novel, but a very pleasant—and sometimes thrilling—tale, and you're all going to enjoy reading it.

THE EDITOR.

CHAPTER I.

—1—

In her maiden season the Alsatia, "largest steamship in the world" of her day and generation, was advertised to leave Liverpool for New York via Queenstown, promptly at five o'clock in the afternoon of every third Saturday.

At about one o'clock of a Saturday late in September one forehanded passenger found her way by dint of persistence through the pandemonium in the pier-shade to the Alsatia's first-cabin gangway.

This was a young woman not far beyond her twentieth year, with a tall and slender body, a face of uncommon distinction, and at the time somewhat pale, and a striking abundance of hair the color of raw, red gold. Dressed simply in dark traveling costume, with hat in excellent accord, she carried, in addition to a light wrap and tightly rolled umbrella, a conspicuously new Oxford bag lettered in black, "L. C.—New York." Behind her a porter staggered beneath her only other piece of luggage—a battered black-leather trunk of great age, which, curiously enough, bore the legend in letters of white, half obliterated, "L. C.—London."

Tipping and dismissing the man, the girl confidently ascended the gangway to the saloon deck of the Alsatia, and asked a steward to conduct her to her stateroom, displaying at the same time a ticket entitling "Lucy Carteret, Spinster," to a berth in Room 75, Deck B.

Once alone in her room, she bolted the door, lingered before a full-length mirror to remove her hat, eying her reflection with a shadowy, puzzling smile, and turned away to review the cubicle, one-half of which she was entitled to call her own for the next six days. The other half had been engaged by a woman of whom she knew nothing whatever, not even so much as her name.

It was a stateroom unusual in arrangement and luxurious in appointment. Twin brass bedsteads stood end to end against the inner wall. The other furniture comprised a capacious chest of drawers, a comfortable sofa, and two wicker armchairs. At one end narrow doors admitted to a cramped but adequate lavatory and a roomy clothes-press. The woodwork was enameled a creamy white, and the walls boasted panels of golden brocade—a color scheme conveying an effect at once of warmth, airiness and scrupulous cleanliness.

With a grave little nod, the girl approved. If expensive—and it was horribly expensive for her slender purse—this stateroom was well worth all it had cost her. There ran in her blood the instinct for luxury, though now her purse, upon examination, yielded but four golden sovereigns, a half-sovereign, a half-crown, a shilling, and a few ponderous copper pennies, barely enough for the inevitable tips at the end of the voyage. She would land in New York practically penniless. But that would be on a day the seventh distant: sufficient unto it its potential mischief.

She was very tired: the last few nights had brought her little sleep, thanks to the excitement engendered by contemplation of a step whose boldness was unprecedented in her history. But now, with that step successfully taken, excitement yielded place to fatigue. Unlocking and in part unpacking both bag and trunk, she appropriated a fair half of the wardrobe accommodations, then wrapped herself in a dressing gown and lay down on one of the beds. Transient, odd visions painted the ruddy gloom within her closed eyelids—of the life she had dismissed; of the temerarious adventure that engaged her; of the life to which she looked forward.

In time a knocking sounded on the door. The girl stirred and moved her head impatiently. The knocking grew imperative, and the deeps of sleep were disturbed by other sounds as well, by voices—

Miss Carteret came fully to her senses in the act of unfastening the door. But of a sudden she paused with fingers resting nerveless upon half-drawn bolt, eyes wide with apprehension, and her face robbed of all that gracious color with which sleep had imbued it. For an instant she stood so, in doubt and hesitation, listening; then, as if reassured, she drew the bolt clear and opened the door.

This act disclosed two figures waiting beyond the threshold—a luggage-laden steward and a lady of abundant person and post-mature years, in a gown not three days out of the Rue de la Paix.

"I'm sorry," the girl apologized, standing aside. "I was quite sound asleep, and couldn't seem to wake up."

"But it is I who am sorry to have disturbed you." With a nod and a smile of acknowledgment, the speaker sailed grandly into the stateroom, a somewhat overpowering Presence.

Submitting perforce to the necessity of traveling without privacy, Miss Carteret hadn't bargained for the company of a dowager duchess; and this Presence bodied forth every redoubtable inch of that high estate. Her sixty years were quick with the spirit of forty. She wore her nose with the high, patrician bridge. A make-up of most excellent discretion supplemented charms by no means hopelessly passee. An impeccable taste in dress achieved a sobriety to suit her age, while escaping gloom and stiffness. There were evidences of a vigorous temper, dominated by a lively appreciation of the humorous, an invincible self-confidence, a seasoned acquaintance with the world, and a devastating curiosity—a handsome figure, a personality to be reckoned with.

By accent and mode of speech a true American, this was no duchess unless through accident of matrimony. But indubitably she was a dragon.

Miss Carteret was quick to endue the lady with a mental nickname, "the Dowager Dragon," a term whose asperity she modified by the admission that, if dragonish, she was most probably a dear. Then she seemed conscious that she had been staring steadfastly, and for a time far too long, at the subject of her reverie.

"I beg your pardon," she murmured, averting her eyes.

"I'd rather you didn't," said the Dowager Dragon brusquely. "If you apologize, I'll have to—I've been staring every whit as hard as you, my dear—and I never apologize." The conceit relished; the lady rolled it over her tongue and paraphrased, "I may be rude, I may be wrong; but admit it? Never!" Then she laughed heartily.

Miss Carteret ventured a smile. "I was thinking—" she offered in conclusive amendment.

"Believe me, I saw that," the other interrupted, "and more: I read your thoughts quite plainly."

"Oh, no!" the girl protested in alarm.

"But yes, my dear. You were thinking that in me you'd caught something of a tartar. Now weren't you? But a hand-painted bark doesn't necessarily imply a venomous bite. And if my complexion is candidly artful—must a woman look her age or lose caste? I do wear a wig; but think what a fright I should be without one! On the other hand, my figure and eyes and teeth are all my own," the last were frankly exhibited in an infectious laugh, "and so is my heart. In short, at my worst I'm a perfectly respectable old gossip— But—gracious, child!—how you do run on!"

With this bewildering reproach, the Dowager Dragon rose, and producing an impressive bunch of keys, began to unlock her various pieces of hand luggage.

"Really," she pursued, "you don't give one a chance to ask a single question. Here you've dragged out of me the most private bones in my skeleton cupboard without so much as telling me your name. No matter: you won't refuse it when you know mine. It's Beggarstaff—Amelia—widow. Now, as Peter Traft says, what do you know about that?"

Miss Carteret knew nothing whatever about that, and owned her ignorance with a look of blankness that earned an indulgent chuckle.

"Confess you have never heard of me! But that's only because you're English."

"Oh, but I'm not!" Miss Carteret insisted impulsively. "My mother's parents were English; but I—"

Here she choked in undisguised dismay. But her companion wasn't looking—didn't, indeed, need to look: such is the resource of one ripe in the knowledge of humanity.

"Go on, my dear. Tell me all—as well now as later. You will, anyway, in the end—and if you don't, I'll engage to find you out for myself. By the way, your name would help."

"Lid—" Miss Carteret announced incoherently, stopping abruptly as though half-choked by the monosyllable.

"How very odd!" commented Mrs. Beggarstaff with a straight face. "Miss Lid! Almost as bizarre as Beggarstaff. But that's my own fault: I married it with my hearing unimpaired. But Lid! I never—"

"My name isn't Lid!" the girl interrupted indignantly. "I never said so. Something was tickling my throat. My name is Lucy Carteret."

"Sorry I misunderstood—and glad. Lucy Carteret's much prettier and—ah—human. The Maryland Carterets, I hope?"

"Oh, no," said the girl hastily.

"Too bad; it's a good family. Let me see—there are no Carterets worth mentioning in New York. Virginia branch, perhaps?"

"Oh, no."

The iterated denial was less bold than its original; Miss Carteret was beginning to be sorry she hadn't waited for a later steamer, as well as that she had thought it necessary, not to say romantic, to adopt a pseudonym to fit the initials on her luggage.

"Then you can't be anybody!" Mrs. Beggarstaff asserted vigorously. "Too bad. Unless possibly," she brightened, "you come of the English family? There are, I believe, some Carterets in Hertfordshire—"

"No!" the persecuted young woman said firmly. "I told you I was an American—and if the matter is of any importance, I'm perfectly willing to admit I'm nobody."

"Don't be cross with an inquisitive old woman, my dear." The Beggarstaffian smile was very fetching. Miss Carteret's indignation melted before it. "I'm only trying to find out if we haven't friends in common. Who are your friends on board? I know everybody, and—"

"I'm traveling alone," the girl interposed meekly, "and to the best of my knowledge I don't know a soul on the ship."

Mrs. Beggarstaff chose shrewdly to disapprove. "That's not right! You're too young and good-looking to travel without at least a chaperon. These transatlantic boats are all alive with adventurers. Luckily, you now have me—unless, perhaps, you're too high-spirited to utilize an old woman's interest?"

"You're very kind," Miss Carteret murmured—not altogether insincerely. She was too intelligent to be blind to the advantage of having so thorough-paced a Dowager Dragon to protect and advise her. And she was anything but anxious to incur ill-will by refusing an offer that, however forward, seemed unquestionably to be dictated by the kindliest spirit.

"I'm glad you think so—or have the grace to say so, at least. So that's settled. Now tell me more about yourself. Is this your first crossing?"

"It's my first trip home."

Plainly no help for it: with this persistently friendly body catechizing her, she might as well now as later stand and deliver some account of herself.

"Your first trip home? That means you've been over a long time?"

And in very short order Mrs. Beggarstaff has the confidence of Lucy Carteret, and that young lady is telling the story of her life. Don't miss the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

How to Deal With Germs.

In dealing with germs, it should be remembered that a germ of the mildest appearance may very often be most savage. Don't be deceived by a germ that looks harmless. The male germ, as a rule, is the most voracious and it may always be known by its gay plumage. Germs, as we have been taught, bring with them every sort of disease, and while germs are not always fatal, they try their best to be. The average conscientious germ is chagrined when he fails to kill. If a number of germs are engaged on a job and do not succeed they are in disgrace with the folks back home. Teach the children to swat the germs. Particularly the young germs. Germs, like people, are most odious at the adolescent

GUARDS SOLDIERS' MENTAL HEALTH

Each base hospital sent abroad with a neuro-psychopathic unit. The national committee for mental hygiene is in charge of the work. Dr. Thomas W. Salmon, the medical director of the committee, is now in Europe studying conditions, so that the psychiatric organizations here may have the advantage of the latest experience of the units at the war front. A letter from Doctor Salmon, received at the headquarters of the committee in New York says:

"I am convinced that we are providing far too few beds for actual war conditions. This is entirely true of base hospitals generally, but it is especially true of the accommodations for mental and nervous cases. A British army division consists of 40,000 men, and has a base hospital of 1,000 beds, which can be expanded to twice that number. This ratio is considerably larger than that provided by the United States regulations.

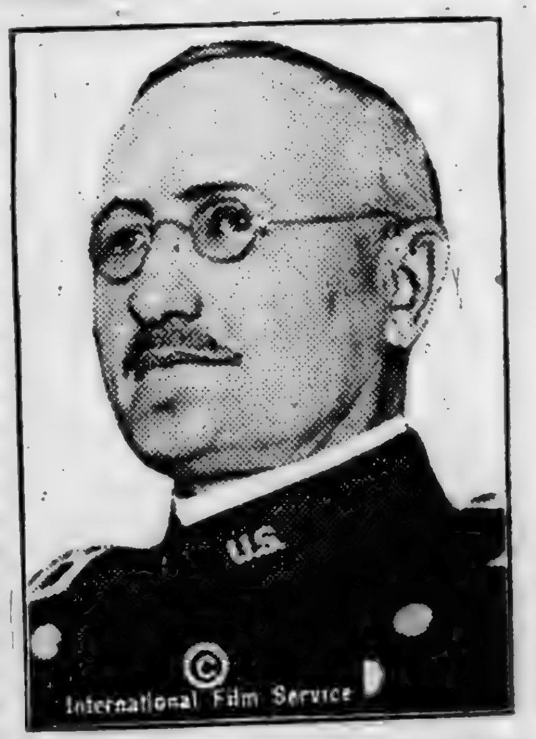
"The extent of these casualties is almost beyond belief. I have not yet had access to the official records, but apparently the neuroses constitute one of the most formidable problems of modern war. I shall have innumerable instances showing how ineffective ordinary treatment is in these cases and how much can be accomplished from sufficient treatment by psychiatrists and neurologists when they have early access to their patients and some special facilities."

WALTER CAMP WILL TRAIN MEN

In the first burst of patriotic enthusiasm, attendant upon the entry of the United States into the war, the older men naturally wanted to keep step with the youngsters in seeing the thing through. And so, throughout the country, innumerable quasi-military organizations have sprung into existence, numbering on their roster men of all ages. The training has been carried on with little or no attempt at discrimination; men of fifty and over would be sent out on wild hikes of ten miles or more over rough country and muddy spring roads. As an inevitable consequence, most of the older men would have to drop out; some of them have been permanently injured by the ignorance and indiscretion of their commanding officers.

A month or more ago this problem of conserving the physical resources of the nation's older men presented itself, with constantly increasing insistence, to the mind of a man who has made physical training and the handling of men the study of a lifetime—Walter Camp of New Haven. For many years Mr. Camp has been Yale's most revered athletic mentor, especially in matters relating to the annual football campaigns, and Princeton and Harvard men know to their sorrow that it has not been an easy thing to catch an Eli team off edge. One must have a system, indeed one must have the best system; then the results follow as a matter of routine.

LEADS UNITED STATES WARRIORS



Maj. Gen. William L. Sibert is commander, under General Pershing, of the American regulars which have been landed in France to fight for freedom of world. He is an engineering expert. He built the Gatun lock and dam, the west breakwater in Colon harbor, and excavated the Panama canal from Gatun to the Atlantic. Major General Sibert was born in Alabama fifty-six years ago and was graduated from West Point in 1884. He was appointed a second lieutenant of engineers, and in 1887 was graduated from the engineering school of application. He did much work on inland water ways in the United States from 1887 to 1898 and was chief engineer of the Manila and Dagupan railroad in the Philippines in 1899 and 1900. He went to Panama in 1907. In 1914 he served as chairman of a flood-prevention board in China. He was made a brigadier general in 1915 and was promoted to major general a few weeks ago. General Sibert is recognized as one of the army's most distinguished engineer and artillery officers. Known through his record to other commanding officers of the allied forces, he received a welcome altogether extraordinary when he arrived in France. With true American dash he at once took up the work to which he had been assigned.

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES
THE CONCERN OF ALL

St. Joe Locals

Mrs. Winnifred Milner, of South Bend, came Monday for a short visit with her mother, Mrs. Harriet Bills.

Mrs. John Geisinger, of Auburn, spent the first of the week with her father, Joseph Koch.

If you owe Wm. Randall, next time you are in town, call and pay

Chas. Koch was in Hicksville, Monday.

Mrs. Jacob Sechler spent Tuesday and part of Wednesday with her daughter, Mrs. Everett Mavis, and husband.

Mrs. Esther Bowman and little daughter, were Friday guests of D. J. Baker and wife at Ft. Wayne.

Roy Whith, wife and son and Earl Chapman, wife and daughter, of near Hamilton, spent Sunday at Sherman Wolff's.

Miss Ann Martindale, of Seymore, Indiana, was a week end guest of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Dilley.

Mr. and Mrs. Del Crawford, of Konkel, Ohio and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Mattern of Fayette, Ohio, were over Sunday guests of Frank Terman and wife.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Baltz and Wm. Sommer and wife were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sechler.

Mr. and Mrs. Leon Sechler spent Sunday at Ft. Wayne with Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Bowen.

F. M. Monroe and George Walters, accompanied by their wives, visited Sunday at the home of Rufus Zeiss, of Harlan, Sunday. After dinner, they went to Woodburn, Edgerton and Blue Cast. Unfavorable weather shortened their trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Hiltner and children Vern and Margaret, of Continental, Ohio, came Saturday eve and stayed over Sunday with Mrs. Hiltner's sister, Mrs. J. P. Buckingham.

Mr. and Mrs. Adelbert Meek, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, ars visiting Mr. Meek's mother and other relatives in St. Joe. They motored through bringing Mrs. Ruth Brown of Indianapolis with them.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Hollopeter, of Montpelier, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Carrington and Mr. and Mrs. John Carrington, of Ft. Wayne, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Fry. The latter named couple remained for the week.

Orders taken for dry cleaning and pressing at Milliman's barber shop. (29)

Mr. William Auten, of Jackson, Michigan, visited Monday and Tuesday with J. C. Hull and wife and Mrs. Sarah Walter and family.

S. S. Widney is visiting relatives at Auburn this week.

Rev. Coons and family returned home Friday from a three weeks visit at Crab Orchard, Illinois.

On Monday, Walter Zonker and Paul Curie went to Fort Wayne and took the examination for the officers' reserve corps.

Born to Milo Provines and wife, a 7½ pound girl on Thursday, July 12, 1917. Mrs. Provines was formerally, Miss Lucille Gee, of St. Joe.

Messrs Reuben Koch, Will Moudy and Frank Fogle of Churubusco were in town yesterday on business. Mr. Koch says that his wife is in very poor health again.

Dr. H. R. Farnham entertained at Sunday dinner his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Farnham, Sr., and brother, E. A. Farnham, Jr., and wife and Mrs. Ada Wright of Butler.

All pupils in High School and Eighth grade who are interested in a school orchestra meet Sunday afternoon at 2:30 with C. A. Woodcox, east of town.

This can be made very instructive and profitable so come and see what we can do.

Drys Are Contented.

The Rev. E. S. Shumaker, superintendent of the Indiana Anti-Saloon League, made the following statement Saturday regarding the constitutional convention decision as it affects the dry cause:

"While many lawyers may have expected it, yet to the general public the supreme court decision on last Friday, holding invalid the constitutional convention law, came in the nature of a surprise. People had generally thought that the decision of Judge Thornton of the Marion county superior court, upholding the law, would be sustained; and thousands had also believed that the supreme court would reverse the lower court's decision which had held that women would not be permitted to vote, either for delegates to the convention or on the ratification of the new constitution.

"But the constitutional convention act of the last legislature has been held invalid and there will be no convention held—at least until the tedious method indicated by the court has been affected, namely, the legislature has given a referendum on the matter to the people, the people have by majority vote ordered it, an election for delegates has been held, the convention has met and done its work, the same has been adopted by the people and the legislature has then formally received and accepted the same as the basic law of the commonwealth.

"This will probably take several years, and by that time we expect the nation, as well as our state, to have gone dry forever. However, it will be more or less a matter of keen regret that constitutional inhibition stood in the way of electing delegates this autumn, as never in the history of the commonwealth has a prospective legislative gathering given promise of being so overwhelmingly dry as this one would have undoubtedly been. On the basis of conditions as they obtained over the state we could have lost all the delegates from Marion, Lake, St. Joseph, Allen, Vigo and Vanderburg counties—something unthinkable, in fact—all the fifteen delegates at large, another thing that could not have happened, and also the delegates of five other counties of the state, where reports were very meager, and still there would have been, we believe, enough dry delegates elected who would have placed prohibition in the new constitution.

"And, separately submitted, without the help of women's votes, prohibition would have been ratified by the people by at least 150,000 majority If the women had been permitted to vote on its ratification the same would have no doubt been indorsed by 500,000 majority.

"The question, therefore, arises, 'Is prohibition lost through the decision of the supreme court holding?' Not at all. We still have on our statutes the excellent bone-dry prohibition law which becomes operative April 3, 1918. Prohibition in the state's constitution, to be effective, would have necessitated the existence of this statute anyway, and so far as effectiveness is concerned would have added nothing to its efficiency. The advantages in favor of prohibition in the state's constitution would have been two in number. 1. An assured permanency to prohibition, since it would have placed it beyond legislative repeal. 2. The tendency would have been to remove this question from the political arena by the very reason of its permanency."

Grief Kills Young Wife.

Grief stricken because her husband of only a few days had been called to his regiment, Mrs. Eva Korowitz, 19 years old, of Indianapolis, called his name several times Sunday in semi-delirium. She pleaded for him to return and live over the happiness of their short married life, although he was many miles away. She then fell back on the bed. When members of the family reached her side they found she was dead.

Mrs. Korowitz had been in ill health for some time and Coroner Poole, who investigated, said death was caused from an acute heart affliction brought on by her weakened condition and the shock she suffered by her husband going away.

Wife Deserter

Mrs. Gertrude Driscoll of Garrett, has filed a complaint in the DeKalb circuit court against her husband, John M. Driscoll, charging him with deserting her and their seven-week-old baby. The couple was married in February, 1916, and they have lived together a little over one year.

Upon leaving the plaintiff wife states that no provisions whatever were made for the support of their child. The defendant, she states, is working in the shops of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad at Garrett and receives wages of 42 cents an hour. The plaintiff asks that the husband be compelled to support the wife and baby. Mountz & Brinkerhoff of Garrett, are the attorneys for the plaintiff.

Relief Came at Last

Father Had Given Up Hope of Curing Son's Cough

Mr. A. F. Sherer, a machinist of Haviland, Ohio, says: "My son had a cough for several years. We began to think his case a hopeless one. He could get no relief until he used Glando Pine. Three bottles cured him. He is now well, and I believe Glando Pine saved his life."

Glando Pine is made to cure. It is excellent for coughs, colds, croup and bronchial affections. By getting three ounces of Glando Pine you can make one pint of excellent cough medicine. Full directions with each bottle. Once used, always used. For sale by

GLEANED from the EXCHANGES

Two Billion Only Starts.

The Liberty Loan was over-subscribed by hundreds of millions. The two-billion-dollar mark was easily reached and passed. It is well, we'll need every dollar of them bad, then some more. While the greater part of the subscription was made from patriotic motives, some of those subscribing were seeking safe and permanent investments. Yet, as large as this sum of money seems to be, it is small compared to the war loans already quoted by the two leading financial backers of each alliance.

The second British war loan of July, 1915, with interest at four and one-half per cent., lacked ten million dollars of reaching three billion six hundred million dollars. The third British loan, with interest at five per cent., raised five billion eight hundred million dollars, and has been the last negotiated by that empire. Of the French loans, the first in December, 1915, raised two billion, three hundred and fifty-odd million dollars, at five per cent.

Germany has floated five war loans. The third in September, 1915, raised a little more than two billion nine hundred million dollars, and has been the largest yet negotiated by that empire, although the two that followed in March and October, 1916, were some millions in excess of twenty-one and twenty-five hundreds of millions, respectively. All of the German loans since the beginning of the war have been at five per cent.

The total loans of the belligerent nations, according to a table recently printed in the New York Sun, reaches the enormous total of more than twenty-five billions of dollars. Taking the record of the various loans as recorded in that paper, we compute the following totals reached by the various warring nations:

Great Britain	$10,465,000,000
France	4,346,000,000
Russia	2,576,000,000
Italy	687,200,000
Total	$18,174,200,000
Germany	$10,481,934,000
Austria	3,411,540,000
Hungary	1,278,000,000
Total	$15,171,474,000

Some papers use the success of the Liberty Loan, at three and one-half per cent. interest, to urge that the government wage the war with borrowed money, saying that it is unnecessary to wring extra taxation from the people. We would use the same facts to urge that the expenses of the war be met by actual taxation, more or less, that we keep paying the war as we go. If American men must die, if conscription must be employed to secure an army, why not conscript American dollars? Certainly lives are more valuable to their owners than dollars to theirs, and if one can be taken, why not the other?

We are acting as banker to the belligerents, now, and we will need billions of dollars more. Frank H. Simons says the Allies are waiting for 1918, and America before they attempt a great decisive effort in the west—that shows how much longer the war will probably last. There will be needs of other Liberty Loans before peace comes—unless by some miracle Germany and her allies crack under their enormous burden.

Some disagreeable things just naturally have to be did! Work is one.

"The great fact that stands out above all the rest is that this is a people's war, a war for freedom and justice and self-government among all the nations of the world, a war to make the world safe for the peoples who live upon it and have made it their own."—Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States.

We need that money you owe us on subscription, now. Please send us that remittance early and thus save us further expense. You would enjoy reading your paper more, if you were paid up.

Secure Poultry License.

Poultry dealers all over DeKalb county are securing licenses for the purchase of poultry as provided in an act as passed by the last Indiana legislature. County Clerk W. W. Mountz has issued the following licenses within the past few days to dealers:

In engaging in such business the dealer is also required to keep a complete record of every purchase, the kind of fowls, number of each kind, weight, name and address of the person purchased from and date of purchase.

The following persons have made application for such licenses:

W. A. Zonker, Corunna.
L. J. Delucenay, Ashley.
W. H. Crane, Sedan.
Walter Baker, Concord.
Cyrus Fee, Waterloo.
Herbert S. Fee, Waterloo.
J. C. Bailey, St. Joe.

Junk Dealers Have License.

A number of junk licenses have been issued by County Clerk W. W. Mountz during the past week, allowing the person in whose name the license is made to purchase junk in DeKalb county for a period of one year from date. C. D. Richmond, St. Joe; Adam Rowe, Hudson; Arley Leisure, Corunna, and Oscar Hite, Auburn are the last applicants.

Disagree on Price

Following a secret conference between the state council of defense and the coal miners of Indiana, which ended unsatisfactorily for both parties, the two organizations met again Saturday afternoon at Indianapolis behind closed doors in another attempt to come to an agreement in fixing a suitable price for Indiana coal.

The coal operators indicated that an agreement fixing a price of $2.75 a ton for domestic lump would be satisfactory to them. Defense council members are said to want a maximum price for domestic lump of not more than $2.50, and $2 for mine run.

According to the opinion of a man in close touch with the coal situation, the operators are attempting to hold off an agreement fixing a standard price until after a decision is rendered by the federal authorities at Washington as it is indicated that the price to be set by the national government will not fall below $3.

Secretaries Exempted

A number of Indiana members of congress are pleased to learn that their secretaries will not be taken away from them under the selective draft.

Under the exemption regulations promulgated recently a government employe is to be exempted when his "chief" makes a request stating that his services are indispensable. As applied on Capitol Hill, the member of congress is the "chief" and when he makes the request that his secretary be relieved from service the request will be granted, according to information which the members have obtained from the provost marshal general's office.

In the Police Court.

A pair of recently married negroes were up before "de Jedge" to have their martial troubles adjusted. The groom only was questioned as to what their differences were. He said:

"Jedge, I jist can't satisfy dat gal wid money. It's money all de time, de firs thing in de mo'nin' is money an de las' thing at night is money an' Jedge, I'se tired ob bein' all de time pulled for money."

Said the Judge: "Sandy, how much have you given her?"

"I ain't done gib her none yit," was the reply.

FORMER DEKALB COUNTY MAN TELEGRAPHS THE KAISER

Frank Nelson of Indianapolis, a brother of County Auditor S. P. Nelson, has written a poem in the form of a telegram to Kaiser Wilhelm which is very appropriate at the present time. Mr. Nelson is gaining a reputation of no small proportions by his original poetry.

UNCLE SAM'S TELEGRAM

Just telegraph the kaiser and I'll tell you what to say,
I've had enough,
I've called the bluff,
My boys are on the way.

I've reached the end of patience. I'm ready now to scrap
And when I'm thru
I'll prove to you,
They'll have to change the map.

I've stood for wholesale murder just as long as I can stand,
And tho I've warned,
You've merely scorned
So now I'll take a hand.

You seem to have it in your head
That I'm afraid of you.
So to make you run
I'll take my gun
And prove it isn't true.

I've never seen a kaiser, nor a monarch nor a king,
That got me mixed
In clever tricks
And all that sort of thing.

So please accept this telegram. Believe me when I say,
One single line
Explains it fine—
"The boys are on the way."

NEWVILLE

OBITUARY

LUCINDA HART, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Friend, was born in Richland county, Ohio, March 18, 1838; and died at her home in Newville on July 12, 1917, aged 79 years, 3 months and 24 days.

In 1845, deceased came with her parents to DeKalb county, Indiana, where she resided until her death. In 1858, she was united in marriage to Jacob Morrow. To this union were born five children, one son and four daughters. The husband and one daughter preceded her to the better land. In 1871, she was married to Jacob Hart. This union was blessed with one son, Ellsworth Hart, who made a home for his mother after the death of his father and was a great comfort to her in her declining years, caring for her until the end came.

Mrs. Hart had been a member of the United Brethren church for many years, and was also a member of the home department of the U. B. Sunday school; but her health during recent years did not permit her to attend services. She was an affectionate mother, a kind neighbor and a good friend; and leaves to cherish her memory five children. They are Mrs. Eliza Hopkins, of Toledo; Mrs. Sina Oberlin, of Edon, Ohio; Mrs. Mary Thompson, of New Haven; Ellsworth Hart, of Newville. There are also twenty-three grandchildren and thirty-six great-grandchildren; one brother, John Friend, of Newville township; one sister, Mrs. Lydia Miller, of Hicksville.

Funeral services were held at the U. B. church, Newville, at 2 p. m. Saturday, Rev. Hively officiating; interment was at Evergreen cemetery, St. Joe, in care of E. R. Kinsey, of St. Joe.

Omar Ayers was a Garrett visitor, Saturday.

Miss Fern Tarney was home from Auburn over Sunday.

Born, to Mac Richmond and wife on July 9, a 9-pound boy.

The soldier boys of this place were called to Hicksville on Sunday.

Dewey Miller and Archie Cummins were Hicksville visitors, Monday evening.

Alonzo Cline and family, of Napoleon, Ohio, were Monday guests of Hugh Traxler and wife. They were en route to Michigan.

Mesdames Clara Brunson and Lettie Miller went to Ann Arbor for medical treatment on Tuesday of last week. Both returned home the latter part of the week.

Byron Miller was unfortunate enough to run a nail into his hand on Thursday. His employer, William Blaker, brought him home. He will be laid up for a few days, at least.

A large number attended the home coming at the Christian church on Sunday. Rev. Charles Reign Scoville preached both morning and afternoon, the latter being a patriotic address, in which he held the audience spellbound from 4:30 to 5:30. He was many times applauded for his patriotic statements.

Teacher. "Why does a chicken cross the road?"

Pupil. "So the farmer can collect a fancy price from the motorist."

TWO KILLED IN CROSSING ACCIDENT AT COLUMBIA CITY

Indiana's fighting forces were reduced by two Saturday night when Harry Pinchon, a member of Co. A, Indiana National Guard at Albion, and Guy Moore, a member of the Fort Wayne Battery B, were instantly killed when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a train speeding at the rate of seventy miles an hour through Columbia City.

The accident happened on the fatal crossing over the Pennsylvania lines at Columbia City. H. Barbler, a third member of the party, escaped uninjured by jumping. The machine was running at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour upon reaching the crossing and the driver of the car was unaware of the approaching train until too late to stop.

COLETOWN

Mary Koch was a Sunday guest of Mildred Pierman.

Mrs. Charles Markle visited Spencerville, Thursday evening.

Miss Jean Mumma left last week for a visit with friends at Detroit.

E. D. Nelson and family spent Sunday with Merritt Maxwell and wife.

Alvin Walker and family called on Day Wyatt and family, of Newville, on Sunday.

Mrs. Roscoe Rickett spent Saturday night with her parents, E. D. Nelson and wife.

Mesdames Hoover and [illegible], of Oakwood, Ohio, are visiting at the home of Dwight Coolidge.

Miss Carrie Teghtmeyer, of Fort Wayne, spent the latter part of last week at the home of E. S. [illegible]

Mrs. Lillie Anders returned to her home at Ney, Ohio, on Saturday, after spending a week with relatives at this place. Her [illegible], Mrs. G. W. Palmer, accompanied her.

STARTS INSPECTION OF WAGON SCALES IN INDIANA

Gasoline Measuring Station will Also be Tested by H. E. Barnard, State Commissioner of Weights and Measures.

H. E. Barnard, state commissioner of weights and measures, has started an inspection of all elevator and wagon scales of the state with the intention of having scales in perfect condition before grain from fall harvest goes to the market.

Inspectors are making a tour of the state with two automobile trucks equipped with 1,000 pound test weights, testing anything from one grain to 1,000 pounds. Heretofore the department has made a practice of shipping test weights packed in boxes to different parts of the state with very little accomplishment as it formerly took from one to two weeks to complete one test. In making a tour of the state with the trucks more ground can be covered and from three to four tests can be made in one day.

During June the department inspected forty seven wagon scales. Fifteen were incorrect indicating that about 33 per cent of these scales would not pass the test of the department. The total number of scales inspected including elevator and wagon scales was 183 with 64 or 35 per cent of these being incorrect.

The department has also ordered an inspection of gasoline measuring stations where gasoline is sold by the gallon. Reports from the stations already inspected show that the majority were giving short measure. In many cases the motorist was paying for five gallons of gasoline when he was receiving from three and one-half gallons to four gallons and when buying ten gallons was receiving but eight or nine gallons.

MAJOR A. L. MOUDY ASSIGNED TO THIRD INDIANA

A. L. Moudy, lately captain of Company K and recently appointed major was commissioned major of infantry late Friday afternoon by Harry B. Smith, adjutant-general of Indiana and assigned to the Third regiment, the one Company K is in.

Major Moudy succeeds Major Chas. B. Calvert of South Bend who just resigned from the Third. Ill health was given as the reason for his resignation.

Major Moudy will be over four companies of infantry, but it is not likely that Company K will be in this list. The four companies are supposed to be Co. E of Elkhart, Co. F of South Bend, Co. G of Portland and Co. H of Warsaw.

Membership Now 8,062.

The regular ten-day summary of the membership of the Indiana national guard, as reported to Harry B. Smith, adjutant-general, at Indianapolis, shows that the guard now comprises 8,062 men. This includes 149 officers.

General Smith believes that the total membership of the guard may be [illegible] before the troops leave their home stations for Hattiesburg, Miss., to train preparatory for service in the world war. The present strength of the guard, according to the general is approximately 2,000 more men than took part in the Spanish-American war from Indiana.

General Smith has decided to appoint Captain Herbert McBride, of Indianapolis, a former DeKalb county boy who recently returned from service with the Canadian forces on the French battle front, to command company L, the new infantry company being raised in Indianapolis for the new Fourth regiment. Captain McBride will resign August 1 as instructor in trench warfare at Culver, Ind., and will take his place with the Indiana troops, where he will be an extremely valuable asset because of his experience in the European war.

The Rev. Frank James, pastor of the Christian church at Wabash, has been appointed chaplain in the Indiana guard and probably will be assigned either to the new Fourth infantry regiment or to the artillery regiment.

Ask For Citizenship.

Two more men of foreign birth, both residing in DeKalb county, have signified their intentions of becoming American citizens. They state that they desire to serve no other potentate than Uncle Sam by swearing off all allegiance to their former country.

Alfred E. Wilbur, aged 47 years, of Ashley, was born in Delhi, Ontario, September 9, 1864, and in 1887, October 27, he came to the United States, landing at Port Huron, Michigan.

The second application is that of Chris Sherman, aged 67 years, of Garrett, now employed as car repairer at the B. & O. shops. He states that he was born in Schainwaldt, Germany, March 15, 1850, and came from Amsterdam, Germany, on the "Stello" vessel, landing at the New York harbor, May 15, 1882. Two years after his arrival in America he made application for citizenship but his papers have been lost and he is compelled to take out his first papers again.

Happenings of the World Tersely Told

U. S.—Teutonic War News

War appropriations of about $3,000,000,000 in addition to the enormous sums already appropriated or sought, will be asked of congress at Washington is estimates which administration officials have given notice will be submitted next week.

* * *

Formal announcement was made by the war department at Washington that 687,000 men will be selected from those registered on June 5 for the first national war army, and to fill vacancies in the National Guard and the regular army.

* * *

Secretary Baker announced at Washington that in the drawing to select men for draft into the war army numbers will be drawn representing every one of the nearly 10,000,000 registered, so that each man may know the order in which he is liable to be called for service.

* * *

Rudolph Haecht, cousin of Otto H. Kahn, the banker and prominent in society, was taken into custody at New York by federal secret service men and will be interned on Ellis island for the balance of the war.

* * *

Dispatches to Washington announcing the destruction of the Kansan by a German submarine, said that four members of the crew were missing, but all the armed naval guard was safe. The vessel was valued at $3,000,000.

* * *

Peace without annexation is not acceptable to Germany. Germany can win if she holds out. Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg so declared in a speech before the main committee of the reichstag at Berlin, according to the Lokal Anzeiger. "I consider it my duty to remain as chancellor for the protection of the fatherland. I cannot give Germany's peace terms now," he said.

* * *

While becalmed, the American barkentine Hildegard, 622 tons, was sunk by a submarine. The crew was landed.

* * *

Domestic

A child was killed, a number of people injured and thousands of dollars' worth of damage was done at Fairmont, Ill., by a storm which attained cyclonic violence. The three-year-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Pritchard lost her life and the mother suffered a broken arm.

* * *

Thirty men were injured, several probably fatally, in rioting between Americans and foreigners employed in the lead mines at Flat River, Mo. Several hundred men formed an unofficial posse and have undertaken to drive from the town every foreign laborer known to sympathize with I. W. W. agitators or with German agents believed to have been active in the district.

* * *

More than 1,100 alleged Industrial Workers of the World, deported from Bisbee, Ariz., were put aboard 24 cattle cars and sent to New Mexico. The men were driven from the city by deputy sheriffs and about 2,000 armed men, members of an organization known as the "Citizens' Protective league." Two men were killed.

* * *

"A reign of terror" has struck northern Idaho. Industrial Workers of the World are spreading all over the state. Two thousand troops are needed in northern Idaho to cope with the gigantic fight being put up by the I. W. W. to prevent the United States from getting 2,000,000,000 feet of lumber necessary to carry on its war program. This was the gist of the recommendation made by the state defense council in its report to the secretary of war.

* * *

The Nebraska council of defense issued a statement at Lincoln, charging "certain professors of the University of Nebraska" and "the conspicuous representatives of the Lutheran church" in the state with "disloyal activity and passivity that has tended to give aid and comfort to Germany as an enemy."

* * *

Names for four of the cantonment camps at which the national army will be trained were designated by the war department at Washington as follows: Second division, Yaphank, L. I., Camp Long Island; Third division, Wrightstown, N. J., Camp Wrightstown; Fourth division, Annapolis Junction, Md., Camp Admiral; Fifth division, Petersburg, Va., Camp Virginia.

* * *

The United States government has decided to take out of the I. W. W. organization that part of it which is German or dominated by Germanic influence, according to announcement at Seattle, Wash., by United States District Attorney Clay Allen. The men will be interned.

* * *

Returns indicate the election of John M. Baer of Fargo, N. D., the nonpartisan candidate, as congressman to succeed the late Henry T. Helgesen. Baer has a majority of approximately 2,000.

A petition for a receiver for the Pugh Stores company, capitalized at $20,000,000, and operating 89 stores in six states, was filed in the superior court at Chicago by stockholders.

* * *

Washington

Secretary McAdoo at Washington ordered that no further information regarding shipping be given out by customs officials. All such information hereafter will be under direction of the department of commerce in order to eliminate conflicting reports.

* * *

William H. Gale, former American consul general at Munich, has arrived to take charge of the consulate at Copenhagen. Edward D. Winslow, the present consul general, has been summoned to Washington.

* * *

Steel manufacturers have agreed to operate their plants for the benefit of the government until a satisfactory price for their products can be arranged, it was learned at Washington.

* * *

Unanimous consent to begin final voting on the food control bill and all amendments not later than 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon, July 21, was given in the senate at Washington and the cloture motion was withdrawn.

* * *

President Wilson appealed to the country's business interests to put aside every selfish consideration and to give their aid to the nation as freely as those who go out to offer their lives on the battlefield. In a statement at Washington addressed to the coal operators and manufacturers he gave assurances that just prices will be paid by the government and the public during the war, but warned that no attempt to extort unusual profits will be tolerated.

Game Fishing

TROLLING.

My Dear Buck:

After a few hours casting, when your rod begins to feel like a piece of lead, just slip into an easy position and take a little whirl at trolling, besides resting up your casting arm and putting it in shape for a double-header in the afternoon, you stand a mighty good chance of landing some fine fish with the least amount of exertion up to the actual period of fighting the fish. Trolling is sure the lazy fisherman's delight and the fat man's preference.

Braided Lines Best.

The best line for trolling is the braided silk or linen, as the twisted lines cannot be used successfully on account of the kinking caused by the twisting and turning of the line, which cannot altogether be avoided. In assembling your rig for trolling don't be afraid to use swivels; they help keep the line from twisting. In rigging up the spoon hook for trolling, which is the most commonly used, loop the line on a swiveled wire leader, a six or eight inch one is plenty long enough, and at the end of the leader snap on the spoon, which for ordinary fishing for wall-eyed pike, or bass should not be larger than a No. 3, while for pike, pickerel or musky a No. 4 to No. 6 is plenty large enough. One of the big mistakes in using the trolling spoon is to select a No. 12 in the single spoon or a No. 10 in the tandem style, with a bunch of feathered hooks on the end large enough to scare any fish on first sight. Some of the finest musky and pike have been caught on a little old No. 3 spoon with a shiner or pork rind fluttering on the hook. Take a No. 6 single spoon or a No. 4 tandem with a nice-sized black sucker, chub or shiner hooked behind, and you have an ideal pike or musky trolling rig. Top this off with a small piece of red flannel right in front of the bait, and they sure cannot resist it.

Troll Deep for Bass.

When the bass have left the shore waters for the cooler deep water and you have failed to coax them up with the cast, just locate a bar, twenty or thirty feet under water and take a shot at trolling for them with a bronze-colored underwater minnow. Take the small size, about a two-inch minnow, let out about 75 feet of line, and troll deep. For clear water use the bronze or copper color, and for dull days try the aluminum. For an artificial, this little old bait is sure a winner. A mud minnow, frog or pork rind strip with a little red yarn and a No. 3 spoon makes a trolling outfit that looks good to the bass.

There is one little angle to the trolling game that some of the sure-enough fishermen have overlooked, and that is to troll with flies for bass. Take a nine-foot gut leader, loop on three flies, slip three split-shot sinkers, about No. 1, on the leader three feet apart to keep the flies one or two feet below the surface, and troll along very slowly and quietly. Let out 25 yards of line and strike right after the bass strikes. A good combination of flies for trolling is the Coachman, Silver Doctor and the red or brown Hackle. Trolling with flies for bass might be called the highest art of that end of the fishing game, as it requires more skill and attention than the ordinary run of trolling.

Cut Out the Speed.

In trolling for musky, pike or pickerel 75 to 100 feet of line is plenty to run out behind the boat. At this distance the lure is far enough away from the boat and the line is easier handled in landing the fish. The boat should make about two to three miles an hour, which is speed enough to keep the spoon turning and at the same time give the fish a chance to see your bait. Always troll with your rod straight out behind the boat, never out the side at a right angle; this is treatment any fishing rod would resent. A mighty good thing for the rod is to use a steel rod shortener, which gives you a dandy trolling rod for about 20 cents. Just slip out the first joint, put the shortener in the grip, the second joint in the shortener, and you run no chances with your bait-casting rod. One big point to remember in trolling with a spoon is the fact that a spoon must be spinning around in order to flash under water and attract the fish. If you will keep your eye on the rod tip occasionally you can easily tell whether the spoon is turning around by the steady bobbing of the tip. When it quits bobbing you'd better reel in and clean off the weeds. A hookful of weeds is not much inducement for a fish to strike.

For wall-eyed pike put a dipsey sinker on your rig and troll deep, and if you get a strike, troll back and forth over the same water, as they feed in schools. A fine artificial bait for the wall-eye is the underwater Dowagiac with the green mottled back and white belly. DIXIE.

HOW ABOUT THE REVENUE?

"Upon one occasion when I was engaged in a prohibition campaign in Canada," says Prof. John A. Nicholls of Boston, "there came into the county seat a good-natured Irishman, the possessor of a farm in an adjoining town. One of the would-be liquor sellers met him and at once proceeded to pour forth his tale of woe. 'Pat,' said he, 'I hear that you are going to vote to continue this prohibition law. Now, that means the ruin of the county; grass will grow in the streets, and business will be ruined. You have a farm over in Melbourne, and you will not be able to sell your butter, your eggs, or your turkeys.' With woe-begone countenance he described the scene, and told of the awful calamities that would befall the county unless licenses were granted to men to sell liquor.

"Pat listened to the story with a peculiar expression upon his face, then, with a comical twist of his eye, with one question, he punctured the bubble. 'Bedad,' said he, 'and would they take away the mouth of you, then?' The demand for food would still continue—and Pat felt that his farm was safe.

"Grass will grow in the streets, say the liquor advocates, and the schools will be closed, unless whisky can be sold upon the street corners. Well, if it is grass or whisky, I am in favor of grass. A cow will eat grass, give milk, and keep someone alive, but a saloon cannot run and do business without debasing someone and adding to the sum of human misery and sorrow."

PERSONAL LIBERTY.

What is to become of the fundamental doctrine of personal liberty; that a man may eat and drink what he pleases? What is to become of the theory that the development of standard and sterling qualities in man can only be accomplished by stress and strain and temptation? These are serious questions that go to the root of human progress.

The right of the individual to eat and drink what he pleases and wear the clothes that he likes is restricted by the fundamental principle that a man's actions shall not threaten evil to society at large. If one insists on eating poisoned food and giving it to his family, he threatens the existence of the state. If one should choose to walk the streets naked, he would offend the rights of other people, and thus threaten society. Doctor Mary Walker found that woman's clothes hampered her activities as a war nurse. She had, however, to get an act of congress to permit her to wear a man's garb undisturbed. This may seem a silly thing. In so far as I can see, a woman does not threaten society in any way by wearing a man's garb. She only threatens convention, and yet the law regulates wearing apparel in the interests of decency, propriety, and good morals. The drinking of intoxicating beverages is a threat not only to the man who drinks, but to society at large, and thus, without interfering with the fundamental rights of the individual or restricting a proper personal liberty, the state may say, "Thou shalt not drink."

CUT OFF THE SUPPLY.

It is estimated that the traffic teaches four out of five of all American boys to drink liquor in some form before they reach their majority. Deny to this liquor traffic the channels of trade; do it nationally. You get, of course, some results when you do it locally. You get larger results when you do it as a county. You get still larger and better results when you do it as a state, but do it nationally, and ultimately internationally! Dry up the sources of supply.—Richmond Pearson Hobson.

NO DRINK ON KING'S TABLE.

It is no longer etiquette to place wines or liquor on the table when King George is a guest, according to the London Spectator, which is conducting an active campaign for prohibition during the war. The king's order barring the use of alcoholic beverages in his palaces while the war continues is being adhered to rigidly. No wine is served, even at dinner parties at Buckingham Palace or Windsor.

PROOF POSITIVE.

The brutalizing effect of beer-alcoholism is shown most clearly by the fact that in Germany crimes of personal violence, particularly dangerous bodily injuries, occur most frequently in Bavaria where there is the highest consumption of beer.—Dr. Hugo Hoppe, Famous Nerve Specialist of Koenigsberg, Germany.

POLICEMEN FOR PROHIBITION.

Writing in the New York Times, an official of the uniformed police force of the city of New York declares that, with few exceptions, the rank and file of the 10,000 members of the New York department are advocates of prohibition. "Only a few years ago," he says, "the prohibitionists were laughed at and the policeman who did not show signs of liquor some time during a month was an exception. Now, the policeman who shows signs of liquor at any time is the exception."

MRS. KIESO SICK SEVEN MONTHS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Aurora, Ill.—"For seven long months I suffered from a female trouble, with severe pains in my back and sides until I became so weak I could hardly walk from chair to chair, and got so nervous I would jump at the slightest noise. I was entirely unfit to do my housework, I was giving up hope of ever being well, when my sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took six bottles and today I am a healthy woman able to do my own housework. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and find out for themselves how good it is."—Mrs. CARL A. KIESO, 596 North Ave., Aurora, Ill.

The great number of unsolicited testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory, many of which are from time to time published by permission, are proof of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, in the treatment of female ills.

Every ailing woman in the United States is cordially invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for special advice. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

What Responsibility Does.

The saying runs that as soon as a lieutenant is made a commander he begins to carry a stick, and as soon as a commander becomes a captain he "turns religious." For justification of the latter part of this assertion there exists the undoubted fact that naval captains are mostly serious minded men who give some thought to the greater things of life. Possibly their hours of loneliness may conduce to this frame of mind, though for the most part their leisure hours are given up to study of matters connected with their calling. One well-known captain there was who used to hold prayer meetings, which any member of the ship's company could attend. "Remember there are no rates to be picked up here," the captain would warn them before the meetings started, meaning that anyone who came there hoping to curry favor and thus get promotion would be disappointed. And in this the captain was always as good as his word.—London Mail.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine — double strength — is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

He Was Cured.

Once there was a little boy who stole sugar. So strong was his craving for sugar that half his mother's time was taken up watching the sugar bowl. One morning, however, she filled a big tumbler full of sugar and gave it to the little boy and told him to eat it all. The boy took a spoon and started in. He ate about a third of it before he got enough. His mother insisted that he eat some more—it was all his to eat, and she'd box his ears if he didn't eat it. She did box his ears, and he ate a little more, but presently he slipped the tumbler under his chair and slipped out to play. When he came back, though, the tumbler was there waiting for him. He ate a little, but it wasn't good. He said it "was too sweet." Every day for a month that tumbler was by his plate at the table, on a chair by his bedside, in the closet with his playthings—everywhere he found that tumbler. The flies swarmed about it, and the ants came, but still it was "too sweet." That tumbler never was finished up. The boy is an old man now, and takes his coffee straight. Gooseberry pie is the only kind he likes. All other kinds are "too sweet."—Kansas City Star.

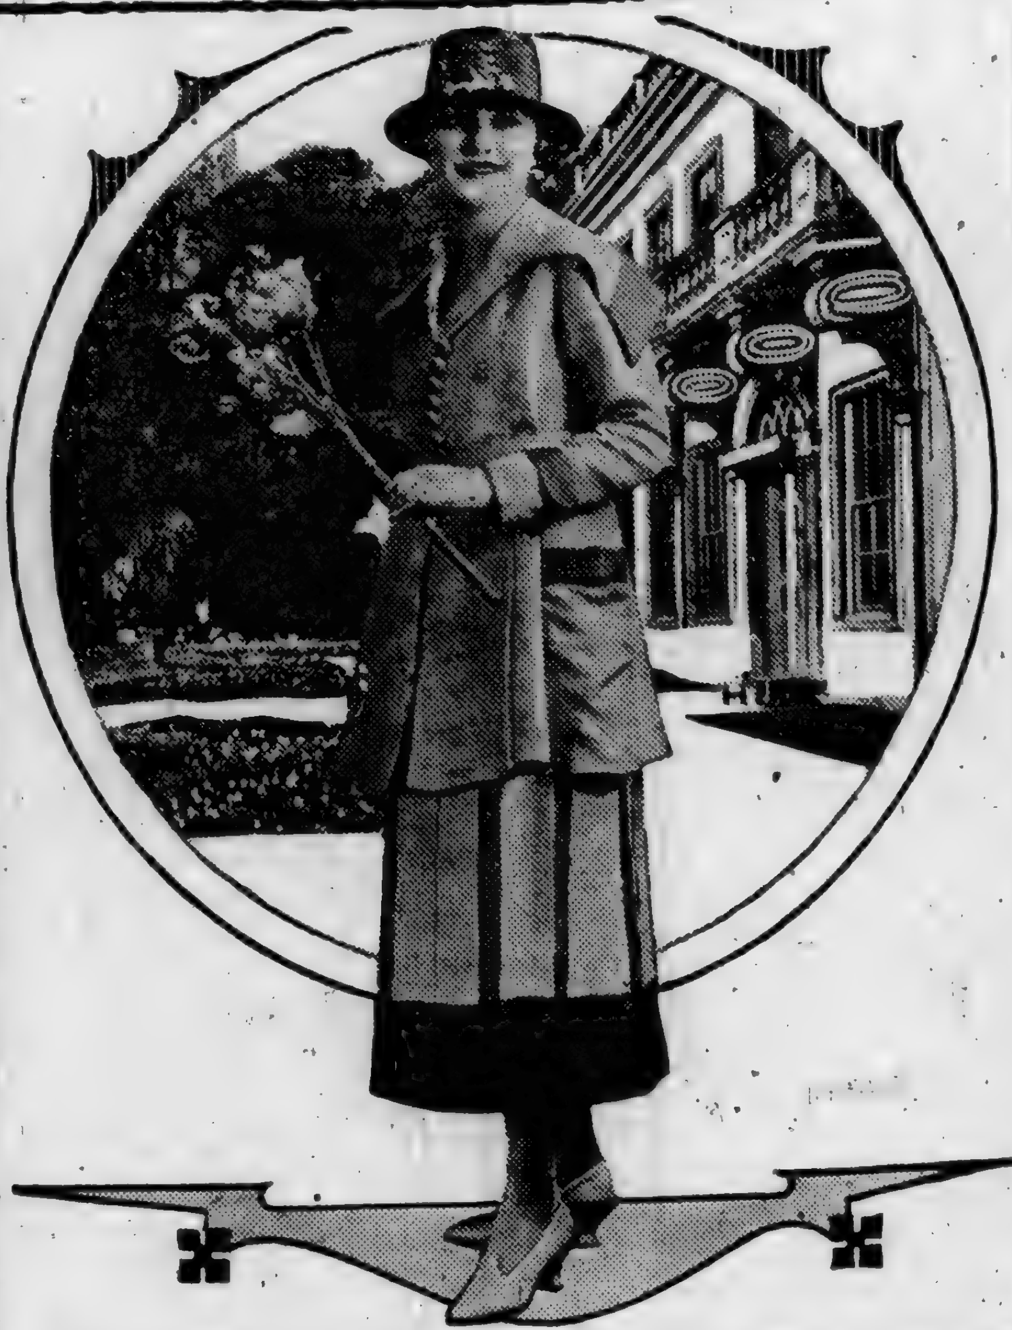
New Happenings in Pongee Suits



Just what will happen to the pongee street suit this year is a question that receives a very satisfactory answer in the latest arrival in that line. It is a street suit in which pongee in the natural color is bordered with the same silk in black. Those who aspire to smart styles for midsummer will recognize an excellent achievement in this combination. Black used in just the right proportion with sedate colors, gives them a distinction that nothing can excel.

In this suit the skirt is a forerunner of promised styles for autumn. It is a little shorter than spring models. It hangs in the most uncompromising of straight lines, emphasized by box plaits, very thoroughly pressed into place. The black pongee is set against the natural light ecru color in a border about eight inches wide.

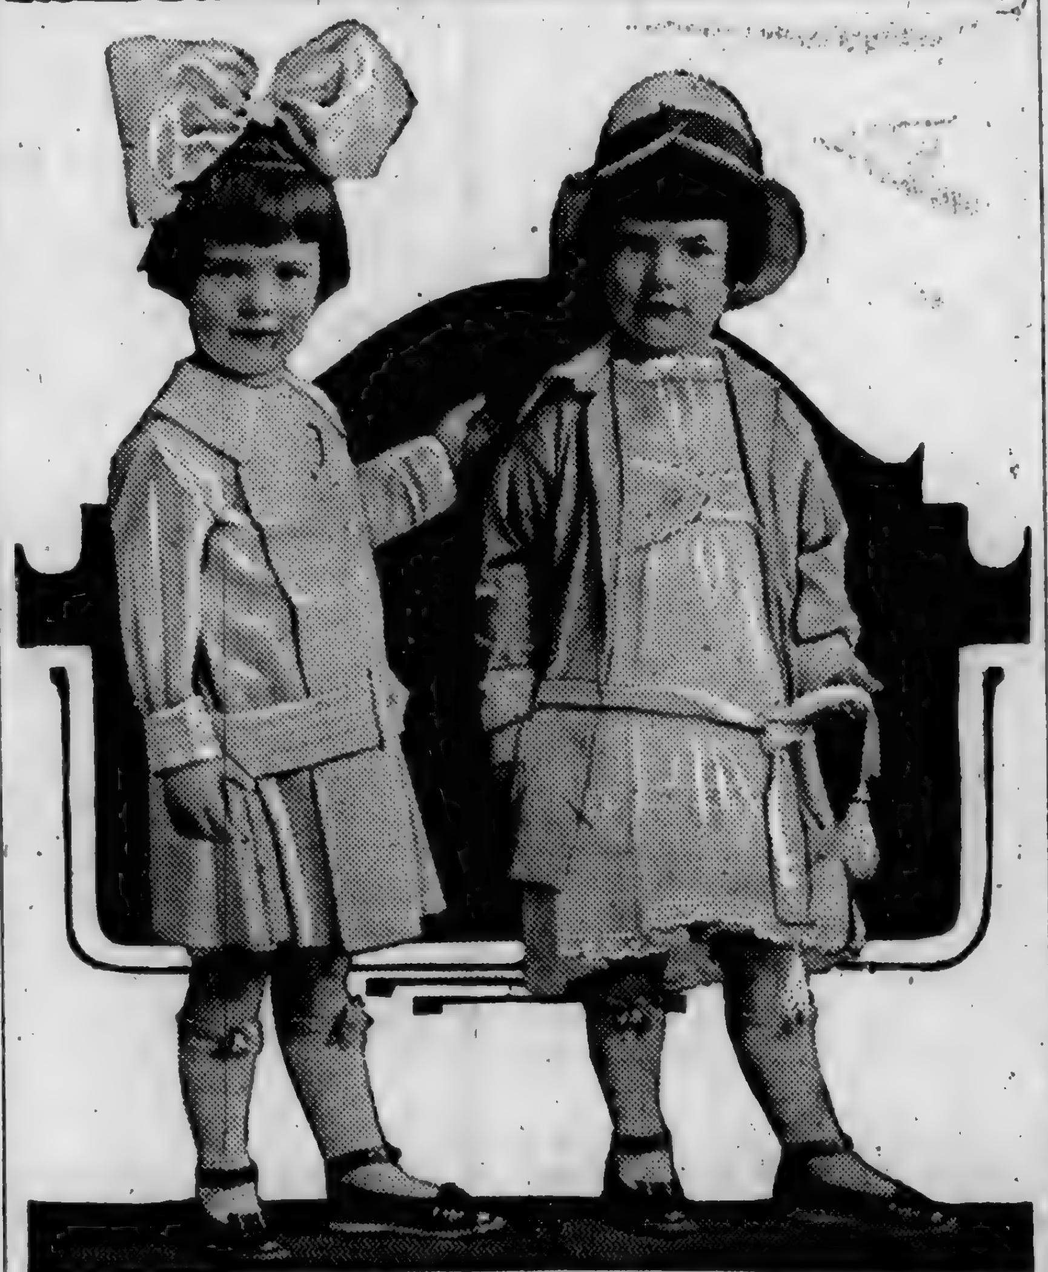
The coat is plain as to its body, with a panel effect at the front, below the belt, which is of pongee. There are flat pockets at each side, faced with black at the top and cut in a diagonal across the bottom. Straight cuffs, turned back at the top, are faced with black also. The wide epaulette collar is cut into revers at the front and bordered with black across the back. In the buttons the order of things is reversed and the natural pongee becomes the border. They fasten under loops of silk.

Just the right sort of hat for this suit might be either a panama or bangkok trimmed with overlapping bows of narrow ribbon, like that shown in the picture.

Gingham for Golf.

When all's said and done it's a nice thing to be able to throw a dress you have played golf in all day bodily into the soapsuds, and that is why plaid gingham is having such a success at fashionable golf links. These cotton dresses are as simple as can be made shirtwaist style, with rather scant skirts tucked so that they hold their place. Some have Turkish petticoats beneath of the same material or of milanese silk in color to match the groundwork.

For All Hours of the Day



For every day and out of doors the little miss in city or country cannot have anything better suited to her needs than the plain gingham dress pictured here. It is cut on boyish lines and worn over bloomers of the same material. It has a panel down the front, buttoning to one side with white buttons and striped collar, cuffs, and belt of gingham in the same color of the dress, with white stripes.

There are some less robust, but very useful and pretty little dresses made of chambray in pink or blue, light yellow and pale green, with short bodices of white dimity and the chambray skirts either plaited or shirred on to them. Their charms for the youthful are re-enforced by pockets enticingly decorated with little chicks, or birds, or even baby rabbits and squirrels, done in cross-stitch embroidery. Sleeves in these dresses are short, simple needlework stitches, the best liked of all embellishments. Cross-stitch, feather stitch, buttonhole stitch, and just plain running stitches in colored cotton, seem exactly suited to the childish air of these little frocks.

English nainsook, with little tucks and val lace used for adornment, is for the present favored for the daintiest of dresses for little folks. Silk sweater-coats, like that shown in the picture, are almost replicas of those that grown-ups wear with their dresses. This one is in blue, with white collar, cuffs and sash, and besides making its wearer happy—being so much like a grown-up lady in it—it tempers the cool air of morning or evening, or the beach breezes to the white clad little lady.

Beach Capes.

For seashore wear, says the Dry Goods Economist, many silk capes have been brought out in plain and novelty tussah, in taffetas and in satins, together with some sheer silk crepes. These "beach capes," as they are frequently called, are being made up in all the popular colorings, as well as in dainty evening shades. The very smartest capes are of satin and are fur lined.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 22

SENNACHERIB IN DAYS OF JUDAH.

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 19:20-22, 28-37.

GOLDEN TEXT—God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.—Psa. 46:1.

Last week's lesson was a great picture of the reform of the nation. Today we have another picture which needs to be carefully put before the children. It is a national picture of a ruler and the invasion of his country. In reality it reveals the principles which are the same today, and which affect the lives of boys and girls as well as men; the dangers, temptations, the need of prayer, the need of a life of faith in God, the care of a heavenly father, deliverance and victory. It is a great thing for any nation or any individual to have such a marvelous experience of God's salvation. It occurred probably B. C. 701, the latter part of Hezekiah's reign. Assyria on the north was enlarging its borders and seeking to overcome Judea. Read parallel accounts in II Kings 18; II Chron. 32 and Isa. 36:37. We have on the Taylor cylinder an account by Sennacherib of the victory over Hezekiah, found in Nineveh in 1830 and now in the British museum.

I. The Situation. When the great Sargon died at Nineveh, the Syrian governments sought to assert their independence. It was a good time for Hezekiah also to assert his independence. Accordingly they refused to pay the customary tribute to Assyria. For a time Sennacherib was too busy attending to other portions of the empire to pay much attention to the city of Jerusalem. Later, however, he subdued the cities on the coast and threatened Egypt itself.

II. The Supplication (vv. 20-22). God does things because we pray. There was more power in Hezekiah's prayer than there was in his army. Through his prayers he laid 185,000 of his enemies in the grave. Hezekiah's God saved his people out of the hand of Sennacherib (v. 19), God did it. One great reason why he heard Hezekiah's prayer was because it was for God's own glory that Hezekiah asked (v. 19). One great reason why so many of our prayers are not answered is because they are selfish—seeking our own gratification and not God's honor (James 4:3 R. V.). Rending his clothes and putting on sackcloth, Hezekiah went to the house of God while his messengers sought out the prophet Isaiah. From II Chron. 32:20 we find that Isaiah joined with Hezekiah in his earnest prayer (Matt. 18:19, 20), thus the king and prophet worked as well as prayed. They showed their faith by their work (James 2:17, 18). At the same time they waited upon God for an answer, not because God was unwilling to bestow good things, or must be importuned, but that his gifts may bring the greater benefit. He sometimes delays his answer, thereby fitting us to receive them because of the intensity of our desire and to appreciate the things he has to bestow. God is as ready to say to us as to Hezekiah, "Thy prayer is heard," if we will not meet the conditions of prevailing prayer (I John 3:22; I John 5:14; Rom. 8:26.27).

III. God's Glorious Deliverance (vv. 23-37). God permitted the Assyrians to attack and they thus imagined they were having their own will and could do as they pleased, but when his "rod" had done its work, they found the difference. The God against whom they raved guided them as with a "bridle" and turned them back to Assyria. Sennacherib considered himself more than a match for God (Ch. 18:23-25) but had to return like a conquered beast of burden with God's "hook" in his nose and bridle on his lips. God allows the enemies of his people to go a certain length in order that his people may be humbled and seek him. Then he puts forth his hand and says, "This far and no further." Jehovah gives us the same promise he gave Hezekiah, "I will defend this city." Is not the city of Jerusalem that God defends more safe than a city defended by an army? (Psa. 46:5, 6; 27:1). God had promised David that his kingdom should not perish, for in it lay the hope of the world and his plans for the redemption of mankind. Not because of the people did God defend the city, but because of his oath. This is a most dramatic picture, the mysterious destruction of the Assyrian army (vv. 35, 36). The Lord sent his angel, literally his "messenger," who applied his own plan for the accomplishment of his purpose.

There is a sort of a grim irony in the ending of Sennacherib's career. He who had so defiantly asked, "Who are they among all the gods of the country that have delivered their country out of mine hand," is led back to the house of his own god whom he imagines to be so potent to worship and in that very presence is slain by the hands of one of his own sons. The importance of this event is shown by the fact that it is referred to in three books of the Bible and probably referred to another, occupying seven or eight chapters, besides being recorded on the great cylinder to which reference is made.

Puts Price on Bed.

That the ears of little children are quick to pick up the strange terms they hear their parents use is indicated in an incident in the household of Judge Deery of city court, says the Indianapolis News.

Mrs. Deery had been shopping with her little daughter and when they returned home, the daughter started to "sell" everything in the house as she had seen the clerks do.

When she reached a bedroom she announced that she would sell the bed for "ten dollars and costs and penal farm."

Marine Life.

According to C. R. Shoemaker of the United States National museum, the Danish West Indies offer an interesting field for study in marine life. In one of his expeditions to St. Thomas he found among other specimens, great numbers of a beautiful dark purplish red crab and many species of small, vividly-colored fish swimming about the coral. These were in shades of red and blue, and through the clear waters were beautiful objects.

HE FOUND WAY TO WAKE HER

Minister, Annoyed by Woman Who Persisted in Sleeping During Service, Had a Bright Idea.

The minister of L—— is one of those quaintly humorous characters of whom there are many in the church. He has a deal to contend with in his preaching, and the chief matter he has to combat is sleep.

Many of his hearers begin to doze the minute he starts preaching. The minister arranged with the verger that in future he shold endeavor to waken sleepers from the pulpit.

He managed this successfully for some time, but one Sunday he failed to rouse an old woman, a well-known innkeeper of the parish. At length, just as he was about to yield, a bright idea struck him.

"I'll waken her this time," he exclaimed.

Striking the side of the pulpit firmly with his clenched fist, he called out, "Anither pint here, Janet!" whereupon the good old innkeeper started up and replied, "Coming, sir; coming!"

From LeRoy Hailfley:—

FORT MYERS, Va., July 7, 1917.

DEAR AUNT KATE:—

Received your letter today. I have been watching the mail every day this week for a letter from you, as I was sure you would write.

I should have written to you sooner than I did; but neglect on my part, more than anything else, I guess, is the only reason that I can give, although for a time I was quite busy; also, I was moved from one place to another, and I didn't know just when I would be located permanently. Lots of mail has been sent to me which I never received. I suppose it was because I was moved around and they lost track of me.

Well, Aunt Kate, camp life isn't so bad after all. If we go across the water, we may see conditions worse than now. Something may turn up, though, that will prevent us from going across; but if we go across and get into the fight, I will try and play my part the best I can.

Many temptations present themselves in camp life, but every time I say no. It is much easier for me to refuse than to accept and bear the burden of a guilty conscience. I know how my friends judge me at home; also it is for my benefit to refuse; and, by so doing, I will not destroy my health.

Many of the boys in camp use liquor of all kinds. When I'm around where they are drinking, they offer me a drink. I thank them and say: "No, I do not use it." I don't believe anybody can have a clear brain if they allow themselves to be under the influence of liquor.

I have been assigned to the battery as a mechanic. I think I can be as useful to my country in that way as to be behind a gun and help to fire it. The mechanics have to repair the guns in case they become broken in battle. If we should get into a battle, I would be on the firing line, anyway. At present, I haven't much to do, so I pass the time in sleeping and eating; also writing to friends. I sure enjoy getting letters from friends that I used to have the pleasure of being amongst. I am hoping that some day I will have the privilege of returning to them. If I'm slain in battle, I hope to meet my friends on the other shore.

We have a large Y. M. C. A. building here, which is surely a great help to the soldier boys. We three boys from St. Joe surely appreciate the privilege of having a Y. M. C. A. in camp. It gives us a place to go and write, read or pass away part of our spare time playing games. The Y. M. C. A. supplies the boys with any kind of game they wish to play. The Y. M. C. A. surely is playing a great part in the war of today.

Well, Aunt Kate, we boys are all feeling fine and are enjoying ourselves. We are only about 4 miles from Washington, D. C. We go there once in a while to spend the evening. Washington, D. C., is a qery beautiful place.

There is going to be a special show at the Y. M. C. A. tonight. It is about time for the show to start. So I will have to stop writing for this time.

May we boys be remembered in the prayers of our friends at St. Joe.

An early reply from you or anyone else at St. Joe will be very much appreciated.

Give my regards to all. Your friend, LEROY H.

Fathers' Day Is Observed

Fathers' day was observed at the Lutheran Sunday school on Sunday, the men having charge of the exercises; and an interesting time was the result. Rev. REGISTRATION OF VOTERS STOPPED

Registration Board of DeKalb County Receives Telegram to Discontinue Registration for constitutional Election.

NEARLY 3,000 HAD QUALIFIED

Supreme Court in Decision Friday Afternoon Did Not Pass on Clause of Act in Regard to Voting of Women.

Following the decision of the supreme court of the state of Indiana holding the law calling a constitutional convention in Indiana next January unconstitutional, the DeKalb County Registration board received a telegram Saturday asking that the registration of men and women voters in DeKalb county be stopped immediately.

The registration of voters for the constitutional convention had been in progress in DeKalb county since the 11th of June and in the neighborhood of 3,000 voters had registered in the county up until the time the registration was stopped Saturday.

The board of registration commissioners in DeKalb county was made up of W. D. Stump as the democratic member, Will Stonebraker as the republican member, and County Clerk W. W. Mountz. The board taking the registration was composed of H. T. Judson, democrat, as chief clerk, and Walter Bishop, republican, as deputy clerk. Miss Mary Baxter also assisted the board several days in the registration work as a deputy.

The telegram to stop the registration came Saturday from Attorney-General Stansbury.

Costs $800 in DeKalb County

When the telegram came to the local board to close the work 2,857 had registered in DeKalb county. Of these, however, the papers of sixteen had not been filed as yet and the names of 315 women who registered before a notary public at Garrett did not reach here in time to be properly registered.

The registration has meant quite an expense to the taxpayers of DeKalb county from which there will be no return whatever inasmuch as the supreme court has held the law unconstitutional. The expense in DeKalb county alone amounts to $700 or $800 for the salaries and supplies used by the registration clerks in their work.

The decision of the court declared that the act was unconstitutional and void because the legislature has no power to call such a convention without first having been directed so to do by the people. The decision holds that the legislature has no inherent power, and that its powers are circumscribed by the provisions of the present state and federal constitutions.

The original suit in the constitutional convention case was filed in the Marion county superior court by Henry W. Bennett, of Indianapolis, who asked for an injunction against Ed Jackson, secretary of state, and all the county clerks and sheriffs in the state, to restrain them from carrying out the provisions of the law by the election of delegates at a special election to be held in September. The complaint also asked that women be prevented from voting for the election of delegates at a special election for delegates on the ground that the legislature had no right to extend the franchise to women for such purpose.

Judge W. W. Thornton, of the superior court, decided against Bennett on the constitutional convention proposition, holding that the legislature had power to call the convention.

He held that the law was constitutional. He also decided, however, that women had no right to vote for delegates to the convention. Mr. Bennett appealed from the former part of the decision, and the defendants appealed from the part which held that women had no right to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention.

While the supreme court holds that the constitutional convention law is unconstitutional and void, it does not decide the question in regard to the right of women to vote, because, the court says, the decision of the first question makes unnecessary a decision of the latter question.

Suffrage Leaders Disappointed.

While the decision comes as a disappointment to leaders of the suffrage movement and prohibitionists, though they still have statutory suffrage and prohibition, and to others who have favored an early revision of the constitution, there has been a strong sentiment among the people as a whole against holding a convention in war times when the public mind has much to think about besides defects in the constitution.

However, the sentiment possibly favored a postponement of the convention to peace times rather than against holding one at all, though as recent as three years ago when the question was submitted to the voters a staggering majority of more than 100,000 was cast against the convention plan.

It is estimated that the convention set for next January would have cost the state between $500,000 and $2,200,000, and the prospect of such a heavy expense against the state in these extraordinary times was a factor in making quite a change in public sentiment since the enactment of the law calling the convention.

In knocking out the convention the supreme court decided that the general assembly has no authority to call a convention to revise the constitution of the state or to make a new one without first submitting the matter to the voters of the state and receiving an affirmative answer, and also that the general assembly had no authority to call a convention against the will of the people as expressed by the vote of 1914 on that subject.

It was only last Tuesday that the supreme court heard the arguments in the case. Immediate consideration of the case was given by the court because of the public desire that an early decision be rendered in view of the fact that the time for electing delegates was not far distant.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Ergot in Volunteer Rye

County Agent Archart reports the finding of ergot on volunteer rye in wheat fields throughout the county. It has not extended to rye fields nor to wheat fields. This is a menace to health, as can be seen in the following, taken from Webster's dictionary:

"Ergot is a fungus disease of rye and other cereals, in which grains are replaced by black or dark purple club-shaped bodies. Ergot contains several poisonous compounds, and the use of flour made from ergoted grain is often attended with serious effects."

The county agent advises farmers to examine the rye growing among wheat and see if it has any ergot upon it and if there is any, to pull up and burn the affected stalks.

Samples of ergoted rye can be seen at the News office.

Douglas on The Silo.

"Never in the history of the country can a silo be built for as few bushels of corn as now," said M Douglas, of the Council of Defense, a $250 silo can be built for less than 150 bushels of corn.

Mr. Douglas will be in DeKalb County two days in the interest of silo building and will speak at several meetings which have been arranged by County Agent A. Z. Arehart. Mr. Douglas is a successful farmer of Flatrock, Shelby County, and has used silos for the past 20 years.

On Monday evening at Coburn's Corners, Mr. Douglas spoke before a meeting of the farmers' club at that place, Mr. Harry Waltz being president of the club. An interesting meeting was held, about sixty people being present.

The scarcity of wheat, the extra demand which will be made on the United States for export wheat and the high price of corn has caused the government to figure on a cheap feed for live stock thus releasing more corn for export, says Mr. Douglas. The silo answers the question best.

The building of a silo is of great benefit, both to the man and the government from a money standpoint. The State council of Defense will reach every county in the state before September in order to tell of the many benefits which are derived from the use of silos.

The Council of Defense wishes to see 5,000 silos built by fall. They really want to see twice that many built, but there are only 5,000 silos available. Mr. Douglas gave the following reasons why every farmer who keeps live stock should have a silo.

1. The silo preserves the palatability and succulence of the green corn plant for winter feeding.
2. It helps to make use of the entire corn plant.
3. The silo increases the live stock capacity of the farm.
4. Silage is a good summer food when pastures are short.
5. Because of the small amount of ground space required by the silo it is an economical means of storing forage.
6. The silo prevents waste of corn stalks, leaves and husks, which contain about two-fifths of the feeding value of the corn plant.
7. The silo located near the feed ranger is an assurance of having feed near at hand in stormy as well as fair weather.
8. The silo assists in reducing the cost of grains in fattening cattle and sheep.
9. Silage greatly increases the milk flow during the winter season and decreases the cost of production.

There are no stalks to bother in the manure when corn is put into the silo.

Do you get up at night? Sanol is surely the best for all kidney or bladder troubles. Sanol gives relief in 24 hours from all backache and bladder troubles. Sanol is a guaranteed remedy. 35c and $1. a bottle at the drug store.

Numbers in Other Wars

Hoosier veterans of the civil war smile when they hear of the "great host of young men (17,510) who will respond to the goverment's first conscription call from this state. This conscription will raise the state's total representation in the military service of the nation to 29,971.

Latest revised reports of the government show that Indiana furnished 193,748 white troops for the army, 1,078 soldiers and marines and 1,537 colored troops to the federal army in the war of the rebellion. The state's population in 1865 was about half what it is now.

This is the eighteenth war in which the United States has engaged. The number of men engaged has run into the millions. Here is a tabulation showing the war and troops engaged:

Wars	Years	Total
Revolution	1775-83	395,330
Northwest Indians	1790-95	8,983

W. C. T. U. Meeting

Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, state president of the W. C. T. U., delivered an address at the Lutheran church, St. Joe, on Wednesday evening of last week. To one who had previously heard the lady speak but did not hear her this time, nothing more than the foregoing brief announcement is necessary; and those who had never listened to her were privileged to meet one of the brainiest and foremost women of Indiana.

Mrs. Vayhinger had a message for the people, and she delivered it forcefully and convincingly. She assailed the liquor traffic, particularly the action of congress in permitting the sale of beer and wine during the war, and advocated equal political rights for women. In the latter connection, she began at the beginning, the creation. The Lord reviewed His work at the end of the first five days and saw that it was "good;" but, Mrs. Vayhinger claimed, it would have been a failure had He stopped then. On the sixth day, He sought counsel for the first time. He said, addressing the other members of the Trinity: "Let Us make man in Our own image!" This was done, and He pronounced His work "VERY good." The creation was not complete, however: man needed a helpmeet, and God made woman. He placed them side by side, not one before the other; and the speaker declared that she had become tired of riding tandem and desired her God-given place at the side of man. "Young man," she asked, "when you go out for a ride, do you go ahead in one buggy and let your best girl follow in another?" This apt turn brought the house.

Mrs. Vayhinger spoke on other problems.

The Marsellaise

During the French Revolution, when France was threatened by the combined powers of Europe, the cry went out from Paris for men who "know how to die." Six hundred men from Marseilles answered the call. "The Marsellaise," the great French war song, written at the time, commemorates the event.

Ye sons of freedom, awake to glory!
Hark! hark! what myriads bid you rise!
Your children, wives and grandsires hoary,
Behold their tears and hear their cries!
Shall hateful tyrants, mischief breeding,
With hireling hosts, a ruffian band,
Affright and desolate the land,
While peace and liberty lie bleeding?

CHORUS:—

To arms! to arms! ye braves!
The avenging sword unsheathe;
March on! march on! all hearts resolved
On victory or death!

Now now, the dangerous storm is rolling,
Which treacherous kings confederate raise;
The dogs of war, let loose, are howling,
And lo! our fields and cities blaze;
And shall we basely view the ruin,
While lawless force, with guilty stride,
Spreads desolation far and wide,
With crimes and blood his hands imbruing.

CHORUS:—

O Liberty! can man resign thee,
Once having left thy generous flame?
Can dungeons, bolts or bars confine thee
Or whips thy noble spirit tame?
Too long the world has wept, bewailing
That falsehood's dagger tyrants wield.
But freedom is our sword and shield,
And all their arts are unavailing.

WEEKLY BRAINSTORM

WHEN a traveler comes to the sink hole north of town, there is no need of a sign board to tell him where he is. He'll call the name of the place without any help.

GERMANY is hinting at peace—upon her own terms, however. She modestly declares that she can be induced to end the war without being given territory or other indemnity. That does not sound much like her boast at the beginning that Belgium would become a German province and England would foot all bills incurred by Germany during the war. Uncle Sam's answer to the peace proposals was given last Saturday.

* * *

THERE is a sink hole in the west road leading north out of town that should receive more attention than is being given it. It is about 2 miles out of St. Joe, and people residing beyond it can reach here only by going around it on another road. The road is utterly impassable, which is an injustice to residents of that vicinity. No one is more interested in good roads than the farmer: he deserves them; and people for miles around are inconvenienced by a bad place such as the one in question. There should be no parsimony in the appropriation of money in such cases, and the tax payers most directly interested should demand money enough to have the work done right. It will be the cheaper in the end: it is better to make the road passable by the use of sufficient sum than to employ the false economy of expending a few dollars yearly and effecting no permanent improvement.

THE NEWS is in receipt of a number of queries regarding the conscripts of St. Joe and vicinity, to all of which it cheerfully replies:

What will have become of E. R. K.'s excess fat when he reaches the trenches in France?

Dunno! But we do know that his present overcoat will make him a whole suit of clothes and leave cloth enough to patch his pants.

Will Charles Bleeks be accepted?

No. He passed under the wire two days ahead of the 12-year-old dependent kid limit.

Where can Paul render the most efficient service?

Easy—dead easy. Driving an ambulance, a high-speed Ford, of course.

What will Zonk do when ordered to charge?

Throw down his gun and look around for a meat axe.

Will Harry be sent to Hatties-burg?

No. The burg wouldn't be safe unless it change its name.

Would Ora make a good soldier?

Hard to tell—a man may be a good biscuit shooter without being a good Dutchman shooter. He might not be of any service bottling up the Dutch.

What officer has the steadiest job?

Got ye! Commodore.

What is the best service St. Joe can render Uncle Sam?

Sell the kaiser our telephone and lighting systems.

County Agent Archart has been investigating the condition of the oats crop of the county, and he reports the prevalence of smut where the seed was not treated. It ranges from 5 to 35 per cent.; and, on the other hand, there is but a trace (less than one-tenth of 1 per cent.) in fields sown with treated seed. The loss to farmers is estimated at hundreds of thousands of dollars, all of which could have been avoided It costs only 1½c to 2c per acre to treat seed oats.

Family Reunion

J. P. Buckingham and wife attended a reunion of the latter's family at Continental, Ohio, on Sunday. Every member was present, twenty-seven in all. C. C. Phipps, wife and little daughter, who had been visiting here, also attended. They remained in Ohio, where they will visit until the last of August; and then they will return to their home at Globe, Ariz.

THE CHARMING AND TALKATIVE MRS. BEGGARSTAFF DISCOVERS THAT LUCY CARTERET HAS A WONDERFUL NECKLACE

Just as the giant passenger steamship Alsatia is ready to leave the port of Liverpool for New York, a charming young Englishwoman goes aboard and engages a luxurious stateroom. She is nervous, suspicious and fearful. Presently she learns she is to share the stateroom with Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, an amiable chatterbox of fifty years, who lives in New York. Mrs. Beggarstaff learns the girl's name is Lucy Carteret and that she's on her way to America to live. She calmly announces she will act as Lucy's chaperon for the voyage.

"All my life," the girl admitted. "I was born in London, and when I was very young my parents returned to America, leaving me behind because they expected to be gone only a little time. Then my mother died in New York; and my father went into business there, and thought me better off where I was, in the care of friends, than with him."

"But surely," this in shocked expostulation, "he came back to see you!"

"Oh, indeed he did, often; that is, considering the difficulties, the long voyages, and the fact that he—isn't a rich man. But I haven't seen him recently—not in several years."

"And now you're going to join him?"

"Yes," Miss Carteret affirmed in a voice that betrayed more doubt than she suspected.

But before her astute inquisitor could take advantage of the weakness her tone suggested there befell an interruption. It was nothing more extraordinary than a knock on the stateroom door; but it brought Miss Carteret to her feet with a start, again pale and trembling.

"Oh!" she cried in alarm. "Oh, what is that?" Involuntarily she stepped back as if to put as much space as possible between herself and the door.

Mrs. Beggarstaff watched her in open wonder.

"It's only the stewardess. I rang for her some time ago."

"Oh, if that's all." Miss Carteret sat down again.

"One moment, stewardess." Mrs. Beggarstaff looked back at the girl. "You don't object to my letting her in."

"Oh, no, no!" Miss Carteret insisted hastily. "Please don't mind me. I'm very nervous—haven't been—well. I was startled—that is all."

"So I see," said Mrs. Beggarstaff with a quizzical accent. "Come in!"

The door opened, admitting a smiling, apple-cheeked, middle-aged Englishwoman.

"Shut the door—there! So many people running up and down."

But when they were alone again, much to the relief of the girl, Mrs. Beggarstaff failed by any word to refer to her recent betrayal of alarm—something hardly to be explained other than by open confession—which wouldn't in the least suit Miss Carteret's book.

"Now," said the elder woman placidly, folding a veil over a most palpable wig, but still a most becoming one, "now I'll hurry on deck and see about our chairs, and then interview the second steward about seats at table. I know most of these people, stewards and all, and generally manage to get just about what I want," Mrs. Beggarstaff added with grim self-conceit. "I presume you've no objection to sitting beside me? Not that you won't see all you want of me—and more, probably—right here."

"Please," the girl begged, laughing. "I'll be delighted with whatever arrangements you're kind enough to make."

"Very good, then. And for dinner, if you please, put on your prettiest frock. Peter Traft's aboard, and he's a dear—well worth dressing up for."

The bang of the door as Mrs. Beggarstaff went out might have been a signal; immediately the girl became conscious that the ship was in motion—vibrant and sonorous with the drone of its turbines.

The voyage of the Alsatia was begun, and—nothing had happened. She had eluded pursuit, was free!

CHAPTER II.

Dinner ran off uneventfully, if enlivened by the quenchless animation of the Dowager Dragon, but Miss Carteret, manifesting little appetite, sat out the meal with downcast eyes, mute save when courtesy dictated speech. Later she found herself seated by her Dragon's side on the lee of the promenade deck, in darkness save for the beams from lighted ports. For a little the girl relished all this with gladness. But presently her spirits sagged again and she grew drowsy, and lingered from her bed only to please the warm-hearted old woman who had adopted her pro tempore—"on suspicion," as Mrs. Beggarstaff put it, not without a little harmless malice.

Now and again friends paused to pay their addresses to the Dowager Dragon; amiable, light-hearted people, personable and attractive; yet of them all the facile waxen tablets of Miss Carteret's memory retained impressions of but three personalities.

One was the famous Peter Traft, claiming her interest more because of Mrs. Beggarstaff's outspoken delight in him than through any qualities he paraded during the few minutes he spent with the two—a youngish, well-poised body, with a drawl and a sort of insouciant humor that seemed to afford the Dragon intense diversion. But much of this man's discourse was couched in a modified phase of American slang or else harked back to local American topics; both largely unintelligible to a sense of humor nourished on strictly British slang and localisms.

Then there was a Mrs. Merrilees—according to Mrs. Beggarstaff not a year out of mourning for a worthless husband—an adorably pretty creature, and so bewitchingly gracious that Miss Carteret, at sight, first caught her breath with envy, then fell hopelessly in love with her.

A third she remembered for no reason she could assign. His name was Quoin—a tall, taciturn man with a quiet voice, a semi-ironic attitude toward the Dowager Dragon's gush of spirited inconsequence, and a suggestion of reserve. For some reason she remembered him more definitely even than she remembered Mrs. Merrilees. As for the others, they might as well have been shadows on a cinematograph screen.

By ten o'clock, leaving Mrs. Beggarstaff firmly fixed in the fourth seat at a card table, engrossed by her one confessed infatuation, auction bridge, Miss Carteret was abed and asleep.

A bed of almost sybaritic luxury it seemed, as it rocked her gently to forgetfulness; but a bed of misery when she awoke in the chill of dawn, with the Alsatia, for all her immense bulk, dancing drunkenly to the tune piped by a mad northeaster. And for more than sixty hours she was held the victim of mortal weakness and the elements' immortal rage.

Intervals there were, of course, when, her sufferings temporarily abated, she was able to talk a little with one or the other of her would-be comforters—Mrs. Beggarstaff and the stewardess. But on Tuesday a memorable conversation took place, negligible though it seemed at the time.

It was at about six bells in the forenoon watch when the Dowager Dragon came below, ostensibly to find a book, in reality to convey fair tidings.

"You're feeling better," she asserted, after a shrewd look at the girl.

Propped up in bed, Miss Carteret moved a languidly negative head.

"Don't tell me! I haven't crossed this mill-pond thirty times not to know when a seasick woman's on the mend. Besides, haven't you noticed how much steadier the boat has been this last hour or two?"

"I thought I must be imagining it," the invalid murmured incredulously.

"Nonsense! The barometer's been rising since midnight. The wind shifted at dawn, and now we've a clearing sky and a falling sea. Of course you're feeling better. You'll be on deck before night."

"Oh, please, Mrs. Beggarstaff!"

"Don't worry; I shan't carry you off by force. Bless my inadequate income! What's this?"

The girl turned her head wearily to look.

Mrs. Beggarstaff had been standing beside the chest of drawers, a hand abstractedly toying with her protegee's simple jewelry, and suddenly had singled out a brooch for wondering interest.

This brooch was a very beautiful thing, an exquisite cameo in sardonyx framed in an oval frame of fine diamonds; and Miss Carteret treasured it above all her possessions.

"Where under the sun, child, did you pick this up?"

"It was given me on my fifteenth birthday."

"Five years ago?"

"Just about. Why?"

The Dowager Dragon laughed delightedly. "My roundabout way of asking your age, dear." She turned the brooch over and held it to the light. "If ever you care to part with it, don't forget my passion for antique jewelry."

"Oh, never—I could never part with it!"

"Forgive me. I forgot it was a present."

"But that isn't all," the girl explained with growing animation. "You see, it was a present from my father, and the cameo—it's a portrait of my father himself!"

"It's what?" Mrs. Beggarstaff exclaimed shrilly. "A portrait of your father! Pooh! Absurd! That thing's a genuine antiquity—two thousand years old if a day!"

"I know. I mean, it looks like him. That's why he gave it to me. He showed it to me once—the last time we were together in London—and I saw the resemblance; so he sent it to me on my next birthday. It really does look wonderfully like him."

"Then, my dear, you ought to pride yourself on having a mighty handsome man for your father!"

"I do," the girl said indistinctly, averting her head and closing her eyes.

"And able to make such presents! Why, it must be worth several thousands! An exquisite specimen—perfectly preserved—flawless—ought by rights to be in the Metropolitan museum. I shall envy you it till my dying day!"

Miss Carteret didn't answer.

And presently Mrs. Beggarstaff returned the brooch to the top of the highboy and went her way, one fine, thoughtful wrinkle marring the habitual serenity of her forehead.

The Dowager Dragon's deck chair stood in the shelter of a jog near the entrance to the forward promenade deck companionway—a most advantageous coign for the sincere student of seafaring humanity. Here, after a hurried dinner, Mrs. Beggarstaff mounted guard in the blue gloaming, narrowly reviewing the postprandial parade with eyes whose brightness was as yet undimmed by age.

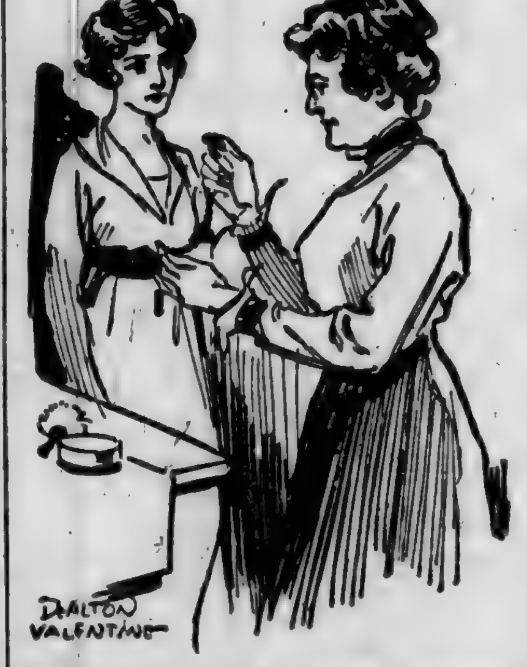
At length she sat up with a quick movement and called imperatively, "Quoin!"

A man who, walking alone, had been on the point of passing, jerked a cigarette stub over the rail, and moved to the lady's side.

"Sit down. Three mortal days I've been moping round the saloons with my tongue hanging out, parched for a bit of scandal—and you never came near me!"

"But I hate to disappoint; I'd nothing on tap high enough for your seasoned palate."

"Don't be impudent, Quoin. What are you doing on this boat? If you answer, 'Crossing the Atlantic,' I'll forget I'm a lady—"



"Where Under the Sun, Child, Did You Pick Up This?"

Quoin chuckled. "I'm combining business with pleasure, if you must know. Nothing pleases me more than to be cooped up for a few days with an unsuspicious subject. In such circumstances your humble sleuth learns a lot about human nature."

"Then you're sleuthing! I know it! But on whose trail?"

"Afraid I dassen't tell, Mrs. Beggarstaff."

"What if I know?"

"That wouldn't surprise me; you certainly do contrive to know a surprising number of things that don't concern you."

"I'm not sure whether that's flattery or impertinence."

"The man who could flatter your omniscience, madam, wouldn't hesitate to—ah—tackle the job of teaching a New York head-waiter the gentle art of being insolent."

Mrs. Beggarstaff laughed aloud. "But suppose I do know what game you're stalking and can lend a helping hand?"

"Charmed to humor your whim. Consider me a docile little supposer. And then?"

And right away Mrs. Beggarstaff confesses to Mr. Quoin her suspicions about Lucy Carteret. Don't miss interesting developments given in the next installment.

Masticate Figs Thoroughly.

The composition of dried figs, dates and raisins is similar. Under normal conditions, and when carefully prepared, all three fruits are excellent food for both children and grown people. The fruit should be thoroughly masticated, however, and for young children, or in any case where the skins may prove indigestible, it is safer to run the fruit through the food chopper before otherwise preparing or serving it.—Woman's Home Companion.

A SLANDEROUS PETITION.

In a full-page unsigned advertisement in Washington (D. C.) newspapers the statement was made that 2,082,637 workingmen had petitioned President Wilson, congress and the council of national defense not to deprive them of beer. Two days thereafter a two-page ad appeared signed by officials of the "Strengthen America compaign," inaugurated by the Federal Council of Churches. It presented the following facts:

1. According to the latest official report of the secretary, there are less than 2,082,637 members in the American Federation of Labor.

2. Yet the number of alleged signers of this petition from but 22 states is greater than the total membership of the American Federation of Labor throughout the entire country.

3. As a matter of fact this petition was not signed by individual workingmen.

4. In most cases a small minority of the members of the organizations mentioned presumed to speak for their entire membership.

5. Only 445 local bodies out of 22,000 local labor unions are listed as having signed the petition.

6. Only local labor bodies have a right to speak officially for the great mass of American workingmen, and more than 21,500 of these did not sign the petition.

7. Such state federations of labor and central labor bodies as are dominated by bartenders and brewery workers do not represent the great majority of American workingmen.

8. In many cases in the unsigned advertisement individual trade unionists are counted again and again in the petition presented to the president and congress, being counted, first, in their international organizations; second, in the state bodies; third, in the central labor unions; fourth, in the local unions; fifth, in such organizations as Personal Liberty leagues, mutual benefit societies, etc.

9. Over 150,000 of those enumerated as being identified with union label trades departments, labor temples, sick benefit funds, mutual benefit societies and Personal Liberty leagues, are counted a second time in bona-fide labor unions.

The petition, say the managers of the "Strengthen America" movement, is a slander and an insult to vast numbers of the finest type of American workingmen who are altogether opposed to the liquor traffic.

DAMAGE NOT CLAIMED.

I have seen prohibition achieved within twenty-four hours in a community of 400,000 without authorization from city, state or federal authorities, and maintained absolutely for nearly a month. The late General Funston made San Francisco, probably as bibulous a city as there is in the country, bone-dry immediately after the earthquake of 1906, and kept it in that unnatural state for three weeks.

I do not think that General Funston's authority to put San Francisco arbitrarily upon the water wagon was ever questioned at the time or afterward, although he had no such authority in law. Perhaps one or two saloon owners did protest, but a protest delivered to a man with a Krag-Jorgensen rifle topped with a bayonet comes under the head of little futilities. The liquor thus confiscated and destroyed "illegally" was at one time valued at some sum in the millions, but those from whom it was taken never filed claims for damages.—W. O. McGeehan, in New York Tribune.

THEY HAVE TRIED BOTH.

The return to the prohibition fold of a state which has tried both license and no-license is obviously an event of even greater significance than the going dry of a state which never had a prohibitory law. Many states have thus returned, among them New Hampshire. This state today stands twenty-sixth in the list of dry states. It was under statutory prohibition from 1855 to 1903. Then a local option measure was enacted, under which in 1916 only 28 of the 235 cities and towns remained wet. This year New Hampshire put itself in the dry column to stay put.

TWENTY-FIVE PREACHERS IN JAIL.

Some years ago, Devil's Lake, N. D., was reputed to be the worst town in the state. It was overrun with vice and crime. Then the prohibition law was enforced. At a recent meeting of the North Dakota Sunday school convention, 25 preachers were lodged in the county jail at Devil's Lake, hotel accommodations in the town being scarce and the jail being entirely without inmates.

LIQUID BREAD FALLACY.

If the war should be protracted and America should reach the condition existing the countries of Europe, where famine is adding its horrors to those of war, the liberal forces of this country would be the first in demanding that no grain be used for liquor that is needed by the people for bread.—The Liberal Advocate (liquor journal of Ohio). Thus do the wets back down on the claim they have so assiduously exploited, namely, that booze is "liquid bread."

Teamster's Life Saved.

WRITES LETTER THAT IS WORTH READING VERY CAREFULLY.

Peterson Bros.: I was afflicted with a very severe sore on my leg for years. I am a teamster. I tried all medicines and salves, but without success. I tried doctors, but they failed to cure me. I couldn't sleep for many nights from pain. Doctors said I could not live for more than two years. Finally Peterson's Ointment was recommended to me and by its use the sore was entirely healed. Thankfully yours, William Haase, West Park, Ohio, Mar. 22, 1915, care P. G. Reitz, Box 199.

Peterson says: "I am proud of the above letter and have hundreds of others that tell of wonderful cures of Eczema, Piles and Skin Diseases."

POISON GAS FOR HIGHWAYMEN

Army Man Invents Device Designed to Prevent Robbers From Entering Railway Car.

It would be a sad gang of robbers who tried to break into the railway car invented by George W. Meyers of the United States army and described in the Popular Science Monthly. They would be greeted with clouds of poisonous gas fumes.

Meyers' robber-proof car works with extreme simplicity. Two tanks, in which fumes of cyanide of potassium are stored, under pressure, are fitted inside the car at each end. These are connected with a perforated pipe which extends all around the door of the car, just in back of the outer framework. Should the train be held up, the locomotive engineer would telephone the guards within the car, who would immediately open the valves of the tank. The fumes would stream out through the pipe perforations and into the robbers' faces. The door being gas-tight, the deadly gas could not penetrate into the car.

New Method of Waterproofing.

A French scientist has recently recommended a comparatively simple formula for waterproofing shoes and clothing. It is a solution of paraffin and gasoline, the proportion being approximately one avoirdupois ounce of paraffin to one quart of gasoline. For shoes it can be applied warm, with a brush, while clothes can be dipped into it cold. The solution tends to preserve the softness and color of the material. Uniforms can be treated with it without removing the buttons or insignia.

A FRIEND'S ADVICE

Woman Saved From a Serious Surgical Operation.

Louisville, Ky.—"For four years I suffered from female troubles, headaches, and nervousness. I could not sleep, had no appetite and it hurt me to walk. If I tried to do any work, I would have to lie down before it was finished. The doctors said I would have to be operated on and I simply broke down. A friend advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and the result is I feel like a new woman. I am well and strong, do all my own house work and have an eight pound baby girl. I know Lydia E. Familiar.

Enthusiastic D. A. R.—Wasn't that a great speech made by the grand old senator, when he so eloquently and tearfully appealed to young Americans to buckle on the armor of patriotism and march forth to battle with the enemies of their country's flag?

Legless Old Soldier—I guess so, lady. I know it sounded blamed familiar. It reminded me of the speech he made to me privately, in the perilous times of 1863, when he coaxed me to be his substitute.—The Lamb.

Gander, Sixty-Six Years Old.

An aged gander lives at Islay, Scotland. It is the property of a Mr. MacLachlan, and is now sixty-six years old. For 45 years it belonged to the proprietor of a hotel at Bridgend, Scotland. Twenty-one years ago the father-in-law of the present owner bought it. Mr. MacLachlan says that the gander looks as well and as young and seems as active as it ever did. There is no doubt about its age.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JULY 29

GOD'S GRACIOUS INVITATION.

LESSON TEXT—Isaiah 55:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near.—Isa. 55:6.

The Bible is throughout a forward looking book. No matter how dark the light, it looks forward to the dawn of a new and better day. Whenever written, the prophet looks forward toward the end of the Babylonian exile. Isaiah died about 142 years before that event. That scene is laid in Babylonia. Isaiah prophesied in Jerusalem.

I. The Invitation, (vv. 1-8) In order to understand the fullness and blessedness of this invitation, we should read in its connection chapters 53 and 54. In chapter 53 we have a prophecy and vision of the Messiah, making his atonement for sins, "wounded for our transgressions." Again we have in this connection a picture of the Messiah as our leader and Savior. In chapter 55 we have the invitation and joyous welcome to the beautiful city which he is establishing for us.

(1) Who Is Invited? The word "Ho" is perhaps an abbreviation of the word "Hold," used to excite attention. This invitation is extended to every one: (a) the "thirsty," to those who are needy; (b) the poor and the rich; those "without money," and the supply is abundant, even as the water. Every one is invited without limitation or distinction. The greatness of a man's spirit is measured by the numbers of his desires and thirsts, by their qualities and by his capacities or the intensity of his thirst. Those invited were to have "wine," a luxury, and "milk," a staple necessity, without money and without price. The currency of the kingdom of Heaven is grace (v. 1).

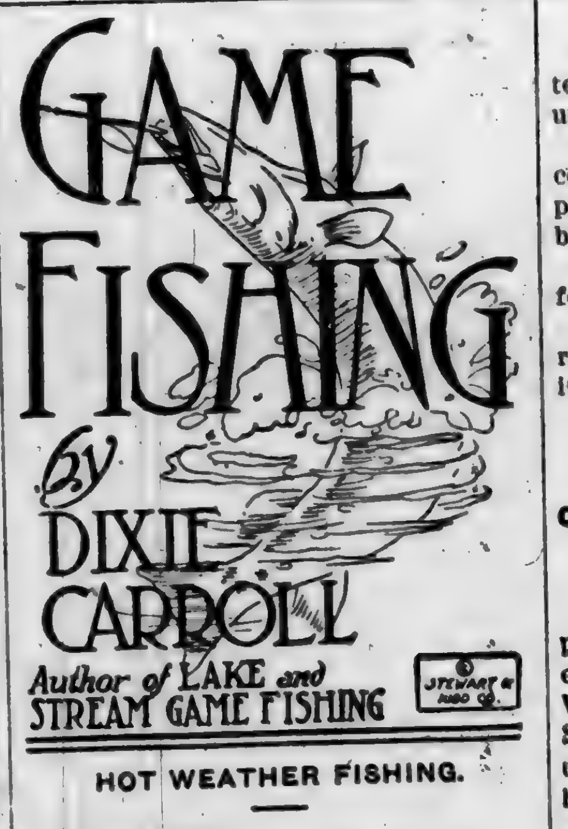
(2) Who Will Come? (v. 3). Only those who are listening and who are attentive. Many fail of eternal life because they do not pay attention to the claims of religion. "Come unto me," (Matt. 11:28). We go to God for salvation and help, and we find life. Life is more than mere existence. It is the natural, harmonious, joyous activity of every part of our being. The result of coming is, "your soul shall live," and the surety of it is, "an everlasting covenant." Literally, an agreement with promises which can never be broken, namely, "the sure mercies of David." (See II Sam. 12:29; I Cor. 17:7-27; Ps. 89:1-4; also Luke 20:41, 44). We are bought but we did not pay the price. The mercies of David are the antitype of our Savior; the mercy of grace. True satisfaction is in its right order, (See vv. 2, 3). Christ is a faithful witness, the exalted one, (v. 5) to this covenant.

(3) When to Come (v. 6). While he may be found, and while he is near, implying a time when he may not be found and a time when he will not be near. All of God's promises are conditional.

(4) The Way to Come (v. 7). Forsake open sin, turn from unrighteous thought, turn to the Lord and receive his "multiplied pardon." Man is everywhere depicted in the Scriptures as wandering away from the true God and there is no salvation if we insist on continuing in sin.

II. The Transformation (vv. 8-13). God's promises have back of them all the power of the universe and are as certain as the process of the seasons. In working out his transformation in the character of man, we are to think his thoughts after him. We see and know only very little of this spirit, but God sees, knows and controls the universe, which is at his command. (I Cor. 10:13; Phil. 4:19). We are to enter into his ways, and his ways are as the heavens, higher than those of the earth. Having entered into his ways we are to bring his fruits (see John 15). If the Divine seed (v. 11) is implanted within us, then we may expect to see the fruits of the kingdom of God, which are born of the spirit. (Gal. 5:22-26). This transformation involves service, for we are to have a mission, "go out to all the earth," being led by the Messiah and thus receive "joy and peace." As sure as "the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven and returneth not but watereth the earth," so is the seed of the Word in the hands of the sower, to become bread to the eater. As we go forth we have his promise (v. 11) that, "it shall not return void but shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

As a result the "thorns" (evil) shall be displaced by "fig trees" (good). God's word bears fruit in implanted lives. (John 6:33; James 1:18; I Peter 1:23). God calls this word, which is spoken of by the prophet, "My word." What the prophet says, God says. What an inspired man says, God inspires him to say. God's promise will be consummated in redeeming society, as well as redeeming creation (vv. 12,13; Ch. 35:10; 49:9,10; 51:11; Jer. 31:12-14; Isa. 35:1,2). The language about the mountains and hills breaking forth into singing, is interpreted in Psalms 65:11,12.



HOT WEATHER FISHING.

My Dear Buck:

When the days are hot and the old sun is doing his best for the corn and his worst for the fisherman, it takes our entire deck of tricks to lure the game fish out of the deep, cool holes. Midsummer heat drives the fish down to great depth in search of cold water and during only a few hours in the very early morning and at night they come into the shallows to feed. At that time casting will land 'em, the rest of the day you simply have to go down for them or sit on the cabin porch and hold a talkfest on how you landed that "big 'un" a couple years ago.

Send the Bait Down.

For the hot weather, the greatest little old coaxer is live bait. Among the most used live ones are the minnow, worms, helgramite, crawfish and frogs, while the grasshopper if used as a surface bait on streams will get a rise out of a big trout or bass, when he wouldn't even take a look at a fly.

If you are after bass, old man, when the mercury is popping high, locate a sand-bar or spring hole anywhere from thirty to a hundred feet down, if your fishing waters go that deep, let your little old live bait slowly settle to them and you will get bass when the other fellow finds it necessary to be satisfied with pan fish.

A few seasons ago at a lake that is considered very civilized waters and which has been fished to a finish for the past twenty years, three fishermen landed as nice a bunch of small-mouth bass on a hot August day as ever falls to the lot of an angler, and at that generally in his dreams. With a sun that burned through their shirts, these knights of the rod stuck to a spring hole they had located and from 90 feet of water caught 48 small-mouth bass, ten of which ranged from 3½ to 5 pounds. And the bait they used was the common, wiggling angle-worm.

The wall-eyed pike is by nature a bottom fish and any part of the season you have to go down for him, although at night he often comes into the shallows to feed. The usual thing is to troll for them in from 15 to 30 feet of water. I have always had an idea, old-timer, that in deep lakes you could find him in warm weather in deeper water, I tried it out and sure enough I found him there. I trolled over a piece of near shore water with a depth of about 15 feet and the average wall-eye caught ranged from one and a half to two pounds. I then rigged up a regular deep-water trolling rig generally used for lake trout and the first strike was a six-pounder, I trolled back and forth over this stretch of water and landed seven wall-eyed ranging from three and a quarter to seven and a half pounds. The average depth of the water was about 50 feet, it varied between 30 and 60 feet.

How to Make the Rig.

The rig for this deep trolling is easily assembled and it sure takes your bait down to them. Take an eight-ounce cone-shaped sinker and attach it to the end of your line with a swivel, then take three pieces of line about three feet long and attach the first piece with a swivel to the line about three feet above the sinker. Three feet above the first line attach the second with a swivel and three feet above that attach the other with a swivel. On the three ends of these lines swivel on an eight-inch piano wire leader, because the big wall-eyed pike have teeth that will cut through a line or gut leader. To your leaders attach either a single hook or a treble as you perfer; on each of these hooks bait with a six to eight-inch shiner or golden chub. Let your line down and find bottom, then troll along very slowly. The wall-eyed will strike very mildly for his size and swim away slowly with the bait, let him take it some distance, then strike him and if he is any size you will have a fine time bringing him up to the boat. Fact is he will probably make a couple of runs back to the bottom just when you think you have him to net. With this rig I had the fun of landing two wall-eyed pike at once, a three and three-quarter pounder and a five and a quarter and you can take it for mine, old-timer, I knew there was something on the line when they both began to "act up" for company. In making this rig I think that you will save tackle by using a weaker piece of line for your sinker connection, than your reel line, as the sinker is liable to catch in the rocks on the bottom, and if the connecting line is weaker, it will break and you only lose the sinker. A small spoon, say about a No. 3 placed in front of the bait will make it more attractive or an Archer spinner ought to look good to most wall-eye.

Flesh Color.

The large portly colored man entered the drug store and looked around uncertainly.

"Young man," he said to the clerk confidentially, "has you got any letter paper and envelopes with flesh-colored borders?"

"Was it mourning paper you wished for, sir?" inquired the clever clerk.

"You's struck it disactly! But I disremember the name. Gib me a box of it, if you please, sah."

It's Poor Economy to Endure a Bad Back

In these days of rising prices, we need every ounce of strength and the ability to do a full day's work every day. The man or woman with weak kidneys is half crippled. Sore, aching kidneys; lame, stiff back, headache, dizzy spells, a dull, tired feeling and urinary disorders are daily sources of distress. You can't afford to neglect kidney weakness and make it easy for gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease to take you. Get a box of Doan's Kidney Pills today. They have helped thousands. They should help you.

Personal Reports of Real Cases

AN INDIANA CASE.

C. Rettinger, W. Seymour St, Kentland, Ind., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for years. Sharp pains shot through my back and kept gradually growing worse until I could hardly get up or down. The secretions from my kidneys were scanty, burned in passage and deposited sediment. I finally began using Doan's Kidney Pills, and my kidneys gradually got stronger. Soon I was well and free from all signs of kidney trouble. I give Doan's Kidney Pills great credit for their wonderful work."

AN OHIO CASE.

Mrs. E. Campbell, 308 S. Race St., Van Wert, Ohio, says: "My back caused me a great deal of suffering for many years. At times I got so bad I was unable to move around without a great deal of suffering. My kidneys acted irregularly, too, and though I had used many medicines nothing helped me. Finally I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and tried them. After taking three boxes I was completely cured of the attack. Several times since then I have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and they have never failed to give the best of results. I have a world of faith in them."

INDIANA ASSOCIATED WEEKLIES

DeKalb is called upon to furnish 88 more young men in order that the quota may be reached. They will appear in a few days before the local board according to the manner in which their numbers appear in this issue.

A more cosmopolitan agent than the selective draft can hardly be imagined. Every number that was tallied off in the tense moments of the drawing in Washington Friday spelled one word, "Democracy," for the conscription caught young men in practically every walk of life. Lawyers, doctors, business men, clerks, ditch diggers, plasterers, bartenders, brakemen, politicians, college students and salesmen are included in the giant melting pot of Columbia. Not a profession or line of work that was not represented, not an artery of public life was not pricked and bled just a little bit by the drawing.

The postoffice department of the government is doing its bit also in providing to relieve the monotony of Uncle Sam's expeditionary forces in Europe. This, however, must be done with the co-operation of the reading public. It will be the means of providing many hours' pleasant reading for the soldier and sailor boys. Notice that in one corner of the first page of your magazine, it says to place a one cent stamp there and give it to some postal employe, unwrapped and unaddressed, and it will be placed in the hands of a soldier or sailor. The magazine will be sent for one cent, regardless of its weight. The local postoffice here will send it to Indianapolis headquarters and from there, Uncle Sam will do his part in seeing that the soldier gets it. No wrapping, no addressing necessary.

Exemptions and the Draft.

Every registered man knows his place in the line of drafted soldiers; every one has figured out his chance of being called to the battle line. Unlike the boastful talk of the hot air artists there has been no scramble for preference in the lists, each man is willing to take his chance, but he is not anxious to try trench warfare.

The next duty in providing an American army for the trenches is to exempt those who for various reasons, under the law, are excused from service. In the performance of this task, more than in any other function, the eyes of all eligible men are upon the officials in charge. There must be no suspicion of favoritism, but to outside influence, or friendship or to what the people are pleased to term a "pull."

Upon the action of the exemption boards depends the attitude of the people towards the entire draft law. If the banker's son must take his chance with the laborer, and the rich man has no better opportunity to present his plea than the poor man everything will go well in the minds of the people. But if there are questionable exemptions of the influential citizen's son the idea will soon go abroad that the law is not being fairly administered and the average citizen will begin to think this, too, is a rich man's war and a poor man's fight.

We guess you have heard, as we have heard it whispered, that Mr. So and So will take care of a few, and that Mr. Somebody will look out for his friends, and that both of these gentlemen stand in with the board. Of course, such talk is pure nonsense, but to those who know no better it is accepted as true, and confirms the latest suspicion of "pulls" in the mind of ignorance.

Now, we call attention to this matter, in order to prevent the careless wagging of tongues which should be better controlled. No board could command higher confidence than is given to the gentlemen who have the hard task of making the exemptions in this county. We are sure that they have the sympathy of every thinking man in the performance of their duty, and it is not right for the unthinking to spread abroad rumors of partiality and unfairness or to talk about their obeisance to a supposed "pull."

Indiana Is Aroused

"Indiana has awakened to the seriousness of war."

This statement came Saturday from the office of Will H. Hays, chairman of the state council of defense, at Indianapolis, in connection with an announcement that there had been a marked increase in war conservation activities in the state. Hays expressed the belief that this activity resulted directly from the recent conference of county defense council chairmen with state officials at Washington.

Good progress in war work was also reported Saturday by Maurice Douglas, directing the silo campaign in Indiana. "The situation is most encouraging," Douglas said. "We already have on file the names of more than 5,000 Indiana farmers who are planning to build silos. I believe that even a far greater number will be constructed—possibly 10,000. Our original aim was to get 5,000 silos, and it is already assured that we will pass that mark."

Plant Lice in Indiana

Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist, Saturday issued a warning to gardeners in all parts of the state to be on the lookout for infestations of plant lice.

Reports from all parts of the state, he said, show great damage to almost all crops and advised that whenever the lice are noticed the plants should be sprayed immediately with nicotine sulphate. One part to six hundred parts of soapy water, or with fish oil soap, one pound to four gallons of water.

Care should be used to spray the under side of the leaves. Each insect must be covered with the solution to have the desired effect.

B. & O. RAILROAD TO OBSERVE ANTI-SPITTING DAY

The Welfare Department of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad has again set aside an anti-spitting day in its efforts to wipe out this practice from the traveling public and further safeguard its patrons from a sanitary viewpoint.

Slips will be placed in every seat of day coaches before they leave terminals, pointing out the menace to public health in the persistence of this practice and embodying a polite request that public opinion itself put the stamp of its disapproval upon the obnoxious habit.

It is difficult to have trainmen openly call attention to the offender, therefore the slips afford the best medium of counteracting the spitting evil on railroad trains.

Should Be Arrested

On Friday of last week, a stranger, one of three men taking orders for furs, laid himself liable to arrest for going behind the case without permission and for attacking InezHart, the deputy. He first solicited the young lady's order for furs, and would hardly take no for an answer. He then suggested that she would make a good model and asked her weight. She informed him that she did not know. His insolence was ended for the time by the entrance of a patron and he left. Shortly after, while Miss Hart was doing some clerical work, he came back, stole up behind her and attempted to put his arms about her. She resented this action and he became insolent. Rev. Coons entered and the fellow sneaked out.

Some man with overgrown feet and experienced in the art of kicking should have been delegated to escort the cowardly cur out of town.

Mistake in Date

There was a mistake in the date of the farmer's meeting printed in last week's issue. It should have been Tuesday evening, July 31, not the 24th.

To Receive a Notice

Many questions are being asked by DeKalb county young men whose names were drawn in the conscription for military service. This much is known to a certainty, no one who has been drawn will be expected to do anything until he receives notice from his local conscription board.

The names of all persons who are desired to call on the DeKalb county board for examination will be made public at a later date. The posting of the list will be deemed sufficient notice to charge a man with the duty of presenting himself.

However, the board will try to give notice to each person by mail as to when and where he is expected to present himself, but if the letter fails to reach its destination that cannot be made as an excuse for failure to appear. It is important that each person who has been drafted and who has changed his address since the time he registered shall send his new address to the board.

According to the latest estimates, counties in Northern Indiana, will be called upon to furnish the following number of men: Adams, 106; DeKalb, 88; Huntington, 139; Jay 108; Kosciusko, 27; LaGrange, 104; Steuben, 91; Wells, 136; Whitley, 118; Noble, 43; Wabash, 182. Fort Wayne will be called upon to furnish 383 men for the new army and Allen county 106.

Boys Go to Mississippi

Here's the dope on Hattiesburg, Miss., where Indiana troops, including Company K of Auburn, start training next month for their finish fight with the Boches:

The town has a population of about 12,000 and is located in the southern part of Mississippi, about 60 miles north of the Gulf of Mexico. Gulfport, Miss., is the nearest gulf town of importance.

Hattiesburg is "dry"—along with the rest of Mississippi. The town is in the heart of the pine tree district and turpentine camps.

Regarding climatic conditions, government records show an average temperature 8 to 10 degrees higher than central Indiana during the summer season. Temperatures ranging from 90 to 95 degrees continue for about 65 days during the summer months. In winter, Hattiesburg temperatures average at least 20 degrees higher than those of Indiana. The winters are usually short and mild, with the rainy season occurring during January and February. Although precipitation is heavier in nearly every month than in Indiana, the number of cloudy and rainy days is considerable small.

Advice of Co. Agent

County Agent and Purdue Expert Discover Smut-Like Disease in Testing Oats—Demonstrate Value of Treating Oats.

In their tests over DeKalb county for oats smut, Prof. E. J. Pipal of Purdue university, and County Agent A. Z. Arehart are finding a number of wheat fields containing rye which has been infected with a smut like disease known as ergot.

The ergot is found principally in rye here and there in the wheat fields that has come up voluntarily and if the rye stocks are allowed to stand and are harvested with the wheat crop, the plant disease may cause sickness and perhaps death to the person who may use the flour from the wheat.

The ergot is poison and is not only dangerous to persons but to stock as well. County Agent Arehart urges all farmers to make an examination of their wheat fields at once and take no chances of there being rye with the disease in their fields. All volunteer rye should be removed if the smut is found so that the wheat may be free from the ergot.

The wheat scab is also prevalent in some districts of the county and farmers are asked to examine their crop. The kernels affected will be of a pink color and a treatment of formaldehyde should be applied this fall when wheat is sowed.

County Agent Arehart and Prof. Pipal have found that only one percent of the oats crop is injured where the oats were treated for smut in their tests over the county. Where the oats were not treated, twenty percent of the crop is injured.

Sewing For the Soldiers

The Garrett branch of the DeKalb County Red Cross chapter has rented rooms over the Betts news stand in that city for a permanent workshop. Starting next Tuesday women members of the Garrett Red Cross will start sewing for the soldiers under the direction of Mrs. John W. Thomson, who is superintendent of the work throughout the county. The first sewing will be the making of pajamas, bed socks and shoulder straps.

Indications are that we will have cheaper potatoes next fall. Illinois farmers are offering to contract for $1 per bushel while some in Indiana offer choice potatoes for fall delivery at sixty cents.

Corporation Assessments.

Auburn has Eighteen Corporations According to Report of Board of Review—Assessments as a Whole Show Increase This Year.

The assessments of the corporations and banks and trust companies of DeKalb county this year as a whole shows an increase over the assessments made in 1916, according to the report of the county board of review which adjourned its session on July 4.

To Test Suffrage Law.

Although no one appears to have a line on it or to know where it will come from, there is a very well authenticated report in circulation at Indianapolis that a suit will soon be filed somewhere to test the constitutionality of the woman suffrage law. It was reported some time ago that the woman suffrage suit and the constitutional convention suit would both be filed at the same time and by the same lawyers, but this proved to be untrue.

When the suit is filed it is understood it will be on the ground that if the legislature has no power to call a constitutional convention without a referendum vote of the people it has no power to extend the franchise to woman and to take them into partnership with the men voters unless the men voters of the state authorize it by a referendum vote.

Is Your Name Mary

Arrangements have been made for holding the third annual reunion of the Marys of the United States at Noblesville on Thursday, August 16. The event this year has been planned to be an all-day affair, in order that the Marys may have a better opportunity to get acquainted with each other. Tables will be provided for a "pitch-in" dinner at noon, to which all who attend will contribute.

Many new features are being planned for the reunion, and the officers hope that every Mary will begin to boost for a record-breaking attendance. Miss Mary Hannah Krout of Crawfordsville, who is known nationally as an author and writer, has promised to be present and will also write a poem concerning the reunion. The officers of the association are: President, Mrs. Mary Carson Wicker; secretary, Mrs. Mary McConnell Jerrell; treasurer, Mrs. Mary Eva Barker Catterson. Last year there was an attendance of 1,200, many states being represented.

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

NOT just to have one, not merely for the purpose of saying that she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and undivided attention to any such accounts.

FORTUNE DECIDES SERVICE IN NEW NATIONAL ARMY

Lottery at Washington Conducted Under Circumstances That Insured Fairness.

BAKER DRAWS FIRST NUMBER

SECRETARY OF WAR BEGINS THE WORK OF SELECTING THE MEN WHO WILL WEAR UNCLE SAM'S UNIFORM.

TAKES WHOLE DAY AND NIGHT

Altogether 10,500 Numbers Were Drawn From Big Fish Bowl Used for the Occasion—Probably None After the First 2,000 Will Be Called on for Service, at Least at This Time.

Washington, July 21.—The draft for the national army is completed. The great task of determining the order in which the registrants should be called up for examination was begun at 9:48 o'clock Friday morning when No. 258 was drawn, and was kept up continuously until early Saturday morning, when the last number came out of the bowl. In all 10,500 numbers were drawn, but it is not likely that men holding numbers drawn after the first 2,000 will be summoned before the boards for service in the first army. According to the officials in charge, the first 1,000 numbers drawn represented more than a million men.

The draft was invested with all the dignity and solemnity becoming so important an event, and was witnessed by a distinguished company. The first eight numbers were drawn respectively by Secretary of War Baker, Senator Chamberlain of the senate military committee, Congressman Dent of the house military committee, Senator Warren and Representative Kahn, ranking minority members of the senate and house military committees; Maj. Gen. Tasker H. Bliss, acting chief of staff of the army; Maj. Gen. Enoch Crowder, provost marshal of the army; and Major General McCain, adjutant general of the army. After the first eight numbers had been drawn the regular tellers took hold, and worked through until the long task was completed.

In only a small number of the largest districts will the numbers above a few thousand affect registrants. Of the 4,557 registration districts throughout the country the largest has something over 10,200 numbers, while the smallest has only about 185, and the average is about 3,000. As the drawing proceeded, 157 numbers were withdrawn before one low enough to affect the smallest district came out. It was 126, placing 4,557 men numbered 126 on their local lists as 157th in order of liability.

The following list shows the numbers in the order in which they were drawn. The first number in each case represents the order in which the second, or red-ink registry, number was taken from the bowl. Four numbers are given in each line, beginning with the first number, which was drawn by Secretary Baker.

Y. M. C. A. Camp Rally

There will be a Y. M. C. A. rally at the school house Friday evening. It will be for boys from 10 to 17 (inclusive), and all are invited. There will be a program and games and a good time.

Sanol Eczema Prescription is a famous old remedy for all forms of Eczema and skin diseases. Sanol is a guaranteed remedy. Get a 35c large trial bottle at the drug store.

High School Orchestra

The response to our call last week for a meeting to organize an orchestra in the schools far exceeded our expectations. Twenty-nine responded and twenty-eight were willing to purchase the various instruments and begin work at once.

Some will no doubt fall out but the number we have to draw from will still leave a sufficient number to form a good organization. And from the lower grades the clamor comes for admission and the younger ones will be encouraged to purchase instruments and begin work at once and when capable will be taken in as regular members.

On Thursday evening of this week a meeting will be held at the Bowman home in the west end of town to complete the organization and arrange the instrumentation, employ a special teacher, purchase instruments, etc. All parties interested are urged to be present.

C. A. Woodcox

Eloped to Hillsdale

News has just reached DeKalb county friends of Tom L. Brunson of near St. Joe, and Miss Clara L. Bash of Wilmington township, of their marriage at Hillsdale, Michigan, last week. The ceremony was solemnized at the Hillsdale county court house by Justice of the Peace C. M. Weaver. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Brunson, residing three miles north of St. Joe and both of the young people are well known in the eastern part of the county.

Boys Are in Camp

Harry Shuff and Lloyd Miller, who belong to the Hicksville company, Ohio national guards, have been called out. At present, the company is in camp at Ada, Ohio.

Card From Camp Ada

Mrs. Frank Kinsey is in receipt of the following card from her nephew, Lloyd Miller, who is a member of the Ohio national guard:

COMPANY HEADQUARTERS,
ADA, Ohio, July 19, 1917.

DEAR AUNT:—

I got here Tuesday night. Was out looking for recruits yesterday, and was in Ottawa last night. We drove about 200 miles and got back to Ada about 3:30. I don't know how long we will be here, but I guess we will go to Alabama instead of Georgia; but we will not go till they get the camp finished there. We were over close to Deshler yesterday, too. If we would have kept on going, we would have been at St. Joe at that rate. Things are all well here and just like they were before, only I see some new fellows instead of being one myself.

Your nephew,
LLOYD MILLER

Let Jail Contract.

The board of county commissioners in special session in Auburn Friday let contracts for the heating and plumbing and wiring contracts for the new DeKalb county jail. This part of the work will cost the county $9,890 according to the contracts let by the commissioners Thursday.

Bids were received from two firms on the plumbing and heating and two on the lighting as follows:

Derhimer Bros., Fort Wayne, plumbing and heating, complete, $11,266.

Lige Heating & Ventilating Co., Auburn, plumbing and heating, complete, $8,685.

J. R. McDowell, Auburn, electric wiring, $1,495.

Don Van Fleit, Garrett, electric wiring, $1,205.

The bids of the Lige Heating & Ventilating company of Auburn, and Don VanFleit of Garrett, being the lowest the contracts were let to them.

The county council also met in special session at the court house Friday and appropriated $15,000 to take care of plumbing and heating and wiring expenses and other necessary expenses to complete the building.

Woman's friend is a Large Trial Bottle of Sanol Prescription. Fine for black-heads, Eczema and all rough skin and clear complexion. A real skin Tonic. Get a 35c trial bottle at the drug store.

Murder! Murder!

This was written in that period of irresponsibility following a chest-developing exercise on a St. Joe telephone:

The rhinoceros is said to have the thickest hide of any any animal in existence. That's all right—now, but just wait. The collector of St. Joe telephone rentals will soon become armor plated.

Jesse James was some robber and prided himself upon the fact; but, fortunately for him, he died before his reputation underwent a total elipse.

Scene.—A room within a St. Joe residence.

Dramatis Personæ.—One exasperated man, one telephone receiver, one scandalized wife. Man vainly trying to talk through receiver, but, with no effort on his part, saying a whole lot about it, whereat the wife is shocked.

Enter Satan.

Satan.—I've come after you, old man. Put on your hat and come on. Never mind your overcoat.

Man.—Are you connected with St. Joe by this bloomin' Geesquawk telephone line?

Satan.—No.

Man.—Sure?

Satan (impatiently).—No, no! Come, hurry up!

Man.—Hoo-RAY! Run you a foot race to see which one gets there fust.

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

VOL. XXXI ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 2, 1917 NO. 31

Proclamation

WHEREAS, owing to the emergency of war, thousands of men will soon be withdrawn from industrial and agricultural pursuits for military service; and

WHEREAS, in modern warfare, industries must of necessity speed up production; and

WHEREAS, the success with which our country prosecutes the present war is largely dependent on how much surplus food the farmers of the United States can raise; and

WHEREAS, each of the above contingencies stimulates the demand for additional man-power, and

WHEREAS, investigation discloses that this demand cannot be satisfied

(a) by idle labor, for all labor is is employed.

(b) by any surplus of physically fit adult males, for no such surplus exists.

(c) by any influx of labor from other countries, for immigration has practically ceased; and

WHEREAS, the United States Department of Labor in seeking a solution of this problem, has recognized the tremendous man-power resources this country possesses in its boys, and in the exercise of its statutory power, has initiated the organization, for Non-Military Service in the mills, in the factories and on the farms, of all boys of the ages 16 to 20 years inclusive, under the official name of the United States Boys' Working Reserve; and

WHEREAS, the organization, mobilization and placement, of the labor to be drawn from this new reservoir will be facilitated by a complete survey of all boys eligible for the Reserve in Indiana.

THEREFORE I, James P. Goodrich, Governor of Indiana, pursuant to a resolution adopted July 25 1917, by the Indiana State Council of Defense, do proclaim the week of August sixth to August twelfth inclusive, as Special Enrollment and Registration Week in Indiana for the United States Boys' Working Reserve, and do call upon all boys in this state of the ages 16 to 20 inclusive, irrespective of occupation, avocative, school color or creed, to present themselves to the Enrolling Officers in their respective localities, and enroller register for such productive labor as will be conducive to increased efficiency of the nation in the prosecution of the war. I appeal to the virile young manhood of Indiana with the thought that every American Boy at work opposes a boy in Germany, and in all seriousness remind him that he is facing a man's job, the burdens, hardships and sacrifices of which will increase as the war lengthens.

To the parent, I would say that this enrollment is for non-military service; that it will not interfere with the boy's education if he attends school, nor will it disturb him in his occupaiion if he is already employed and that, inasmuch as your written request for his furlough or discharge must be immediately granted, he is still amenable to parental control.

To the people of the state of Indiana, I most heartily recommend the work of this Reserve as a permanent contribution to our ecomic forces and express the desire that the service to the state and nation rendered by these boys should be regarded by the public as just as useful and patriotic within the limits of the opportunity afforded as the service rendered by the soldier in the trenches. In that spirit, you should lend your co-operation.

I witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and the great seal of Indiana. Done at the capitol, Indianapolis, this 27th day of July, 1917.

[L. S.]

James P. Goodrich,
Governor.

TELEGRAPH THE KAISER

Frank Nelson, of Indianapolis, a brother of County Auditor S. P. Nelson, has written a poem in the form of a telegram to Kaiser Wilhelm, which is very appropriate at this time. Following is the poem:

Just telegraph the kaiser
And I'll tell you what to say:
I've had enough,
I've called the bluff.
My boys are on the way.

I've reached the end of patience,
I'm ready now to scrap;
And when I'm through,
I'll prove to you
They'll have to change the map.

I've stood for wholesale murder
Just as long as I can stand;
And though I've warned,
You've merely scorned.
So now I'll take a hand.

You seem to have it in your head
That I'm afraid of you.
So to make you run
I'll take my gun
And prove it isn't true.

I've never seen a kaiser
Nor a monarch nor a king
That got me mixed
In clever tricks
And all that sort of thing.

So please accept this telegram.
Believe me when I say
One single line
Explains it fine—
"The boys are on the way."

A COUUNDRUM:—Which is giving the Germans the more encouragement, the Russians by their failure in the late campaign or the congress of the United States by its dilatory action?

* * *

THERE are many who take a pessimistic view of the war and prophesy German success. Tnis is occasioned by the collapse of the Russian offensive movement. These faint hearted ones forget that Amerira has not fired a shot and that Bull Run was followed by Appomattox.

* * *

THE situation in Russia is causing uneasiness among the allied governments. What action that country will take is uncertain, and her ability to carry out any plan of action is also unknown. This uncertainty is what is causing the trouble. Could any estimate of Russia's future part in the war be made, it would clear up matters. It would be better to know that nothing can be depended upon from her than to count upon her to do something and fail. The people of that country have become discontented by years of oppression; and, being ignorant, they regard all forms of government with suspicion and are hard to restrain. This makes easy the work of anarchistic agitators and friends of the deposed czar, who are busy creating discord among the masses. How long this will continue is the disturbing factor. In time, a new Russia will come out of all this chaos. Her people are but groping their way through the darkness of misunderstood freedom into the light of liberty. A leader will arise to direct them, for every great emergency brings forth the man who is needful for the occasion.

* * *

THE war in Europe is a reversal of the jealousies of centuries From the time of Frederick the Great, king of Prussia (1740-89), Austria and Prussia have been enemies, their enmity leading to the six-week war, in 1866, when the former country was defeated and kicked out of Germany and the latter kept all the territory gained by their joint robbery of Denmark. Now the two form the backbone of the central powers and are fighting together against a combination of nearly all the nations of Europe. Since 1346, England and France have been in many wars, always, with one exception, being on opposite sides. That one exception was the Crimean war, when they united against Russia to keep Turkey on the map of Europe; and the empire of the Turks owes its existence up to the beginning of the present conflict to the policy of John Bull, who did not wish Russia to acquire Constantinople and control the Dardanelles. Russia has for years been a menace to Great Britain in Asia, and several times the two countries were on the verge of war over conflicting interests in the far East. Now Great Britain and her former enemies are fighting side by side. Queer, isn't it? Italy alone is consistent. She is opposed to her hereditary enemy, Austria.

THIRD YEAR OF WAR SEES SITUATION OF THE ALLIES GREATLY IMPROVED

Germany's Position Less Favorable Than One Year Ago or Twc Years Ago—In Principal Theater of War, the West, East and Italian Fronts, the Entente Allies Have Shown Decided Superiority.

New York.—Germany's situation at the end of three years of war appears less favorable than it did either one year ago or two years ago.

She has to her credit in the last twelvemonth the crushing of ill-prepared Roumania and the conquest of two-thirds of that nation's territory.

But in the principal theater of war, the west, east and Italian fronts, the entente allies have shown, on the whole, a decided superiority to the central powers.

In the materials of war the nations fighting for democracy clearly have an increasing advantage over the kaiser's legions. They have dealt the enemy blow after blow which have told heavily in lives, if not in territory.

Germany More Desperate.

Germany's plight is rendered more desperate than it was on August 1, 1916, by the accession of the United States and several minor peoples to the ranks of her enemies. Almost the whole world is now lined up against that nation.

Every belligerent dreads another winter of war, but Germany most of all. She lacks many things to face the rigors of a cold campaign—not only shells and guns, but wool for warm clothing and sufficient coal to run her rapidly deteriorating railroads and her factories and keep those at home comfortably warm, not to speak of the famine in the food fats so necessary to those facing zero weather.

Looking back on the long truce of the spring on the eastern front, it is hard to realize that the Russians just one year ago were in the midst of a splendid offensive much like that which has surprised the world in the present month. In the 1916 drive Brussiloff pushed far within Bukowina and Galicia and crossed the borders of Hungary. He took about 350,000 prisoners, mostly Austrians, and forced the enemy to concentrate masses of reliable German troops, aided by a few Turks, to check him.

The real reason his drive came to a halt, however, we know now was lack of ammunition, failure of transport, treason within the czar's armies and wretched bureaucratic inefficiency. These handicaps seem to have been removed from the courageous Muscovites, perhaps for all time.

Unfortunate Roumania.

Roumania declared war on the Teutonic powers August 27 and immediately invaded Transylvania, where the weak Austrian guards were easily pushed back and the important cities of Hermannstadt and Kronstadt were soon in the invaders' hands.

The kaiser sent Von Falkenhayn, a splendid strategist just displaced by Von Hindenburg, as chief of the great general staff, to command on this front, while Von Mackensen headed the Germans, Bulgarians and Turks, who threw themselves on Roumania from the south.

The Roumanians proved no match for the combination of foes. Skillful work by German spies, or the treachery of certain members of their own army, put the Roumanians' plans of campaign in the Teutons' hands, it is now divulged. Bucharest fell December 6, and ten days later all Walachia was lost. On December 18 Russian troops took over the whole Roumanian front, and a few weeks later the Teuton advance was checked along the line of the Sereth and Danube rivers.

Somme Battle Continues.

In the west, however, Germany was facing a far different problem from the poorly outfitted and trained Roumanian peasants. When the third year of the war opened the battle of the Somme was still going on vigorously, with the French and British showing a constantly growing superiority over the foe. Bit by bit through the summer and autumn the ground was wrenched from the kaiser's men until the coming of winter smothered the offensive "in mud and blood," and, according to the British commander, Sir Douglas Haig, saved his opponents from an immediate great enforced retirement.

On September 22 it was announced that the French and British had taken 55,800 prisoners in the Somme battle between July 1 and September 18. This total was later considerably increased.

French Win at Verdun.

At Verdun, too, the Germans suffered. The French in battles of the fall and winter won back most of the ground lost in the offensive of the spring of 1916 and captured more than 15,000 prisoners, with slight losses themselves.

The spring campaign in the west opened this war with the Germans falling back from the great salient spearpoint directed at Paris—confessing thereby either their weakness or their aversion to a further offensive, although at the time German writers hinted darkly that Von Hindenburg "had something up his sleeve."

The "strategic retirement" began about March 17, and the Teutons triumphantly declared it would prevent an allied offensive this year. But they spoke too soon.

On April 9 the British stormed high Vimy Ridge, taking on this and succeeding days about 12,000 prisoners. The other enemy stronghold along the British line was Messines Ridge, south of Ypres. This the British blew up by mines June 7, the noise being heard in London. They captured 5,000 prisoners the first day of the offensive and many others later.

French Gain Hills.

Below the sector of the German retirement the French were equally successful. On April 16 they started a great offensive which resulted in the dominating "Ladies' road" falling into their hands, besides important positions in Champagne. Their prisoners the first two days totalled 17,000. On May 6, along the Aisne, they took 6,100 captives and gained points from which they looked down on the foe, as the British did farther north.

It should be noted here, however, that the French losses were severe, resulting in the replacement of Nivelle as commander in chief by Petain.

The last twelvemonth in the Italian campaign has witnessed a series of costly reverses for the Austrians, but the Italians have been prevented from following up their successes by the very difficult terrain, the beaten Teutons falling back after each defeat to new mountain positions most difficult to attack.

Italians Take Gorizia.

On August 8, 1916, the Italians stormed the stubbornly defended Gorizia bridgehead, on the Isonzo river, taking about 10,000 prisoners, and they followed this success the next day by seizing the city of Gorizia and increasing the number of their captives.

The Italians launched a new offensive the first days of November and on November 5 they announced that their prisoners since the fall of Gorizia totaled 40,365.

Winter then stifled operations until May 15, when the Italians returned to the attack in the Carso, aiming at Trieste. On May 18 the haul of Austrian prisoners was announced to be 6,432. The offensive was renewed May 25, 9,000 prisoners being taken the first day. On May 26 Italy stated she had taken 22,414 prisoners since May 14.

The last operations left the Italians in an unfavorable terrain and the Austrians counter-attacked successfully, inflicting important losses, but not driving back the invaders to any great extent. The Italians apparently settled down to organize the conquered soil in preparation for a new blow.

In the Balkans.

In the Balkans the deadlock continues, but what changes there have been have favored the allies. At the west end of the lines the gallant Serbians last winter fought their way back on their own soil, and with the help of other troops took Monastir. King Constantine of Greece gave up the forts of Kavala to the Bulgarians and the Germans took about 20,000 Greek soldiers to Silesia as "guests." For this and other acts favoring the Germans he lost his throne. Greece is now building up a new army of 400,000 men, which will probably soon be fighting for the cause of democracy under the leadership of the great patriot, Venizelos.

The Italians have increased their forces in Albania and built excellent communications through the mountains, forming a junction with Sarrail's left and securing this end of the Balkan line.

When the marshes froze there was a sharp Russian offensive last winter near Riga. Otherwise, the coast front lay dormant for many months, and during the revolution "fraternizing" was rife between the opposing armies. Then the Russians, having put their house in order, set out to show the kaiser that free men can fight better than slaves.

The sectors selected for attack lay between the Pinsk marshes and the Carpathians, the same as last summer. Successes were scored at several points, the prisoners by July 11 numbering 42,000. The greatest advance was near Stanislaus, from which city Korniloff's men advanced across a series of rivers, capturing Halicz and Kalucz and sabering and bayoneting the beaten Austrians.

Russian Drive Pleases.

The unexpected "come back" overjoyed the allies and filled the Russians at home with martial enthusiasm.

The Turks suffered severe defeats in the course of the year at several points. The British splendidly retrieved their reputation in Mesopotamia by recapturing Kut-el-Amara. On March 11 they took Bagdad. They continued several scores of miles further on and also formed a junction with the Russians northeast of Bagdad.

Farther north the Russians held on to their more important gains—the great cities of Erzerum and Trebizond, but abandoned Mush, Armenia, and a large city but thinly settled region to the foe.

Near Jerusalem.

Moving out from the Suez canal the British inflicted a severe defeat on the Turks near Romani and then fought their way into Palestine, building a new railroad as they went. A further slight advance would bring them before Jerusalem. The Turks apparently are preparing to abandon the Holy City. They have also removed the Jews from the seaport of Jaffa, treating them so cruelly that hundreds have died.

In Germany's sole remaining colony, East Africa, converging columns of British, Portuguese and French are closing in on the remnants of the defending army and the kaiser's overseas dominations seem near eclipse.

All military observers expect the war will continue through the next winter and the new campaigns are awaited with special interest because American troops will have a chance to show their mettle on the west front.

SOLDIER'S BRIDE SENT BACK

Her Effort to Masquerade as a Man to Be With Hubby Didn't Succeed.

An Atlantic Port.—Somewhere in France is a sergeant in the American army who married just before he left the United States and took his bride with him on the transport. She went as a soldier, dressed in regulation khaki and with her hair cut short.

The other day the young woman returned from France, her effort to pose as a "Sammie" having failed. Her husband, it was said aboard the steamship, was in a regiment formerly stationed in Arizona.

The vessel also brought back the body of a soldier who died on the trip over.

Dog's Rescue Effort Fails.

Westfield, Mass.—Joseph Wrogowsky, seven years old, was drowned in the Westfield river at Red Rock after his collie, Fluff, twice tried to bring the boy to shore.

Joseph and his nine-year-old brother, William, were playing on the bank. Joseph slipped into the river. The dog plunged in, got the lad's collar in a firm grip and tried desperately to paddle ashore. The boy dragged the dog under until Fluff was forced to come up for air. Fluff filled his lungs, then dived and came up with his master, but was dragged under again until he had to let go.

Arthur Bazata came at the older brother's screams, dived in and brought the body of Joseph to shore.

Fluff, who had kept diving desperately, refused to come ashore until Bazata came up with his master's form and brought it to land.

Rooster Acquires "Jag."

A farmer at Athol, Mass., declares that his prize rooster having partaken too freely of some preserved cherries thrown out of a kitchen window, was so drunk that he was taken for dead and stripped of his feathers. He recovered from his "jag," however. But when he returned to the poultry yard, minus his feathers, his hens would not recognize him, and refused to allow him to share their coop.

HEARTY BREAKFAST IS O. K.

French Medical Professor Urges Europeans to Follow Example of Americans.

Bordeaux, France.—The American breakfast of ham and eggs, liver and bacon, beefsteak or other meat, vegetables and porridge, as a substitute for the meager European morning meal, is recommended for France by Doctor Bergonie, professor of the Bordeaux medical faculty.

Doctor Bergonie regards this substitution as one of the reforms most likely to relieve the economic situation, by providing rational nourishment and avoiding a great deal of waste.

He bases his argument on the fact that man requires sustenance most at the beginning of the day when he is about to make his effort, whereas in Europe he takes his principal meal when his day's work is half through, when he is half tired out and is incapable of so digesting his meal as to give him proper support for the rest of the day's work.

WIFE CAN'T LEAVE AUSTRIA

Judge Refuses Divorce to Man Who Complains Because Wife Does Not Come to Him.

Canton.—A wife needn't be a "Hindenburg" to try to rejoin her husband, separated by war, and such a woman is not guilty of willful absence. So held Judge Ake in denying the divorce petition of John Sos of Alliance, who wants the marriage ties severed from Susanna Sos, now living in Austria. Sos charged his wife would not come to this country to live with him.

"If General von Hindenburg and two million soldiers can't get through to the seaports, I can't expect a wife and baby to do it," said the judge. "If she refuses to rejoin you when the war ends a decree may be granted."

Hurt Running From Snake.

Shelbyville, Ind.—Mrs. John Lusk, who lives near this city, was running from a large blacksnake which had attacked her, when she fell, dislocating her left elbow and shattering the bones in the arm. Mrs. Lusk saw the snake making a raid on her poultry. Arming herself with a hoe, she started after the reptile, but when it turned to strike her she fled.

No Wonder.

"I saw Smith in a saloon yesterday give Jones a punch in the face which Jones didn't even resent."

"The coward!"

"Not at all. It was a milk punch."

LIVE BAIT—THE MINNOW.

My dear Buck:

For an all round live bait that has the reputation of bringing home the bacon, most any time during the open season, give us the minnow family, which, by the way, is a large tribe. Some fishermen call any small fish a minnow, which is wrong, as the minnow family is a distinct line made up of over one hundred different species and most small streams and lakes have from ten to thirty species in their waters. You will find the minnow in all sorts of places, the spot-tailed shiner mainly in the lakes, fallfish in the large streams and chub in the smaller streams. The minnows taken from the rapid flowing waters and riffles make the sturdiest bait and at the same time the liveliest as their constant fight with the swift current gives them more "pep" than the minnow from the gravel-bars or the deeper, quieter pools.

Try Out Different Minnows.

In most all fishing waters some particular minnow has the reputation of being the one best bet and it is well to follow the dope of the local fishermen or guides, at the same time the trying out of another specie may mean better fishing all the way around.

For muskellunge, pike or pickerel the larger sized minnows, say about eight to ten inches, are the best bait and it's a toss-up between the fallfish, creek or river chub, silver shiner, or black sucker. All of these baits are fine lures for casting or trolling.

For black bass the silver shiner or dace seems to be the minnow that tickles his fancy and its silvery sides make a great shining invitation under water. It is a good bait for any time or condition of water and is particularly fine on dark and cloudy days or in rough water. River or creek chubs are hardy minnows with a tough mouth that holds well on the hook and the fact that they are more lively than the shiner, makes them attractive bait to most fishermen. On bright days with clear and still water the chub is second to none as a fish getter.

Catfish and Perch as Bait.

The small catfish called by some, the stonecat, mad-tom, bullhead or pout is a bait that will surprise the bass fisherman who has never used it. Early and late in the season, young yellow perch can be used to advantage in lake fishing, however, to get the best results from the perch bait, the dorsal fin should be clipped off. This operation does not impair the vitality of the young perch, if done quickly with a scissors, or a sharp knife.

For bass or wall-eyed pike a minnow four to five inches long is about the right size. This sized minnow is livelier and will last much longer on the hook than the smaller ones. Even a small bass, a half pounder, will make a drive for this sized bait, while it is sure the happy medium for the old granddaddy who has a man's sized feed bag to fill. As a general thing the large sized bass like a good mouthful and there is not much chance of using a minnow they cannot handle.

How to Hook the Minnow.

In baiting the hook with the minnow, pass the hook through the lower lip and out the nostril or if the minnow is of a large size, run the hook through both lips. For still fishing where the water is quiet hook the minnow, if small, through the back, above the backbone and just behind the dorsal fin. Chubs and suckers can be hooked through both lips which are very strong on these species.

With the proper care minnows can be kept in good shape for an indefinite period. In camp a permanent minnow box should be sunk in the water along the shore of the stream or lake, and the bottom of the box filled with gravel and stones. Wire screen over both ends gives a steady change of water. Always dip the minnows into the minnow bucket with a small dip net and don't handle them. Leave that until you place them on the hook. It is best to use a large sized minnow bucket and if there is to be much of a carry, put a bunch of water weeds in the pail, this saves them from injury caused by rough travel. In carrying minnows any distance don't crowd 'em, fifty to a five-gallon pail is plenty. A pinch of salt added to the water once or twice during the day's fishing gives 'em life. Change the water often, don't wait until the minnows come to the top, that's about the time they are ready to turn belly up. A mighty good plan is to tote along a small bicycle pump and aerate the water every now and then by pumping air down into it. A good plan to follow in changing the water in the minnow pail is to pour it in from a height of say two or three feet, that carries air into the water and the minnow sure needs air as well as a human being.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

CARROTS, THE DOG.

"At the top of a hill," said Daddy, "there was a farmhouse, and in that house there were two little girls named Agnes and May, and a small dog named Carrots.

"Just why the dog had been named Carrots no one knew; but he seemed to like his name and always jumped and spoke in his dog way when anyone used his name.

"Now every morning Carrots had his work to do. Down at the foot of the hill there were many small sticks from the outskirts of the woods, and these sticks did splendidly for kindlings. Carrots knew that several baskets filled with sticks were brought up by the farmer every day, and he always liked to do his work, too.

"So in the morning Carrots, with a leap and a bound, as he got out of the house, rushed down the hill, and brought up three sticks in his mouth.

"He was such a small dog and he always carried three sticks, which were usually quite long—as long as he was. He would leave the sticks in the kitchen and bark, so his master would say:

"'Good doggie, fine doggie.'

"And then off he'd go for another trip. After he had taken this trip several times the farmer would say:

"'Good doggie, fine doggie. No more, Carrots!' And Carrots would know that his work was over and that he mustn't bring up more wood. For the farmer did not want to tire Carrots. He was such a plucky little dog and would never have said or shown that he was tired.

"It was a hot day and Agnes and May had packed a picnic basket. They were going to take their lunch down by a creek which was cool. There were great big trees overhanging the brook and their mother had promised them that they could go in wading.

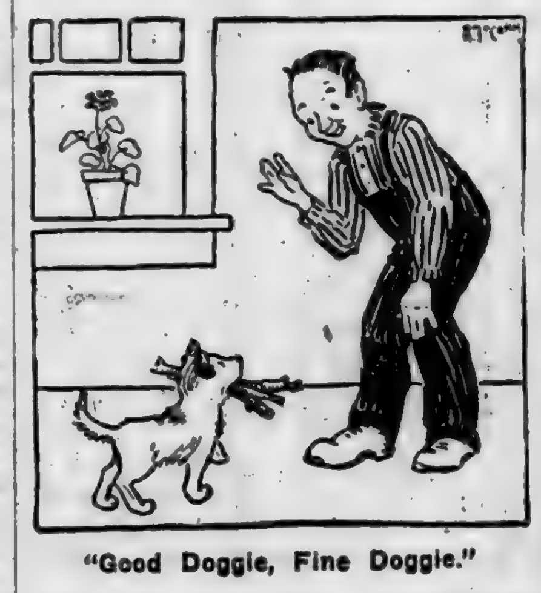
"'Come, Carrots!' said Agnes.

"'Come along!' said May.

"Carrots did not need to be urged. He was ready at once. He barked and he jumped up and down. What fun it would be when his two little mistresses said COME in such a way. He knew it meant a picnic or a swim, and Carrots was warm, too.

"Off they started—just the three of them—Agnes, May and Carrots. The little girls walked along rather slowly—they were so warm, but Carrots scampered about with glee.

"They reached the creek and the first thing they did was to take off their shoes and stockings and step into the deliciously cool water.



"Good Doggie, Fine Doggie."

"When Carrots saw that they were taking off their shoes and stockings, he could hardly keep still for joy.

"He knew that meant wading, and that they wouldn't mind if he spattered water, for they would be spattering a good deal themselves!

"But, alas and alack! They had gone to a part of the creek a little farther down from the spot where they usually had their picnics, and they did not know that there was a deep hole there—a hole which was almost as deep as Agnes was tall.

"She could not swim! She could just wade. And she stepped straight into the place where the water was deep.

"Down went her head and then up again, with her bright blue hair ribbon showing above the water. May gave a frightened cry, but Carrots gave a yell—a yell of such distress that the farmer from the field came rushing down. Carrots had grabbed Agnes by the shoulder. He was so little! Oh, dear, he felt he couldn't hold her head above. He knew he must! His dog intelligence told him he mustn't let her down, and she was so frightened she didn't know what was happening.

"He held her with his legs and his paws. Oh, how they were aching! But what seemed hours and what was only a few minutes saw the farmer grab Agnes and the faithful Carrots from the deep water.

"After that the children both were taught to swim—for then such an accident could not have happened. And as for Carrots, he was made more of a pet than ever, and how happy it made him that he had saved his mistress' life and had been a brave dog, even if he was rather small!"

The Woman to Blame.

"Papa, when is a boy old enough to wear socks?"

"He wears them when he puts on long trousers, as a general thing."

"And when does a boy begin to wear long trousers?"

"Well, that depends upon how much of a fool his mother has made of him. I see you wearing short ones at twenty," growled father.

The Last of the Caribs.

The Carib Indian was the first representative of Lo the poor red man to meet the tide of European travel. He was the one found by Columbus and the later Spanish explorers in the West Indies, and he has given the Caribbean sea his name. Thus he is assured a monument as long as geography shall last, and he needs it, because as a living race he has practically disappeared.

How many thousands of Caribs dwelt in the West Indies in 1492 is largely a matter of conjecture. They quickly began to die out under the hand of the conqueror, who worked them as slaves, and shot them when they made war. Today it is doubtful whether there are a hundred pure-blooded Caribs alive. Practically all of them live on the British island of Dominica, on a reservation set apart for them called Salybia.

GRAIN CROPS ARE PROMISING

Western Canada 1917 Crops in Good Shape.

While it is a little early to predict what the Western Canada grain crop will produce, there is every indication at the present writing that the 1917 crop will give an excellent return. Reports received from all portions of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta speak of good growing weather, a fairly advanced stage of all grains, with prospects as good as in the past two years. Should conditions continue as at present, it is safe to conclude that Western Canadian farmers, already free of debt, as a result of the splendid crops and prevailing high prices, expect from this season's returns to be in a position that will place them away beyond any fear of the future.

The acreage of Western Canada will be about the same as last year. Seeding was somewhat later than last year, but germination was quicker. The only possible drawback now would seem to be a scarcity of harvest hands, but it is felt by the authorities that the situation will be pretty well cared for by that time.

Land values are increasing, but there is room for a much greater increase than in the past, owing to the returns that farmed land will give when compared with its cost. In some districts land that could have been bought five years ago for $15 an acre is changing hands at $60 an acre, the seller satisfied that he is giving the purchaser good value for his money. And why not, when it is known that in a great many cases during the past two years crops have been grown on this land that have produced a profit of forty and fifty dollars per acre, over and above cost of production. These cases, while not general, were not exceptional.

In addition to the lands that are offered for sale by railway companies, land companies and private individuals, the homesteading areas offer great inducements for those who are willing to do a little pioneering for a year or two. By that time settlements would come into existence, and this means a condition similar to that enjoyed by many of the older settlements of today—schools, churches, railways. The land is of high-class quality, strong and vigorous, easily worked, and capable of producing the very best of crops.

The demand for all grains for some years will be great, and it will require all the resources of man, beast and soil to meet it. That the prices will be good goes without saying, but at the present time there is something more appealing than the lucrative prices that prevail. That is, the desire to assist in winning the world war. The man at the plow is doing his "bit," and the spirit of patriotism that prevails will lead him into a broader sphere of action. No matter where he may be he will look about him that he may find land to further develop the country's resources. It is possible that his own state may furnish the land, in which case he will be quick to take advantage of the offer. If land in his own state is not available, Canada (now our ally) will be glad to furnish it in unlimited quantity, as she is vitally interested in largely increasing the supply of foodstuff which is now as urgently needed and is as valuable as ammunition to the allied countries.

The appeal made by Mr. Hoover, United States controller of foods, and also by Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canadian controller, emphasizes the need of the allies, urges economy and the prevention of the waste in food, and bespeaks whole-hearted public co-operation. Speaking of Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium and their European allies, they say:

"For nearly three years their man power has been engaged in the direct work of war, and in some cases large areas of their most productive lands have been overrun by the enemy. Their food shortage and the food to supply the armies of Canada and the United States must be wholly provided from this side of the Atlantic. The supply must also be sufficient to cover losses at sea. Australia, New Zealand, the Argentine Republic and other countries are not now available to relieve the situation because of their remoteness and the shortage of tonnage.

"The crop of storeable foods grown in Canada and the United States suitable for shipment overseas threatens to be entirely inadequate to meet the demand unless the whole people determine by every means in their power to make up the shortage. Every individual is under a direct obligation to assist in rationing the allied forces. There must be national self-denial and national co-operation to provide the necessary supplies."—Advertisement.

What Can We Do?

© International Film Service

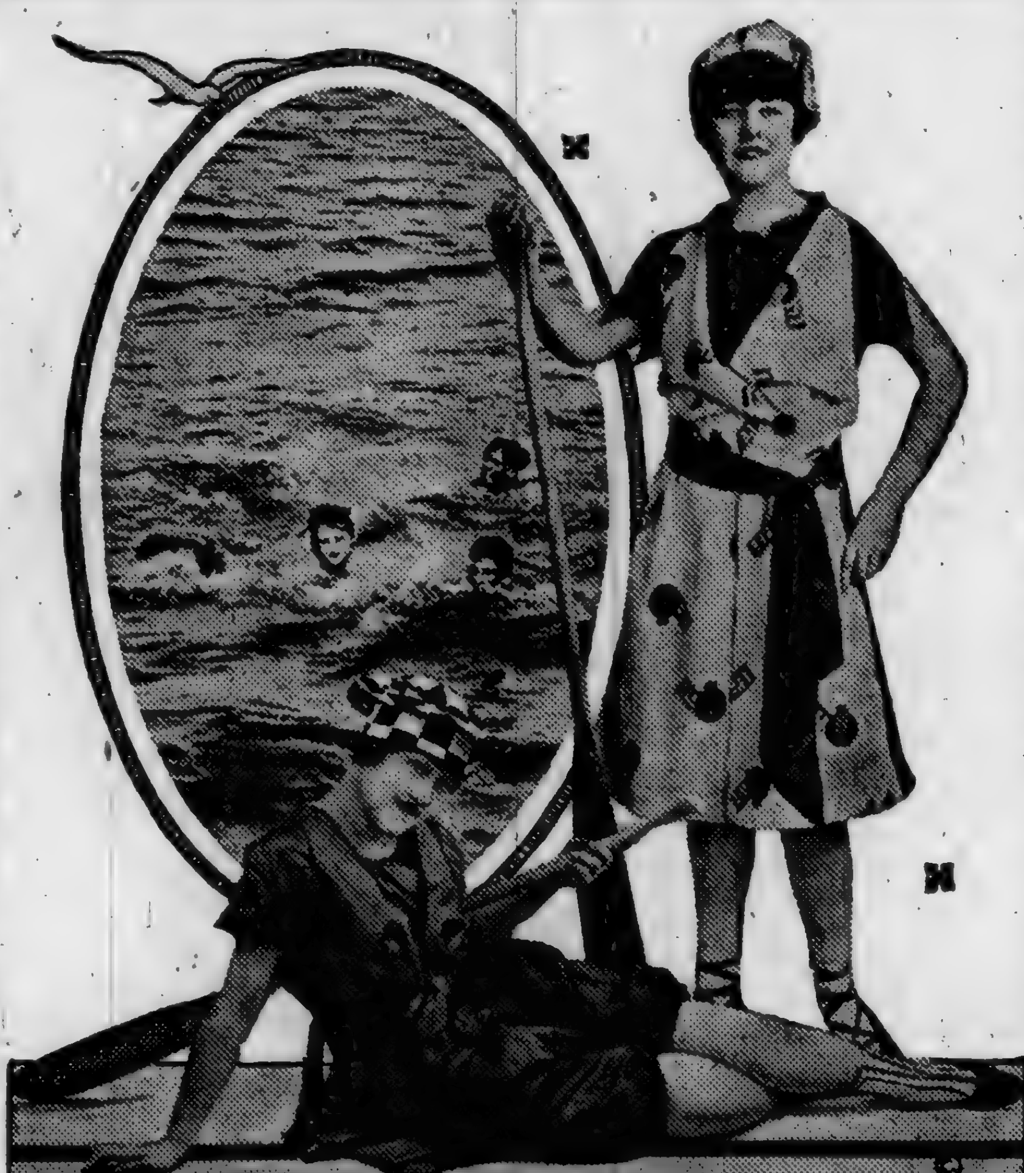
The department of military relief of the American Red Cross has organized a Red Cross supply service, with a chain of warehouses in the principal cities of the country. This supply service, with branch headquarters in New York, Boston, Chicago, Denver, New Orleans and San Francisco, will co-operate with patriotic and relief societies in the forwarding of all soldiers comforts and hospital supplies made by volunteer workers throughout the country.

Agents of Red Cross supply service are to be stationed in every military training camp and at every army base. "These men will supervise the distribution of supplies arriving from Red Cross depots," says the circular released for publication April 30, by the Red Cross. When Red Cross chapters or auxiliaries have made hospital supplies, surgical dressings, hospital garments, comfort and saving bags, or whatever they have elected to make for the men of the army and navy, these supplies are to distributed through the Red Cross supply service, and should be forwarded to the warehouse nearest the point of their production.

The necessity for such a service is very evident. When supplies are needed in any quarter a call for them will be sent to one of these warehouses and promptly filled just as an order for goods is filled when received at a factory. To insure promptness and efficiency all these supplies must be made according to specific standards and shipped through authorized channels. Profiting by the experience of Europe, the Red Cross and military officials have worked out a system by which all these matters of supply and distribution are put on an effective and systematic basis. Even the packing of supplies must be done according to regulations, so it is evident that any organization wishing to make itself useful to the Red Cross must do its work, from beginning to end, in the way stipulated by that great society.

The work of women, which is a very large factor in Red Cross activities, becomes quickly effective through these established agencies of supply and distribution. There are many branches of the work in which women concern themselves. They raise money, supply nurses and nurses' aids, provide surgical and medical supplies, make surgical dressing, hospital garments and supplies and comforts of all kinds for the soldiers. It is work in which they are very much at home.

Costume for Water Sports



It does not take long study of the new apparel made for water sports to learn that as careful thought has been given it as to any other kind of clothes for women. The bathing suit has advanced to the dignity of a costume for all sorts of water sports and is made in as great variety as any other sort of suit. It makes opportunity for much exercise of the designer's fancy and for individual taste, and has graduated from merely a convenient dress for the water to an interesting outfit for boating, bathing and the beach.

Fashion has lead us away from the conventional blue or black and into the realm of gay colors, but not to the entire neglect of these reliable old favorites. Black and navy, combined with white in suits of black and white or navy and white are among the smartest of this season's offerings, and there are many all-black models. A practical and pretty one is shown in the picture, made with a full pair of bloomers set on to a short-sleeved bodice. It has a skeleton over-bodice slashed into bands over the shoulders. What passes for a skirt is joined to this overbodice; three flat tabs wider at the bottom than at the top, doing duty for the requirement of the correct beach suit. The cap is of black and white checkerboard rubber and black and white cloth shoes with white silk stockings make a complete success of the costume.

Khaki-kool silk in oyster white with a brilliant figure in colors, is made up with black satin in the second suit. It has a guimpe of the black satin with slashed sleeves lined with the khaki-kool. They allow entire freedom and some protection to the arms. One of the broad revers at the front of the bodice is slashed and the other slips through it so that both fasten over buttons covered with the black satin.

A cap to match which may be worn over another of rubber, white stockings and black satin sandals, are the happy ending to this bit of cleverness in suits for water sports.

In Military Effect.

Good-looking suits for little boys are of white mohair, the jacket plaited in groups below a straight yoke, and having patch pockets over the plaits, midway below yoke and belt. Instead of a flat sailor collar or round Eton, the little jacket has a coat collar and narrow lapels; and, altogether, the garment has a decidedly military suggestion which greatly appeals to the small boy. Short knee breeches of the white mohair accompany the plaited jacket.

Figured Seersucker Nightgown.

Quite a contrast to the lovely crepe de chine nightgowns is one of white seersucker having a very small striping of tiny flowers in various shades. White scalloping is the only trimming and this appears on the square neck and short sleeves. The practicability of such a gown can be realized when it is understood that the material requires no ironing

AFFECTS THE BRAIN.

(From bulletin issued by New York City Health Department.)

Civilized man equals brute animal plus high brain development. Alcohol blots out the "high brain development" and leaves behind the brute animal.

Now, of course, we don't mean to say that when a person takes a drink of anything containing alcohol he is reduced at once to a brute animal; but very few will dispute that a drunken person is not much better than a brute animal. And the reason he has been reduced to such a state by the alcohol, is because before he can take enough of it to kill his body, he has had enough to paralyze his brain, especially the highest parts of his brain. It has paralyzed his power to think, it has paralyzed his power to judge, it has paralyzed his power to control his actions. The amount of alcohol which makes a person drunken, varies with different people. Some can stand very little, others a great deal. However, even a very little, though it does not show itself in drunkenness, has a damaging effect on the brain. This is what we want to point out particularly. Too many people think that if they drink alcohol in moderation, such, for example, as three or four glasses of beer a day, or one or two drinks of whisky a day, they are not doing themselves any harm at all. Very many even think that they may safely drink as long as they stop before getting drunk. These are very dangerous and mistaken ideas to have. Drinking, even in moderation, has dangers for the brain and nerves, and steady drinking is very bad.

OF INTEREST TO REALTY MEN.

After a visit to Colorado, Mr. Thomas S. Ingersoll, secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, declared that from every source of information tapped he learned that there was greater prosperity in the state than ever before. "This applies particularly to real estate," he said. "One big company in Denver, which was nearing bankruptcy just previous to the transformation because purchasers were not paying on lot contracts, was practically pulled out of the rut by the flood of payments received in the first thirty days. The firm is now subdividing more property. Many of the live-wire real-estate dealers have rented the quarters of former saloons in the downtown section and have transformed them into offices, allowing the barroom fixtures to remain. They use the former 'private conversation' booths as closing offices for their salesmen."

'CONSUMED' BUT NOT CONSUMED

Anticipating increased taxes, distillers have withdrawn large quantities of spirits from the government bond houses. This liquor is officially recorded as "withdrawn for consumption." Consequently the internal revenue reports show this year what the uninitiated believe to be "an alarming increase in drinking." The government reports do not explain that "consumption" in this case is technical, not actual; that the liquor goes into private warehouses to await the retail demand—a demand which is constantly decreasing.

PREPARING FOR PROHIBITION.

W. L. Welford, president of the American Association of Cooperage Interests, testifying before the interstate commerce commission at Washington, made the statement that the whisky manufacturers of the country, realizing that nation-wide prohibition is inevitable, have practically ceased manufacturing their products and are preparing to devote their plants to the manufacture of commercial alcohol for military purposes.

Charles R. Crane, member of the United States commission to Russia, in a special cable to the Chicago Herald said:

Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

How Women Fish.

It doesn't serve to mellow a man's disposition to take a woman or two into the boat when he goes bass fishing. For women always want to fish, yet never could they or would they stick those horrid, nasty, wriggling angleworms on the hook. So, between baiting their hooks and removing the perch and pumpkin seeds and straining your spine to keep the boat from turning turtle and the lines from getting snarled up, you have a most enjoyable outing, do you not? Yes, you do not! I'll run the risk of answering that question for you, "Zim" writes in Cartoons Magazine. And then, when you finally hook a five-pound bass weighing at least three pounds and eight ounces by his own standard scales, and play him for twenty minutes against their earnest entreaties not to bring that big, ugly thing into the boat or else they'd jump out!—you calmly ease up on the line and give him slack, also his freedom, do you not? Yes, you do not! And when the day is spent, they tell you what a gorgeous time they have had, and make you promise to fetch them again, and you promise, of course, do you not? You do like—heaven!

EDITORIALLY

How many more weeks will the state of Indiana fiddle on the lid of the coal bin?

—o—

How soon do you figure your knitting will do the soldiers any good if that sweater for yourself and the nifty scarf also for yourself are to be completed before you turn the knitting needles to the making of army socks?

—o—

OUR OBLIGATION.

With the drawing of numbers and the creation of the huge selective army, we are reminded more than evre forcibly that these millions of duteous defenders of the nation must be promptly cared for while they are with the colors. The immense number called makes the army in truth a national affair, affecting the whole people now and later.

These millions of young men are to leave civil life and ordinary pursuits, going in armies of 500,000 each to fight for the safety and perpetuity of the principles on which the republic is founded. These millions are to train in army camps here and abroad. They are to put up the best fight possible in trenches across the sea under extraordinary tests such as modern war puts on manhood.

It is our business to do all we possibly can do to help keep those young men clean and wholesome, free from disease and vice and the evils that go with booze. It is our business and their business to see to it that the American soldier forms habits of physical culture and mental and physical upbuilding, and that evil habits shall not be taken on in camp or field.

When we consider the immensity of the forces that are being drawn for military duty and when we think how these great armies, returning from the front, are to be the husbands and the fathers, the leaders of coming generations in American life, we begin to realize how closely and how vitally the future of the state of the race and of society is bound up with these great armies of ours.

Our soldiers must be protected and trained so they will come home physically better and stronger, and morally improved. These soldiers must not be permitted to be preyed on and poisoned by booze and prostitution. If we neglect our duty to our armies, the race will suffer in the future in accord with the measure of our criminal connivance at viciousness.

Every soldier victim of veneral disease, returning to civil life is a menace to the state, a curse and a danger, threatening innocence, tainting the unborn, blinding baybhood and weakening our future citizenship. The trail of the serpent runs along the years from generation to generation, and the state as well as individuals, must pay the heavy cost growing out of immorality and disease.—Indiana Daily Times.

Conservation does not mean starvation as some people seem to construe it, but on the other hand is intended to prevent that very thing. To read some of the learned newspaper discourses on food conservation one would be led to the conclusion that Americans were to eat nothing and send their surplus to the allies. But the government is asking nothing of the kind. You are asked to eat all that you want, to deprive yourself of nothing that is wholesome and sustaining, but to avoid all waste and to dispense with some of the luxuries and unnecessary gourmandizing, with attending waste, not at all requisite to man's comforts and ahppiness. There has no doubt been sufficient wastage in this country some years, if not all years, to sustain a frugal and economical country like Holland.—Fowler Tribune.

TO WED OR NOT TO WED.

By Winona Wilcox.

To wed or not to wed—That is the question which is troubling thousands here and there about this broad land.

Is it better to marry now and part for the duration of the war, or wait to wed after the war is over?

This indecision is a symptom of the great modern awakening of the individual to a person responsible for the success of matrimony.

The mere fact that lovers stop to discuss the prudence of it proves, in spite of the survival of war in the world, that there has been an advance in civilization along at least one line.

Modern lovers, refusing to accept matrimony as altogether a lottery, think past themselves. They ask each other if it is wise to marry and have a family when a home can not be established, as in wartime, with both parents to run it.

The state demands more and more children, individuals demand fewer and better children. Meanwhile nature regulates the birthrate according to her own subtile plan.

Which makes it so futile for anyone to advise inquiring young persons.

What they need to learn is that each marriage is a separate and individual problem. Interference even by parents is unthinkable, if the candidates are of sound mind and marriageable age.

About the only thing which old age and experience can teach youth is that marriage, like death, lasts a long time.

Youth rushes into marriage with no sense that it is the most permanent of human bonds. Nature hustles lovers, then society and the laws are blamed when marriage is discovered to be a kind of penitentiary where prisoners are interned for life.

Most persons forget that nature herself has made a marriage law.

"Kingdoms may be overturned, but not fatherhood.". Nor motherhood.

This is a text which should settle anybody's perplexities obout getting married, in war or peace.

All who think of marriage should be compelled to discuss it. And perhaps people who are too prudish to talk it over should not be permitted to marry at all

Lee O. Tustison, former St. Joe citizen and connected with The News, is now in full control of The Crescent Printing Co., of Defiance. A. V. Abernathy has sold his interest to Mr. Tustison and will take a position with the Cleveland Plain Dealer. This places Mr. Tustison in editorial and business control of the Daily Crescent-News and Defiance County Democrat. St. Joe friends will be pleased to know of Mr. Tustison's success and also pleased to have him in control of the publicotions. Under his management a bright and useful future is in store for the company.

Important Notice

In order to co-operate in the movement for increased food production and conservation by allowing students employed on farms to assist in September work, the opening of Purdue University has been postponed from Sept. 12 to Sept. 26, according to the following schedule:—

Entrance Exams. Sept. 19.
Condition Exams. Sept. 20.
Registration, Sept. 22-26.
Opening Convocation, Sept. 26.
Classes begin, Sept. 27.
Examinations for advanced credit, Sept. 29.

In special cases, students who are employed on farms and submit evidence from their employers certifying to the necessity of still further postponing entrance, may be received at the University as late as Oct. 10. Such students will greatly assist the University by notifying it as soon as possible in case they are to enter late under this provision.

Confesses to Wrong Doing

The vandal who defaced a county road sign on the Auburn-Fort Wayne road near the county line in Allen county was revealed to the county commissioners of Allen county Thursday when they received a letter from Marion Grosh, who resides on Route 2 from Auburn, confessing his guilt. Settlement for the damages, which amount to $6 is offered and a note from the father guarantees the payment of the same. It is probable that the matter will be settled in this way.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 343 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganlds are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

The Draft Catches All

Indiana's share of the first national army will be a cosmopolitan body, and included in the list of men who are subject to first call under the conscription law are young men whose names are best known in their communities.

Young millionaires, sportsmen, clubmen, athletes, educators, clergymen, doctors and lawyers are found alongside their more humble brothers in the list.

South Bend especially will be represented in the national army by men in all walks of life, millionaires, educators, sportsmen and laborers, will serve side by side. Among the wealthy men who hold numbers called early in the draft are Victor E. Paxson, Farmers Trust Co., the president of which is his father; Clarence J. Kamm, son of Adolph Kamm, of Kamm and Schellinger Brewing Co.; Charles A. Carlisle, Jr., son of the principal stockholder in the Milmore corporation; James P. Kehoe, C. S. C., Notre Dame; Carl L. Hibberd, owner of the Hibberd Printing Co.; Michael A. Mulcair, C. S. C., Notre Dame, was taken with the 276th number.

Glenn F. Slick, son of Thomas W. Slick, attorney, was named in 289th order. Slick is at Fort Benjamin Harrison. He attended Indiana university. Lenn J. Oare of the law firm of Oare and Geyer, held the 325th number. Notre Dame gave the cream of its manhood, Howard Parker, of the 1917 "Dome," the annual publication; Mervin J. Phelan, captain elect of next year's eleven; Jeremiah A. McCarthy, secretary to President Cavanaugh, and many men who are now studying for the priesthood were included.

Earl W. Jacobson, a South Bend real estate man, whose marriage to Miss Doris Hoke took place Saturday, was called. Charles A. Buechner, was drawn on the seventy-sixth number. He is now in federal agricultural service. Before him, Vernon C. Cripe, city milk inspector, was taken, and Howard N. Barbour, leader of the Orpheum orchestra, was named in sixty-second order. The ninety-seventh number drawn proved to be that of Frank H. Christopher of Mishawaka, whose father is well known in St. Joseph county, and is at present candidate for mayor of Mishawaka.

Men from South Bend, Mishawaka and St. Joseph county named in the draft will hold a mass meeting at the chamber of commerce Monday night to discuss plans for the future for those who have to care for dependents and also to hear an address by Frank E. Hering as to what the government expects from them in the way of service.

Noble Co. in France

Noble county has another boy with Pershing's Sammies, in addition to Carl Traxler of Kendallville. He is Virgil Winebrenner, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Winebrenner of Noble township.

In his first letter to his parents, he writes that he is feeling fine and is in the best of health, since his recovery from sea-sickness, during the first two days of the voyage. He says there was nothing consequental happened on the trip across, and that a submarine was not even sighted, although the troops imagined they would see a U-boat almost every day.

"We were protected from U-boats," said Winebrenner in his letter, "and were ready for all emergencies. I can't tell you as much as I would like to, as our mail is censored and the censors are very strict especially on military information. We are going to be quartered in wooden cantonments, and will be nicely situated.

"The French people seem to be very interesting, although it can be plainly seen they have endured untold suffering."

Profitable Chickens

Leghorns produce eggs cheaper than hens of the general-purpose breeds—Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds, and Orphingtons. This fact, which confirms the belief and experience of commercial poultry farmers, was one of the results obtained in a rather extensive feeding test recently reported by poultrymen of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Because they lay as many or more eggs, eat only about 55 pounds of feed per head as compared with 70 to 85 pounds eaten by the general-purpose breeds, and because their egg yield very materially exceeds that of general-purpose breeds during their second and third laying years, Leghorns, the specialists say, undoubtedly are more profitable to keep for the production of eggs only.

In this test the feed cost of a dozen eggs for one of the Leghorn pens was 7.34 cents in 1913 while the average cost of all the pens of the general-purpose breeds was 10.6 cents. In 1914 the feed cost of a dozen eggs for the same pen of Leghorns was 8.7 cents as against an average cost of 15.1 cents for the second laying year of the general-purpose pens.

During their third laying year the cost of a dozen eggs was 8.8 cents compared to 18.6 cents for the general-purpose fowls. The total value of eggs per hen over feed cost in the Leghorn pen for three years was $6.84 against $4.30 for the general-purpose hens. The highest egg production obtained in any of the feeding experiments up to 1915 was by a pen of Leghorns which laid 157.6 eggs per hen, at a feed cost of 6.7 cents a dozen.

The Leghorns produce smaller eggs than the general-purpose breeds. The average weight of the eggs of a pen of Leghorns during the first laying year was 1.42 pounds per dozen as against 1.53 to 1.58 pounds for the other pens. However, Leghorns laying eggs weighing 1.50 pounds per dozen or even more, the specialists say, have been selected and bred by many poultrymen. An examination in May, 1913, of 300 eggs from 3 Leghorn pens showed that 31 per cent weighed more than 2 ounces apiece, or 1.50 pounds to the dozen.

Advice of Governor

Dr. Lida Leasure, county superintendent of the schools of DeKalb county, received a letter Tuesday from Horace Ellis, state superintendent of public instruction, containing a plea of Governor J. P. Goodrich that the schools and colleges in Indiana be kept going during the war period. Dr. Leasure's term as county superintendent expires on August 16.

The governor's letter follows:

"In this present important period of the nation's history, when the thoughts of every one are upon the world's war and the part America is taking in it, we must not permit our high schools and colleges to suffer from lack of interest and attendance.

"For the students of today are the men and women of affairs of tomorrow, and without proper training we shall not in the years to come have the skilled statesmen and trade workers upon whom so much depends.

"The heads of our schools are proposing to lay emphasis upon the subjects tending to successful prosecution of the war, and I desire to urge young men and women of high school and college age to make every effort to enroll for studies this year.

"True patriotism in our young men and women not old enough to go to the front may well consist in preparing mentally and physically for the future."

WORLD'S EVENTS IN SHORT FORM

BEST OF THE NEWS BOILED DOWN TO LIMIT.

ARRANGED FOR BUSY PEOPLE

Notes Covering Most Important Happenings of the World Compiled in Briefest and Most Succinct Form for Quick Consumption.

U. S.—Teutonic War News

By an unanimous vote the senate military affairs committee at Washington decided to recommend immediate adoption of Senator Chamberlain's resolution to conscript resident aliens of military age.

* * *

Secretary McAdoo, submitting estimates to congress at Washington for the new war budget, said the first year of the war promised now to cost $10,735,807,000 exclusive of loans to the allies, making it necessary to raise more than $6,500,000,000 additional revenue.

* * *

Every enlisted man will be credited to his state when the second increment of the new national army is drawn, according to announcement made at the office of Provost Marshal General Crowder at Washington.

* * *

American and French soldiers will train together in the U. S. camp in France. Two battalions of "Sammies" will drill with one battalion of French "poilus." This is expected to hasten the Americans' full development as soldiers.

* * *

Congress at Washington is going to order the drafting of all aliens of military age, except subjects of the central powers, unless the state department, which has taken a hand in the question, can furnish a very convincing argument to the contrary.

* * *

Berlin will be entered by the air route and the United States is stacking up its resources behind the allies to furnish enough machines to make the conquest possible. This was the declaration at Washington of Brig. Gen. George O. Squier.

* * *

Nearly 100,000 additional National Guardsmen were called into the federal service by the war department at Washington as the second increment of state troops from 19 states and the District of Columbia.

* * *

An American army of 1,000,000 men for service abroad at once, instead of the 500,000 contemplated for the first draft, is foreshadowed by the Washington government's request for an additional $5,000,000,000 made to the senate finance committee. The first million men are to be made up of the first draft army of 500,000, the National Guard and the regulars. It is improbable that the first draft will be increased, but the government is arranging its finances for other drafts without the necessity of going to congress again for money.

* * *

President Wilson at Washington has cleaned house in the shipping board. He eliminated Major General Goethals, William Denman and John B. White from the board and the emergency fleet corporation, accepting the proffered resignations of Goethals and White and requesting the resignation of Mr. Denman. The president then appointed Edward N. Hurley of Chicago, former member of the federal trade commission, to succeed Mr. Denman; Bainbridge Colby of New York to succeed Mr. White, Rear Admiral Washington L. Capps to succeed General Goethals.

* * *

Washington

It was announced at Washington that the American flag had been raised over the great German steamship Vaterland, the largest of the German merchantmen taken over by this country when war was declared. The navy department took possession of the vessel. The navy department also took over 15 other German merchant vessels undergoing repairs in American ports and will push the work of fitting them up as transports rapidly.

* * *

Senator Borah, discussing the river and harbor bill in the senate at Washington, said: "Never at any time in this struggle has the outlook been as serious. Russia, to all appearances, is out of the conflict because of internal conflicts. It means that millions of American boys will find graves on European battlefields. No more serious condition could confront us than confronts the allies now. The situation is here and the hour of sacrifice has arrived."

* * *

Secretary of War Baker sent to the house commissioners at Washington an estimate for $5,197,877,347.98 additional war expenditures. Baker asked deficiency appropriations totaling $5,275,753,756.98 and supplemental appropriations of $842,124,591 for the Signal corps and the army.

* * *

Loans of $75,000,000 to Russia and $60,000,000 to France brought the total sum advanced to the allies within the last three months up to $1,523,000,000, says a Washington dispatch.

America's war bill, including budgets already noted and new sums to be asked by the administration, will reach the stupendous total of $17,000,000,000, Senator Smoot of Utah, one of the leading financial experts in congress, informed the senate at Washington.

Information made public at Panama shows that 1,876 ships passed through the Panama canal in the fiscal year just closed. In 1916 the number of vessels passing through the waterway was 787 and in 1915 the number was 1,008.

A German submarine was destroyed on the French coast west of Calais. The undersea boat went ashore and the crew, unable to free her, opened the gasoline tanks and set fire to the vessel. The members of the crew reached the shore, where they were made prisoners, according to a Paris dispatch.

Czernowitz, capital of Bukowina, has fallen to the Austro-Germans. This report was received at London from Vienna, by way of Amsterdam. The dispatch is credited, as the official Berlin statement reported the Russians driven from Kolomea. Kolomea lies about midway on the railroad between Stanislau and Czernowitz. The Russians have held the Bukowina capital ever since the province was cleared of the Germans in the great winter drive of 1915.

Five violent German attacks southwest of Moronvilliers (Champagne front), following an intense bombardment, were without gain to the enemy, the Paris official statement says. Two hundred and fifty guns were massed over the two-mile front on which the German crown prince tried for the seventh successive night to wrest ground from French lines on the Chemin des Dames.

The occupation of ten villages by the Roumanians in their new offensive is announced at Jassy, Roumania. The Austro-German forces retired in disorder. The statement follows: "We continued our advance as far as 12 kilometers (seven and one-half miles) from our old front, occupying all our objectives and taking possession of ten villages. We captured 450 prisoners, many guns and much war material. The enemy is retiring in disorder."

Nikolai Lenine, pacifist agitator, alleged German spy and fugitive from Petrograd since July 22, has been arrested after the greatest man-hunt Russia has ever known. Lenine was seized at Ozerki, Finland. It came when practically every citizen of Russia was participating in a house-to-house search for the man whom the government charged with complicity in the German plot of a counter-revolution against the provisional government.

TO REGISTER THE WOMEN OF STATE

Aim to Have Them Co-Operate With the Federal and State Governments.

TO AID IN FOOD PROBLEM

Enrollment Day Set for August 15—State's Gift to the Red Cross Totals $2,097,806.65—More Work for County Councils.

Indianapolis.—Steps were taken at a meeting held at the statehouse between H. E. Barnard and representatives of the Indiana League of Woman's Service to enroll 10,000 women throughout the state for co-operation with the federal and state governments in the conservation of food during the war.

A general enrollment day for women of the state will be held August 15. On this date the women will enroll on cards supplied by the national food director for the federal conservation service and on cards, supplied by the Indiana League for Woman's Service they will enroll for service with the league.

Of the number enrolled, 10,000 will be selected to assist in the work. The state will be divided into precincts and one woman assigned to each precinct to act as assistant in the conservation plans.

A series of patriotic meetings for women also will be arranged. Plans for one of these to be held at Seymour have already been completed.

Several Indianapolis women interested in the movement will attend the Seymour meeting, among them being Miss Julia Landers, chairman of the Indiana League for Woman's Service; Mrs. Carl Fisher, Miss Marie Chomel and Mrs. James Stutesman.

The federal registration cards will bear the following pledge:

"I am glad to join you in the service for food conservation, and I hereby accept membership in the United States food administration, pledging myself to carry out the directions and advice of the food administrator in the conduct of my household, in so far as my circumstances permit."

The registration for the service of the Indiana League for Woman's Service will be for the purpose of organizing the women of the state for "constructive patriotism."

State Financial Report.

Uz McMurtie, treasurer of state, and Otto Klauss, auditor of state, made public the monthly statement from the state treasury for the month of June. It showed a balance on hand in the treasury June 30 of $7,411,463.05. Disbursements during June amounted to $896,396.52. The total balance June 30, included $1,718,937.81 in the general fund; $1,896,065.58 in the school revenue for tuition fund; $849,085.21 in the benevolent institution fund; $486,877.60 in the state debt sinking fund; $842,962.48 in the educational institution fund; $3,810 in the college fund principal fund; $39.49 interest in the college fund principal fund; permanent endowment, Indiana university, principal $3,023.56, interest same $22,685.21; unclaimed estates, $107,896.78; sale of state lands, $205.80; reclamation of state lands, $1,573.36; state hydrophobia fund, $4,653.59; road fund, $722,376.89; fire marshal fund, $172.44; vocational education fund, $479,335.75; swamp land fund, $945.80; highway fund, $253,744.14. Outstanding warrants against the grand total in the treasury June 30 amounted to $88,426.75.

State's Gift to Red Cross.

The state of Indiana had contributed up to July 9, $2,097,806.65 to the $100,000,000 war relief fund of the National Red Cross, according to a statement of contributions received in Indianapolis from the American Red Cross headquarters in Washington. Of this sum Indianapolis contributed $483,414.15, or something more than one-fifth. The Indianapolis total, as given in the statement from Washington, was $500,109, with a correspondingly larger total for the state. But William Fortune, president of the Indianapolis Red Cross, explained that although that sum had been reported to the national headquarters, later checking over of the reports from the teams in the recent campaign in Indianapolis showed several duplications and other errors which reduced the reported total by $16,694.85.

The second largest contribution of the Indiana cities was Fort Wayne, $111,000; the third largest, Evansville, with $100,513.84, and the fourth largest Gary, $100,092.97.

Wright Leaves Recruiting Station.

The office of chief recruiting officer at the Indianapolis branch station of the United States marine corps, which was left vacant by the departure of Sergt. George C. Wright, who has been in command of the office since last September, will be filled by Sergt. Thomas U. Miller. He will be assisted by Sergt. Earl Bostick. Sergeant Wright, who is in line for a lieutenancy in the marine corps, will stop for a few days at the district recruiting station in Louisville, Ky., before going into training at Quantico.

To Care for Soldiers' Interests.

Co-operation of the state council of defense with the Indianapolis war recreation service bureau is outlined in a definite working suggestion which has been sent by James Edward Rogers, secretary of the bureau, to Will H. Hays, chairman of the state council. Mr. Rogers recommend that the suggestion be sent to every county council that one of the members be assigned as head of a general committee that shall register and keep in touch with the men who leave the county for different camps and for the front; that he keep in touch with these men and have the women sew and write letters directly to them and have the men take charge of the soldiers' business and domestic affairs and prepare for the return of the men, especially for the wounded.

With the enlargement of the work of the bureau a number of new names have been added to the membership. Gen. Edwin F. Glenn is a member ex-officio. Honorary members are Gov. James P. Goodrich, Mayor Joseph E. Bell, Charles W. Fairbanks, Will H. Hays, Rt. Rev. Joseph M. Francis, Rev. F. M. Gavisk and Caleb S. Denny. Other new members are Mrs. C. J. Buchanan, religious department; H. N. Sanborn, educational department; Mrs. C. C. Barnett, home department; Mrs. David Ross, social department. Dr. Herbert T. Wagner, fraternal department; Gilbert Hurty, entertainment department; Curtis Hodges, chairman, J. A. Stuart and George W. Stout, publicity department.

Church Federation Doing Good Work.

The efficiency of the Church Federation of Indianapolis in mobilizing the religious forces of this city in practical and effective work for cleaning vice out of the city is being widely recognized by religious organizations elsewhere. The Indianapolis work is being held up as a model for other religious forces to follow.

A circular has been sent out by the Rev. Roy B. Guild, executive secretary of the federal council commission on interchurch federation, New York city, in which a reprint of the federation editorial in The Indianapolis News, is cited as an example of how publicity of this kind can best be handled. "Keep Indianapolis Morally Clean," was the subject of that editorial, which was signed by C. S. Denny, president, and the Rev. M. C. Pearson, executive secretary of the federation. The editorial, in a very effective way, set out the fact that Newton D. Baker, secretary of war, had sent word to Gov. James P. Goodrich and the state council of defense that moral conditions surrounding Ft. Benjamin Harrison were not satisfactory and must be improved. The editorial then made trenchent suggestions for the united work of the church people of Indianapolis toward making the city morally clean.

"This reprint," said Mr. Guild, "shows how quickly the Christian forces of a city can be mobilized for an emergency when there is a strong intrenchment federation, employing a capable, all-time secretary."

Plan Fight Against Wets.

The Anti-Saloon league of Indiana has publicly announced that an open fight will be made in the next campaign to elect men pledged to the principles of prohibition.

No move has been made by the liquor interests to attack Indiana's prohibition law, which becomes effective next April, and in view of the legislation pending in congress, dry workers believe no effective attack will be made.

The hope of the wets, as they see it, is that sentiment against prohibition will be created after the law goes into effect and the next legislature will repeal the law. This is what the prohibitionists will seek to prevent.

There will be needed only 25 state senators to prevent a repeal of the law, according to Anti-Saloon league officials. There are many dry holdovers in the senate and the drys do not fear they will be unable to control the house.

May Call Session in August.

Governor Goodrich, following his return from waking up Washington to the seriousness of the coal price and supply situation, said that he had received assurances from leaders in the United States senate that make him confident that a provision would be included in the food control bill that will give the federal government direct control over coal prices, and the problem of distribution, at least during the war crisis.

The governor let it be known that he would wait for this promised action only a reasonable length of time. If something interferes, or if the government of the United States, having the power to use, fails to apply that power in a manner that will remedy swiftly the "outrageous" prices and service conditions in Indiana, the legislature will meet at Indianapolis to solve the Hoosier coal problem. Unless federal control intervenes, it is believed the special session will be called in August, though circumstances might delay or advance the date.

Withdraw Objections to Raise.

At the opening of the hearing before the public service commission on the petition of Indiana railroads for a 15-cent increase in freight rates on coal, Samuel A. Royse, attorney for the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association, announced that after a conference with the railroad officials he had decided, on behalf of the operators' association and the Terre Haute chamber of commerce, to withdraw their protests against the granting of the 15 cents a ton increase asked by the railroads.

CONGRESS TO ACT ON THREE BIG ISSUES

PROHIBITION, FOOD CONTROL AND REVENUE BILLS SLATED FOR DISCUSSION.

ADJOURNMENT IS INDEFINITE

Senate Commerce Committee Expects to Report the Trading With the Enemy Bill This Week—House Awaits Report on Food Bill.

Washington, July 30.—All three of the big issues before congress—food control, revenue and prohibition—are on the congressional calendar this week with minor questions coming up in such numbers that the leaders are about resigned to indefinite prolongation of the session.

The immediate work to be done on food and revenue legislation must be done in committee but before the week is over the food conferences and the senate finance committee, revising the war tax bill hope to report out their measures.

Meantime prohibition has the right of way in the senate which will take up today for a vote on Wednesday, the resolution of Senator Sheppard proposing submission of a national prohibition amendment to the constitution.

Senator Sheppard plans to open the prohibition discussion which promises a lively contest, touching many war questions. The vote, both sides admit, will be extremely close. Dry leaders hope for about sixty-five votes or just about the necessary two-thirds for adoption. The resolution still would have to pass the house which in 1914 rejected a similar measure.

During the week the senate commerce committee expects to report the trading with the enemy bill. Chirman Chamberlain of the military committee will bring in his bill for drafting the subjects of the European allies in this country and Senator McCumber's resolution authorizing the president to negotiate treaty changes to permit such draft will be reported from the foreign relations committee

The house is in recess waiting for the conference report of the food bill but there is a growing sentiment that if the extra session is to continue indefinitely the channels of general legislation now closed under a general understanding to consider only urgent administration matters should be opened up. Veteran members are pessimistic about any early adjournment and a large proportion of the house members is away.

Hearings on the $5,000,000,000 estimate for the army as a basis for a record breaking general deficiency bill will begin in the house appropriations committee today and tomorrow the house military committee will take up an alien drafting bill similar to that to be reported to the senate.

WILL ENLINST MARRIED MEN.

Captain Ryan Receives Instructions From Adjutant General Authorizing Enlistment in Quartermaster's Corps.

Fort Wayne, July 30. — Captain Thomas F. Ryan, in command of the Fort Wayne recruiting station, yesterday received a wire from the adjutant general at Washington, D. C., authorizing the enlistment of married men for the quartermaster's corps of the United States army as cooks and bakers, providing they will not call upon the government for aid in supporting their wives and dependents in excess of the pay and emoluments allotted to the rank he holds. The army will take these men and teach them the trade. This new order opens the quartermaster's corps, which is noncombatant, to men of draft age and affords an eleventh-hour opportunity to volunteer if they so desire.

Forty men joined the colors throughout the Fort Wayne district yesterday. Many more enlistments are expected today and Tuesday, as the draft notices are imminent.

Peruvian Congress Hears Message.

Lima, Peru, July 30.—The Peruvian congress met yesterday and after effecting organization heard President Pardo read his message to the legislative bodies in which the steps taken by Peru to safeguard the rights of her citizens in connection with Germany's submadine warfare were mentioned and hopes were expressed that Germany would give satisfaction for the sinking of the Peruvian steamer Lorton.

Eight Perish in Lumber Camp Fire.

Fernie, B. C., July 30.—Eight men are known to have perished and a number are missing in a fire that swept the Spruce river valley, fifteen miles northeast of here Saturday. CHAPTER II—Continued.

—3—

The Dowager Dragon glanced fore and aft; but there were no other passengers within earshot, and the ports behind them, though alight, were shut and sound-tight. "Betty Merrilees," she said.

"You're warm—as the children say in hide-and-seek."

"Aha!" the lady cried in triumph. "Well, then! Betty doesn't mean to try to beat the customs. She told me so herself. The row that man Loeb has kicked up about smuggling has scared her so that she's made up her mind to declare every blessed trinket. So you see, Quoin, you're simply wasting your time trailing Betty Merrilees."

Quoin smiled vaguely at his finger tips. "No, I'm not," he contradicted.

Mrs. Beggarstaff sniffed suspiciously. "I've guessed wrong?"

"For once in a way. The truth is, I don't care whether Mrs. Merrilees defrauds the government or not. It's over a year since I left the secret service. I don't like the work—too tame—and having learned all it could teach me, I quietly dropped out and returned to my old field."

"Private investigation, eh?"

"There's some fun in that," Quoin said with mild enthusiasm. "Odd jobs—I love 'em. They're generally so very odd—unexpected besides."

"Quoin," the lady inquired with a change of tone, "you remember the Joachim collection?"

"Do I remember it!" Quoin protested with reproachful sincerity. "I wish I might hope ever to be repaid for the sleep I lost on that case!"

"You never got a clue?"

"Never one. That was a masterly job."

"Has none of the stuff ever turned up?"

"Oh, plenty of it, here and there—mostly in Europe. In fact, I'm told that Joachim has reassembled most of the collection; but it has cost him five times his original outlay."

"There are, of course, pieces still missing?"

"Oh, naturally!"

"Well, then," said the lady deliberately, "I don't mind telling you that there's one piece I distinctly remember, on board this ship—a magnificent sardonyx cameo."

"Truly?"

"Would you care to see it? Then—look!"

Mrs. Beggarstaff unclosed her left hand. In its palm lay Miss Carteret's brooch!

With a wondering exclamation, Quoin bent forward to examine the cameo, while Mrs. Beggarstaff regarded with a triumphant smile his bent head. It was something to have startled the greatest living detective, which was precisely the distinction the keen-witted old woman accorded this man.

"Take it to the light and have a good look."

"Thank you," said Quoin, rising instantly and moving forward to the lighted companionway, where he lingered a long minute, intently inspecting the brooch with a small magnifying glass.

"Unquestionably one of the missing pieces," he declared flatly, returning, "and, if I'm not mistaken, one of the finest in the collection. How did you come by it, please?"

MRS. BEGGARSTAFF DISCOVERS THAT LUCY CARTERET OWNS A BEAUTIFUL NECKLACE WHICH HAD BEEN STOLEN FROM A VALUABLE COLLECTION SOME TIME BEFORE

A beautiful, well-bred English-woman, nervous and suspicious, finds when she boards the steamer Alsatia, bound from Liverpool for New York, that her stateroom mate is Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, a fascinating wealthy American widow of about sixty years. The girl says her name is Lucy Carteret and that she is going to America to meet her father, who has lived there many years. Something about the girl's manner makes the widow wonder what's the trouble. She is much surprised to find Lucy possesses a magnificent necklace which the girl said her father had given her for Christmas.

"It's the property of the young person who shares my cabin; name, Lucy Carteret. She's an American, about twenty, and has lived abroad all her life. Now she's going to New York to join her father, who—she says—gave her this on her fifteenth birthday."

"The question is, Who is Carteret pere?"

"I'm not psychic," Mrs. Beggarstaff objected. "The woods are full of Carterets; but I know none that this child resembles in any way. Besides, she has denied every relationship I've suggested so far."

"But we mustn't forget that, when found, this paternal Carteret will probably prove to be a perfectly honest bourgeois who picked up the cameo casually in some out-of-the-way shop, at home or abroad. I've often thought that the widespread distribution of that loot might be taken as pretty good evidence in support of something I've always contended was a popular chimera—the existence of a regular organization of social freebooters. You're going?" he added as Mrs. Beggarstaff stirred and sat up, preparatory to rising.

"The present owner of this bauble is asleep—and I want to replace it before she wakes up."

"One minute, if you don't mind. Perhaps you can tell me something—"

"On one condition," the old lady stipulated firmly. "You must let me in on the ground floor. I'll not lift my hand to help you in anything that's a mystery to me."

"I don't mind telling you in the least. This isn't a case—just simple curiosity on my part. Did you ever know anybody by the name of Hicks-Lorrimer—in London?"

"Bless my income!" exclaimed Mrs. Beggarstaff indignantly. "No! Who is he—or she?"

"I don't know; that's why I asked you—who know everybody. One question more: What do you know about your friend Mr. Craven?"

"Tad Craven?" exclaimed the Dowager Dragon in blank amazement. "What's he been doing?"

"Nothing very desperate: only making love to Mrs. Merrilees. Think she'll marry him?"

"Couldn't say. She's a flighty creature, and Tad's tremendously amusing. What concern is it of yours?"

"None whatever. You haven't told me what you know about him."

"Why—of course!—what the world knows. He's an entertaining little man who came out of nowhere to cheer us up about fifteen years ago. Never was heard of before one fine morning when we all woke up to find he belonged. No money, so far as I know—or just enough to enable him to live well without working too hard. Nowadays New York teems with just this type of unaccountable persons—decent, diverting, well-bred, and three-quarters idle. That's all—except I like the man."

"You never heard he was married?"

"He isn't!" Mrs. Beggarstaff exclaimed, dumfounded.

"I don't say so. I only wonder. Of course, if you never heard he was married, you never suspected him of having a daughter—you're too pure-minded."

"Thank you for nothing. What are you driving at?"

"And if he hasn't a daughter, who in thunderation is Lydia?"

"Quoin," said the Dowager Dragon solemnly, "I warn you, if you keep me on tenterhooks another instant—"

"Here you are, then," the detective interposed hastily; "but keep it to yourself. Yesterday afternoon, when I was killing time in the wireless house, a message came in which I read over the operator's shoulder as he wrote it down. It was for Craven, and ran something like this: 'Lydia disappeared. What shall I do? Awaiting advice before notifying police.' Signed, 'Hicks-Lorrimer.' And after a while Craven's reply was brought in for transmission, 'Keep away from police. If girl doesn't return, wire me New York Saturday.' Addressed, 'Hicks-Lorrimer, eleven King Charles' court, London, West.' Now who is 'Lydia' to Craven if not wife or daughter, that wireless messages must advise him of her disappearance? Not his wife; for he refers to her in his reply as the 'girl.' If his daughter, he must be a widower."

After a thoughtful moment the Dowager Dragon exclaimed, "Quoin! This Joachim brooch—has it struck you that the cameo bears a resemblance to any-one we know?"

"Craven, of course! Now you mention it, a distinct resemblance."

"This Miss Carteret says her father gave it to her because of its likeness to him."

"What did you say the name was, in full?"

"Lucy Carteret. But when she told me she tripped and stumbled over something that sounded suspiciously like 'Lid.' 'Lid' for Lydia, eh?"

"Lucy Carteret—Lydia Craven," the detective mused aloud.

"Help me up," the Dowager Dragon demanded excitably. "I'm going downstairs this minute and have a good look round that cabin, if the girl isn't awake. Quoin," she added with animation, as the detective gave her his hand, "if it turns out as we think—"

"Hope?" he suggested, smiling.

"For my part, hope. If it turns out as we hope, this voyage is going to be most amusing. And I was afraid of being bored!"

"Then," Quoin reminded her, "you ought to be very grateful to me."

"I love you for it!' Mrs. Beggarstaff declared ardently.

CHAPTER III.

Long after dark Miss Carteret wakened. For some minutes she lay in lazy content, unstirring, wide eyes dreaming into obscurity. The stateroom was dusky with shadows; but deck lights beyond the open window ports pointed wan squares upon the white interior woodwork. The sweep of clean sea air through the room was as sweet as fresh cool water to a parched throat. Feeling stronger and more herself for each delicious breath, humbly the girl gave thanks; for it seemed that, with the passing of the gale, the ghastly incubus of mal-de-mer had been exorcised.

Presently, conscious of a pang of hunger, she touched the repeating spring on her bracelet watch—an exquisitely small, jeweled extravagance, her father's gift of the previous Christmas—and bent an attentive ear to its elfin chime. Eight o'clock. It was too late to dress and dine in public. But as she lay in doubt, trying to decide whether she was really as hungry as she felt, or would do better to deny herself food until breakfast, she heard a sound from the outer deck so singular that in a twinkling it focused her drowsy, errant wits.

The sound was "Psst-pssst-psssst," a trisyllabic hiss of which each part was longer and more emphatic than its predecessor. Unmistakably of human origin, though as odd and alarming as the warning of a serpent, it brought the girl from her bed to her feet with a start.

Her movement was a noiseless one. The man who had sounded that strange call she discovered stealing immediately outside the window; his back was to it, so that she could see little more than the concave line of his dark, lean, shaved cheek, and the back of a long, narrow head beneath a steamer cap with vizor well down over his eyes.

Almost immediately the hiss was answered by quick, light footsteps, and the voice of one as yet invisible, a voice of guarded accent but vibrant with indignation, "What the devil do you mean by buzzing me like that?"

The girl trembled. Unless her senses were untrustworthy, she knew that voice better than her own. It seemed impossible that she could be mistaken.

It was again audible, the response of the man outside the window having escaped her. "You infatuate ass! Don't you know better than to take such chances?"

"Oh, it's all right. He's up on the boat deck, chinnin' with some skirt. I made sure of that before I laid for you. Trust me."

"Trust you to play the fool! Don't you know every word you utter can be overheard in those staterooms?"

Instinctively the girl crouched in the shadow of her bedstead, in deadly terror lest she be detected at her involuntary eavesdropping—so strong upon her sensitive perceptions the psychological effect of this surreptitious passage.

But her fears were quickly dissipated, the interview terminating as abruptly as it had begun.

"Good-night!" that well-remembered voice continued incisively. "And for the last time I warn you: Don't approach me again aboard this ship!"

"But—listen," the other pleaded and threatened in the one breath. "We got to get a straight answer out of you—"

"I've given it already—twice. For the third time—no!" With this the last speaker strode briskly forward.

Rising as silently as any shadow, Miss Carteret again turned her face to the port.

The man who had hissed was still there, watching the other way.

She fancied something sullen and menacing in the lowering inclination of his head, the stoop of his narrow shoulders.

Suddenly, with a mumbled word, inarticulate with anger, he turned and went swiftly aft.

Do you believe that Lucy Carteret is telling the truth and that she is an honest, high-class girl; or do you think she is one of a band of shrewd crooks? The next installment brings important developments.

Santa Turns Spaniard.

The whole toy industry of the world is undergoing readjustment because of the war, and countries that formerly imported their stocks from the countries of the present belligerents are now either looking to new sources of supply or are making their own toys. Spain has been among the first to take advantage of the altered demand and is making a strong bid for the markets of Latin-America.

"Mamma, can me and Tommy have some cake?" asked little Ruth. "Not unless you can ask grammatically," replied her mother. "Well, then," said she, "may I have a piece of cake?"

LESSON FOR AUGUST 5.

MANASSEH'S SIN AND REPENTANCE.

LESSON TEXT—II Chronicles 33:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.—Isaiah 55:7.

The reign of Manasseh was the longest of any of the kings of Judah. It is strange that a wicked king should have the distinction of the longest reign. This can be accounted for, perhaps, by the fact that the nation was in such a state that their idolatrous corruption needed to go to its fullest development. It seems to be necessary in a world of free beings, that their actions must go to a certain stage of development. It was so with the inhabitants of Canaan before that land was possessed by Israel. Israel was kept in Egypt until the iniquity of that nation was full. In this case doubtless the Lord permitted this to go on until the idolatrous practices would become extremely obnoxious. Another reason why this is done is to show God's long forbearance. He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance (II Peter 3:9). And finally, we can account for it on the ground that God permits these things to go on long in order to vindicate his justice when he judges. He does not strike in judgment until all hope of repentance is past.

I. Manasseh's Sin (vv. 1-9). Though he had the example of a good father, he with passionate endeavor gave himself up to the imitation of the heathen about him. This shows that grace is not inherited; a good father may have a bad son. It also teaches us that it is absolutely necessary to bring the grace of God into vital touch with our children, for that grace is absolutely essential to their salvation. Only his grace can counteract the downward pull of sin.

1. He restored the high places which had been destroyed by his father (v. 3). It is thus seen that he sought to undo the good work done by his father.

2. He erected altars to Baal (v. 3). The idols worshiped on these altars seem to have been images of licentious appearance, provoking the indulgence of the human passion. Therefore, with this worship was coupled the grossest licentiousness.

3. He introduced the star worship of the Chaldeans and Assyrians (v. 3). He even erected these altars in the house of the Lord, placing them on a level with God himself. His desire doubtless was [illegible] the people from worshiping the [illegible] God.

4. He set up Moloch in the Vale of Hinnon (v. 6). He not only encouraged this worship on the part of others, but he even caused his own children to pass through the fire.

5. He practiced magic, witchcraft, and dealt with a familiar spirit (v. 6). So gross were these practices that they did even worse than the heathen whom God had destroyed before the Children of Israel came into the land. It seems to be true always that when those who profess to worship God turn away from him, they indulge in sin in excess of the unbelievers.

6. He rejected the Lord's testimony (v. 10). Doubtless the prophets had again and again astonished him; but he seems to have turned entirely aside from such remonstrances.

II. Manasseh's Chastisement (vv. 11-13). The Lord in grace used the Assyrians to chastise Manasseh, so as to bring him to see his evil ways. He was captured, perhaps while hiding among the thicket of thorns (v. 11), bound in chains and carried to Babylon. This was most humiliating. His hands were manacled, his ankles fastened together with rings and a bar. This was a gracious treatment, though severe. It gave him a fine opportunity for meditation, and enabled him to realize the effects of the idolatry which he practiced in the cruelty inflicted upon him. The lesson which the Lord designed to teach him doubtless was that the worshiper is like the god he worships. Doubtless, the effect was to bring him to his senses, to expose his folly in turning away from the gracious God of Israel to the false gods of the heathen.

III. Manasseh's Repentance. (vv. 12, 13). Fortunately, the chastisement had its desired effect. Manasseh was brought to his senses and turned from his evil ways. The steps in his repentance are as follows:

1. Affliction (v. 12). This was most severe. Bound with chains and dragged to Babylon. While this was severe, it was light in comparison with the sins which provoked it. Many today are groaning under the weight of God's chastisement who have not yet come to realize that the weight is light compared with the offense. Affliction is God's love token (Heb. 12:6). Its primary design is to bring men back to God.

2. Supplication (v. 12). Manasseh had the good sense to cry out to God in this condition. It is the unmistakable evidence that God's chastisement is accomplishing its purpose. We are instructed in James 5:13 in time of affliction to pray. He besought the Lord, showing that he saw back of the strokes of judgment the personal God who was ordering them.

3. Humility (v. 12). This is a common characteristic of penitent souls. Those who come under the hand of God always recognize it in their humble walk.

4. Forgiveness (v. 13). As soon as God sees the signs of penitence, he turns in mercy to the penitent and grants absolution for sin. No one needs to wait long to receive his forgiveness.

5. His kingdom restored (v. 13). Manasseh not only was forgiven, but he was actually restored to his kingdom. Those who truly repent, God will not only forgive, but he will restore (Psa. 32:3-5).

6. Apprehension of God (v. 13). Through this experience Manasseh came to know God. He not only came to know God as the jealous God, the One who will not tolerate a rival, but he came to know him as a God of mercy. He came to know him in a new way. Happy are those who submit to the chastisement of God, who opens their hearts to receive the new revelation of himself, even though it be through the hand of chastisement.

IV. Manasseh's Reformation (vv. 14-20). Manasseh was not content with merely receiving God's forgiveness and restoration to his kingdom, but he sought so far as possible to undo the mischief which he had done.

1. He strengthened the fortifications of Jerusalem, so as to make his people safe from the attack of a foreign foe (v. 14). It is a ruler's solemn obligation to see to it that his people are made safe and secure against the enemy.

2. He removed the idols from the House of the Lord (v. 15). Through bitter experience he had come to know that an idol is nothing, that it could avail him nothing in time of deepest need, so he directs his efforts to their destruction. This is always the case when a man comes to really apprehend God; all his idolatry will disappear. He will not only remove them from his own experience, but will seek to remove them from those for whom he is responsible.

88 Called from County

DeKalb county must supply 88 men as its quota for the new national army of 500,000 and the filling up of the ranks of the national guard and regular army. Such was the announcement given out by Jesse Eschbach, state conscription officer at Indianapolis Wednesday.

DeKalb county received credit for 41 enlistments in the regular army and 119 enlistments in the Indiana National guard. The county's gross quota was 248 and with the subtraction of the 160 volunteers for service, 88 remains as the net quota that must be supplied by DeKalb county. The net quota for the state is 17,500 men.

Every county in the Twelfth district except Noble county has a larger quota to supply than DeKalb county. In Allen county 107 will be required, besides 381 in Fort Wayne. In Whitley county 118 will be the quota. In Steuben county the quota has been fixed at 91. In LaGrange county 104 will be called to the colors.

Noble County Has Least.

Noble county will have the least to supply of any county in this district, the two national guard companies in the county, one at Albion and another at Kendallville, helping to bring down the quota to 43.

Allen county gets a credit of 31 for regular army enlistments and 120 in the national guard. Fort Wayne gets a credit for 337 in the regular army and 194 in the national guard. Whitley county gets a credit of 24 in the regular army and 9 in the national guard.

Steuben county gets a credit of 11 in the regular army and 29 in the national guard. LaGrange county gets a credit of 13 in the regular army and 10 in the national guard. Noble county has 36 in the regular army and 129 in the guard.

No Draft in White County.

Jesse Eschbach, the state conscription agent, Wednesday completed the task of tabulating the exact quotas of men which each division and county in the state will have to provide in raising the first national army under the selective conscription law.

Th figures were compiled carefully by Mr. Eschbach with the assistance of experts from the office of the state board of accounts and are the official net quotas of men which will be reported by Mr. Eschbach to the war department in Washington. The new net quotas include the allowance of the twenty-one men assigned to various districts in the state because of the excess of enlistmnts in th fdral army and national guard reported by White county, the only one in the state which does not have to provide any men for the conscripted army.

There are but 22 counties in Indiana which have a lower quota than DeKalb county and all counties with a population equal to DeKalb county have a larger quota. This shows that DeKalb county young men are patriotic and are ready to fight for their country.

Call 176 for Examination.

Double the number of men needed to fill the quota in DeKalb county will be called for physical examination. This will mean that the first 176 drawn from the DeKalb county registration list will be summoned. It is thought that over half of those called will be exempted or discharged so that later it will be necessary to call others until DeKalb county's quota is filled.

State Agent Eschbach, Wednesday addressed orders to the four district appeal boards in Indiana, which have original jurisdiction in all industrial appeals, asking that meetings of the boards be held as soon as possible and that permanent headquarters be established for each board. DeKalb county is in the second of the four districts in Indiana.

Counted up to June 30.

The credit for enlistments in the guard and regular army was compiled on June 30 of this year. Co. K. the county's national guard organization embodied a greater part of the national guard enlistments and the remainder were members of Co. E at Hicksville, but reside in DeKalb county and are credited to their home county.

A number of men at the start of the draft list in DeKalb county have enlisted in Co. K since the members were drawn last week but it is not known whether these men will count toward DeKalb county's quota or not. If all that have enlisted since June 30 should be deducted from the quota DeKalb county's number will be reduced about 20 more.

An unusually large number of regular army enlistments are credited to DeKalb county. The larger part of these are from Garrett where twenty or more have enlisted in the regular army.

Our Soldier Boys

From Paul Krabill:

MONMOUTH PARK, N. J., July 18, 1917.

THE KRABILL FAMILY:—

I don't want any of you to worry about me, as I am as safe here as if I were at home. I am in the telegraph battalion, and all my work will be around headquarters. I will be many miles behind the firing line. The field battalion is the boys that do the trench work. I can get into the wireless battalion; but I think I had better stay where I am now, as I think I have the safest thing in the field. There is no cause for you to be alarmed about my leaving this country. I won't get away from the States before next April at the earliest. I will have to stick around until they get the drafted men trained for the front. I have not done any training since coming here.

This is a new station for receiving soldiers, and all we have been doing is fixing up the place. We are located on the old Monmouth Park race track. It was the largest track in the world until the New Jersey law abolished racing. This is the race track upon which Dan Patch, the famous race horse, made some of his world records.

This is a great place. Everybody is so friendly around here. They come around every evening with machines and ask the boys to take a ride. Long Branch is a great summer resort; and people from Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York have beautiful summer homes here. Long Branch has a population of about 15,000 during the winter. So you can see that is some city.

Shady Lawn is deserted this summer. I guess Wilson has all he can do this summer. I heard the other day that his wife is coming out to open up Shady Lawn. It is a beautiful home.

There is nothing but parks and large towns around here. Red Bank is only 3 miles, and has a population of about 20,000. It is a beautiful town, but not so popular as Long Branch, as it is about 3½ miles from the beach. It is nothing to see a beautiful art studio located in a garden of roses. Many famous artists from the large cities have their summer homes here.

I am burned black since I landed here. I have not worn a hat since coming here, as I am in bathing about half my time. There is something going on all of the time around here; and I think it is a good thing, as some of us would get home sick. I don't think I shall come home until late in the fall.

I feel better since I landed in the telegraph battalion. There is no danger at all. The boys in the field battalion make fun of me: they say I won't get to see any fighting. I think some of them will wish they were with me before this thing is over.

I don't know what to say about your coming out here. I can get off any time I want to. I was off from last Saturday noon until Sunday noon, and I could get a longer pass by asking for it. You could come into camp any time you wanted to. It would be impossible for you to stay here at night. You could stay as late as 10 p. m. If you make the trip, you should to stop off at Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York. There are some wonderful sights to be seen at Youngstown, Ohio, especially at night, when all the large steel mills are going. You can see large flames shooting up in the air 30 or 40 feet. It is a wonderful sight at night. If you come out here, you will find it a tiresome trip. You might not be able to stand it.

I have seen a number of states since I have been with Uncle Sam—Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland, New York and New Jersey. They may send me to Boston in three four weeks. I am going to try to stay here.

PECK.

From Paul Perry:—

SPARTA, Wis., July 15, 1917.

DEAR PARENTS:—

Say, I got a letter from you last night; but that isn't all I got. Those cookies and that candy were sure good. There were only three of the cookies that were busted up, and they were not bad. Stull and I ate all but three or four. We got a cup of tea after supper and had a feed before we went to bed. That is the way we ate that bread that daddy left here. We got some sweet pickles to eat with the bread.

I have been on duty this week. Went on guard Monday evening at 6 o'clock, and was on until 6 p. m. Tuesday. My hours were from 8 until 10 p. m, from 2 till 4 a. m. and from 1 till 4:30 p. m. I didn't do anything from 4 a. m. until 1 p. m.

About 9:30, while I was on duty, the officer of the day came riding up on his horse. I said: "Halt! Who is there?"

"Officer of the day."

"Dismount to be recognized, officer of the day."

The first thing he said when he came up was: "I just wondered if you would make me dismount."

Well, my heart was in my face all the time. Before I made him stop, I knew who he was. He asked me for my special orders and what my post was and gave me a few new orders to turn over to the sentinel who relieved me. The next morning, the sentinel told me that he came up to him and asked him for his special orders. So if I had forgotten any of them, I might have got in "dutch." My duty while on guard was to chase prisoners. I didn't like that at all, but I had to do it.

Tuesday morning, I heard that the drivers had been picked out and that the rest were gunners. That put me on the gun. So I went over to the supply office and put in for the job of "mule skinner." The supply sergeant asked me if I had ever been tried and a lot of other junk. I told him that I had never been tried, etc. So he told me to report at 8 o'clock next morning. We always line up to go to the stables at 7; but on account of rain on Wednesday, it was about 7:30. So I went out and asked Sergeant Pretty if I had to go to the stables with the other fellows. He asked me why. So I told him what I had done. He looked at me a little while and then said: "You get back in line and stay there. Of course, you have to march down with the rest."

That noon, he put me, with three other young men, on the B. C., or battery commander, detail. Dad, I told you about that detail when you were here; but I never thought I would be put upon it. We are about the range finder. The battery commander has to be where he can see the enemy and the guns and some object that the gunner can't see to use as a target. A telephone line runs from the gunner to the B. C. We have to get all the signals, etc. We have to know enough to take the battery commander's place if anything happens to him. We get the best horses, easy to learn, and also the fastest. That mus be a good job, because everybody says it is and that we are lucky to get it.

Well, we still go to the creek every Saturday.

One kid that came with us from Fort Washington came up missing last Saturday morning and has been gone all week.

No, we haven't had a pay day yet; and it has been like this every day since you went away: "When do we get a pay day? Tomorrow?" You know they talked while you were here.

You know that fellow that looked some like S. Wade? He was made sergeant last week, and we are getting to be pretty good pals.

Well, I have run down. Oh, yes! I got a big letter from Uncle E. L. Coburn.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Give $20 to Red Cross

At the meeting of the St. Joe fire department last Friday night, $20 was voted to the Red Cross. The money goes to the ladies, who will expend the money to buy material for making comforts for the soldier boys. If the kaiser were in America, he would see by the ready response of the people to all requests for aid, that they are in earnest and aim to do their part in giving him a good drubbing.

The Ladies in Charge

Last Sunday was Womens' day at the Spencerville Lutheran church, and there was nothing for the men to do but to take notes on how to conduct services properly. Several weeks before, the latter were in charge, and this time the ladies sought to outdo them. They were anxious to better the attendance at Sunday school; but they only succeeded in tying the brethren, there being 121 present on both occasions. Two additions were made to the church—Mesdames Robert Beams and Robert Furnish—a "scoop" for the ladies. Mrs. Mumma delivered the sermon. THE NEWS ventures the assertion that it was fine without seeking information on the point, for the women are prejudiced witnesses and it isn't right to bribe the men, particularly Rev. Mumma.

Farewell To The Soldiers

The DeKalb County Council of Defense, assisted by the County Red Cross Chapters, are planning a great farewell demonstration for all DeKalb County soldiers who are soon to leave for training camps.

One of the chief features of this farewell demonstration will be a great basket dinner and it is expected that there will be a "mobilization" of the gay and festive spring chicken, the smiling cherry, berry and custard pies, and all the other good things which DeKalb County matrons can prepare so well.

Instead of seating the soldier guests at a banquet table it is planned to have each soldier the guest of some family group or a combination of several families, and we want to make this dinner so tasteful and enjoyable that every time our soldiers, in distant camps or in foreign lands, let their thoughts run back to Old DeKalb County, they will be sure to have pleasant recollections of the last basket dinner with their friends.

In addition to the dinner there will be ten minute addresses by Judge Link, Mrs. Alda Brooks, of Waterloo, Rev. F. A. Shape, of Butler, and Hon. Howard Mountz, of Garrett, interspersed with appropriate music.

The farewell demonstration will be held in the Central School Park, in Auburn, and the buildings will be thrown open for toilet and water facilities, while any overflow of people can be taken care of in Library Park and under the trees in nearby streets, and streets west of the park, which are little used, will furnish ample room for parking vehicles.

The tentative date is Tuesday, August 14, but, if the troops are ordered from their stations at an earlier date, a change will be made and notice will be given through the Auburn Daily Star and by telephone.

Incidentally it is planned to take a free will offering as an emergency fund for Company "K", to be used to purchase articles of food, etc., which are not furnished by the Government.

Let everybody get busy at once; invite one or more of the soldiers to join your family group, plan well filled baskets and, lest some of the soldiers might be overlooked in the first invitations, there should be a goodly number of families prepared to take in a guest on short notice.

Talk it up! Let us make this demonstration historical in the annals of DeKalb County.

CARPETS : LINOLEUMS : RUGS

REVEILLE

Why plead for peace when armored might
And gross injustice press the fight
  And hideous wrongs appall?
Plead rather for the strength to stand,
To press the battle hand to hand,
  To sound the bugle call.

To arms! To fight the common foe.
To arms! The tyrant's power must go.
  To arms! We can not fail.
To arms! For honor laughed to scorn.
To arms! For children yet unborn,

Shall we prove slackers in the hour
When tyrants with their vaunted power
  Assail our homes, our land?
To arms! Till they who made appeal
To arms our armored might shall feel,
  And truth again shall stand.

Speak not of peace when wrong survives;
Plead not the worth of human lives
  In such an august time.
It is no time to whine, to cry;
It is the time to proudly die
  For faith supreme, divine.

WHY EXEMPT THE AMISH?

THE NEWS is not conceited enough to think that anything it may say will in any way affect the administration of governmental affairs. Hence, the editor will neither be surprised nor disappointed if President Wilson and his advisors do not alter their course to conform with the ideas set forth in this article. Public opinion, however, is shaped by the free and open discussion of all questions; and this is written in hope that, in a limited way, attention may be drawn to a wrong and a little good may result therefrom. This editorial is by no means an attack upon those in power, for they are but doing what their predecessors did—in good faith, too. The NEWS is acting upon the theory that the administration is honest, but wrong. This is not a time for caviling nor fault finding, but for loyal support of the government upon the part of every American citizen who has at least a gill of red blood in his veins; and if the writer thought that this article would embarrass, in the remotest degree, the authorities in the prosecution of the war, it would not be written.

The wrong in question is the exemption of members of the Amish church from conscription. Other religious bodies—Quakers, Dunkards and Mennonites—are also exempted; but the right or wrong of so doing is not under consideration—only the ruling as it affects the one denomination. And right here, lest there be a misunderstanding, THE NEWS states that the Amish are good people—honest, truthful, industrious and peaceable. That's much in their favor, is it not? But, notwithstanding these commendable qualities, they are undesirable citizens. No community is bettered by their presence.

Much is said about slackers these days—men who try to dodge military duty. This term fits the Amishman: he is a slacker at all times, in peace as well as in war. He dodges all public duties; he does not vote, will not hold office, pays his taxes complainingly and, having no public spirit nor patriotism, takes no part in moves for improvement or beautifying; and any public work that requires money is quite sure to meet his opposition. He is opposed to education, believing that learning creates rogues. If his children can read and write (and he is not particular as to their proficiency, either) and "spreche Pennsylfany Dutch" and, in addition, his sons can "cipher" a little bit, he is satisfied. Is there any wonder that the man who shirks his duty as a citizen and through a false conception of duty neglects his children should seek to shirk his duty in time of war? Certainly not, for his manner of living and early life are not conducive to patriotism or sacrifice for his country.

The Amishman is a devout Christian, but he is selfish and clannish in the observance of his religion. With him, charity begins and ends at home—within his own church. He is ever ready to assist a brother Amishman. Indeed, he is an example to members of other denominations in this respect. No Amishman is permitted to want; and, if he be sick, his crops are cared for and harvested as well as if he were well. But here he stops. He is blind to want outside his church. There are exceptions to this rule, of course; but they are very few. He takes no part in moves for moral or civic betterment, being content to plod away on his farm and amass the means of adding to the number of his acres. He deals with his Creator as closely as he does with his fellow men, often worshiping Him under the same roof that shelters his cattle. Is there any wonder that this man is a slacker? Can the man whose perspective is limited to the confines of a small religious body be expected to see anything in the world beyond? He must be educated—taught that his narrow conception of duty is wrong.

The Amishman is non-progressive. He would stand still if he did not occasionally get in the way of human advancement and receive a bump that shoves him forward. In one place, the church nearly split over the adoption of manure spreaders, some of the worldly minded brethren using them before the others had cast the devil out of the implement. At first, the church opposed self binders; and, today, telephones, autos and musical instruments are looked upon as the works of Old Nick himself and carpets, rugs, window curtains, easy chairs, etc., are "worldly." He has scarcely any communication with the outside world by means of books and papers. No wonder he claims exemption.

The Amishman has all the protection of the law, and gives nothing in return but taxes. He is benefitted by society, but of no benefit to society. The young man of promise, who is ambitious to be something and do something, is forced into the army, but the Amish clod stays at home and profits by the war. This condition is excused on the ground that the Amishman is conscientiously opposed to war. So are thousands of Methodists, Lutherans, Christians and members of other denominations Why not be fair and exempt them? The reply is that opposition to war is part of the Amish creed. THE NEWS doesn't accept that as a reason: the seat of conscience is in the brain and not in a prayer book.

It is a rank injustice to call to arms the best young blood of America and excuse the man who shirks every public duty because of a creed he probably never read or would not understand if he should read it.

No Hit at Employes

Word has reached this office that the articles relative to the St. Joe telephone system were aimed at the the employes. This is wrong: the service is poor because the greater part of the equipment should adorn a junk heap instead of being rented to a long suffering public at so much per; and the most skilled and obliging employes could not give good service over it. It is recorded but once—in the first chapter of Genesis—that something was made out of nothing, and it took the Almighty to do that; and to expect the employes of the St. Joe telephone to give good service with the means at hand is crediting them with power that no human being ever possessed—too much like expecting them to say "Let there be service" and there was service.

Does THE NEWS make itself plain?

Paul Maxwell Enlists

Paul Maxwell has shown his patriotism by enlisting. He is a member of Battery F, of Bloomington, Indiana. He had previously tried to join the national guard, but failed to pass the physical examination. He succeeded, however, in gaining admission at Bloomington, where he was attending school at the University of Indiana. The command which he joined is composed of students. He was home last week. He returned to school on Sunday, where he will continue his studies until called into the service, two or three weeks hence.

Asleep at the Switch

Is a good omen to apply to great many merchants. They have:
No nerve to buy ahead.
No mercy on the buying public.
No contentment with one profit.
No idea of future needs.
Nothing to do but kick at others who, by careful study and shrewd attention, are able to undersell them. It keeps us jumping to attend to our business. Our large and increasing volume of trade is evidence we are on the job all the time. We want more business. Come in. We have the goods.

COUNCIL FAVORS FOOD PEDDLING

Takes Action and Makes Recommendation to the County Councils of Defense.

CUT OUT THE MIDDLEMAN

State Public Service Commission Sets August 20 for a Consolidated Hearing of the Surcharge Case.

Indianapolis.—Recommendations for establishing markets where produce may be sold directly by producers to consumers and the promotion of food peddling directly to homes will be sent out to county councils of defense by the state body, following action taken at the weekly meeting of the state council of defense at the statehouse. Everything that will eliminate handling of food by different buyers and sellers will be advised in an effort to keep food prices to normal and to assist in the fight against waste.

Even the possible doing away for a time of the usual license fee for producers selling in towns and cities was urged by some members of the council in a discussion on the subject. It was suggested also that the plan of opening markets only to actual producers and not to any middlemen might be advisable. A representative of the council will be sent soon to Evansville and Fort Wayne to confer with food handlers there as to the best way to distribute the food in their communities.

Volunteer Visitors to Be Used.

Chairman Will H. Hays appointed A. W. Brady, E. M. Wilson and Evans Woollen a committee to prepare data to be used by volunteer visitors to be appointed later. The visitors will be asked to go to each county council of defense in the state and assist in getting definite plans under way. They will be called for from among the citizenry outside of the council and will be asked to contribute their services entirely out of patriotism. Definite plans will be formulated as soon as the national food bill question is settled, it was pointed out. Twenty volunteers will be needed.

George Ade of the council explained a plan for state-wide publicity in connection with the work of the body once it is well under way on a definite program. He suggested that such Hoosiers as Booth Tarkington, Meredith Nicholson, Gene Stratton-Porter, university presidents, prominent business men and others be asked to prepare short signed articles on patriotic subjects for publishing in the newspapers of the state.

Hearing Fixed for August 20.

The Indiana public service commission Monday afternoon held that there was doubt concerning the right of the Indiana Electric Light association to petition on behalf of its members for a 30 per cent surcharge on all bills to their consumers and that each company desiring relief should file its individual petition independent of the association. The companies were advised to submit their petitions at once and a consolidated hearing on these petitions will begin August 20.

At that time there will be a general inquiry into the abnormal conditions which the companies assert have brought about the necessity for a temporary increase in rates. It is presumed that the subject matter of the petitions will be identical, following in spirit the petition of the Indiand Electric Light association, which urged that the increased price of coal and other materials made it necessary for the companies to have more revenue. The commission adjourned after announcing its decision, which was given by Edward Corr, one of the commissioners.

Question Raised by Board.

The question of the jurisdiction of the commission in hearing the petition of the association, as a committee of companies, was raised by William A. Bond, city attorney of Richmond, appearing on behalf of all the cities affected, who contended that the commission could only take up the case of each company individually. In closing the argument, Mr. Bond called attention to the fact that no public-owned electric utility had asked for an increase in rates. The attorney declared that the utility companies should not contend for "their pound of flesh and drops of blood" at this time, when everybody is having to make sacrifices on account of the war.

"These gentlemen should help to bear the burden instead of trying to pass it on to the people," he said.

At the conclusion of the session, Mr. Bond held a short meeting with city officials from various parts of the state for the purpose of planning their appearance at the hearing August 20.

Will Assist Mrs. Born.

Mrs. M. A. Potter, Miss Janet Flanner, Mrs. J. C. McCain and Mrs. Hence Orme have been appointed by Mrs. Isaac Born, a member of the Marion county council of defense, to assist her in the enrollment of women for service under the registration card system of the league for woman's service and to help obtain signatures to the Hoover food conservation pledge cards. Miss Julia Landers, as chairman of the Indiana League for Woman's Service also will serve as a member of the committee.

Vocation Body to Be Chosen.

A committee to select a representative body to direct intensive industrial education in Indiana for the period of the war was named at a conference held by the state council of defense with state and federal officials. The members of the committee are Charles A. Greathouse, J. G. Collicott, H. C. Atkins and Charles Fox. They will present the names of men to form a representative body of vocational education experts and labor experts. It is expected to have the new commission carry out in Indiana the suggestion of the national vocation commission following the policy to be announced by the Washington body soon. Special war service vocation work will be dealt with in the movement.

Will H. Hays, chairman of the state council, called the conference at the request of H. F. Miles, representing the national council of defense.

Mr. Miles, who is chairman of the Wisconsin board directing vocational education in the state, appeared with a recommendation from George F. Porter, in charge of that section of the national defense council on co-operation with the states, and he stated that he was working with the labor section of the federal council, under Samuel Gompers.

"When the war broke out the women in England volunteered for factory service to take the places of the trained men," said Mr. Mills. "There was no way of giving any special training to the women. They simply threw them into the machines, which filled them with terror, and as a result production was greatly retarded and a great many of the women broke down. It was terribly unfortunate, and we hope to avert such a condition in America.

"We have two methods for accomplishing our purpose. The first is to accept for industrial work only such women and 'green' men as are almost ready for this kind of work, due to previous experience, and through picked men instruct them while they are on the job to do the more exacting tasks; second, by establishing in a corner of the shop or somewhere in the industry a school, where by intensive practical instruction we hope to fit them for the tasks ahead.

Make Industry Army Effective.

"In this manner we hope to make our industrial army effective. From 60 to 80 per cent of our employees will be new in many lines of activity, and we cannot rely on the efficiency of the recruits. We are also charged with an adjustment and placement of workers of this class. We must classify and instruct those competent machinists who may be needed for the construction of airplanes, and we must train inspectors of airplanes, who, by the nature of the work must be, in the first place graduates of high technical schools."

Mrs. Born Takes Chairmanship.

Mrs. Isaac Born has been appointed a member of the Marion county council of defense and has been made chairman of woman's work for the council. In this capacity she will take charge of the distribution of the national food conservation cards and the registration of women for war work under the National League for Woman's Service. The registration will be begun immediately, and will be continued until August 15, which has been set aside as "food conservation day." All women who have not registered up to that time will be expected to do so then.

Mrs. Born, as president of the Indianapolis Franchise league, will use the ward and precinct organization of the league, to carry on the campaign. The league members will poll the city, block by block, carrying the food cards and the Woman's Service league cards along with the poll cards of the Woman's Franchise League of Indiana.

The entire resources of the franchise league have been offered by Mrs. Born to the defense council for war work, in accordance with the precedent set by Mrs. Richard E. Edwards, president of the state league, who offered to the state the services of the organization for any bit of war work which it may be called on to do.

Turn Down Call for Legislature.

At a meeting of the executive and legislative committees of the Woman's Franchise League of Indiana at the headquarters in Indianapolis, with Mrs. Richard E. Edwards of Peru, the president, presiding, the question of asking Governor Goodrich to call a special session of the legislature to put up to the people the question of a special election for the constitutional convention was voted down.

The Woman's Franchise league is one of the societies affiliated with the Legislative Council of Women, which sent such a petition to Governor Goodrich upon the vote of a majority of the affiliated organizations. The Franchise league had no voice in the matter of the letter, as there was no official representative of the league at the called meeting of the council when that action was taken.

"Shirts for Soldiers."

Steps are being taken to make the Indianapolis "shirt for soldiers" workshop a substation of the quartermaster's depot at Jeffersonville, and owing to this enlargement of the original plan, the opening of the workshop has been postponed until next Monday. By that time all arrangements will have been completed to make Indianapolis the central supply shop for Indiana. These steps are being taken by the Indiana League for Women's Service at the request of the quartermaster's department.

OKLAHOMA DRAFT FIGHTERS QUELLED

FIGHTING BETWEEN ORGANIZED RESISTERS AND OFFICERS RESULT IN DEATH OF ONE.

THIRTY OR MORE ARRESTED

A Total of 193 Have Been Taken Into Custody — Men Arrested Are Mostly Willing Captives—Send Word of Willingness to Surrender by Women.

Holdenville, Okla., August 6.—Fighting between organized resisters of the selective draft and posse men near here yesterday resulted in the killing of Ed Blalock, an objector to military service and the wounding of two posse men, Jack Paige and Henry Johnson. Paige was carried out by the gang. A large posse has gone to his rescue.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Aug. 6.—Armed posses seeking to quell organized resistance to the federal draft law in central Oklahoma arrested thirty or more men yesterday, making a total of 193 taken into custody. Members of the "working class," "the Jones family" and similar groups of objectors to military service failed to make good their boasted readiness to battle representatives of the law and state authorities were hopeful that the disturbance was at an end with the exception of rounding up the leaders to prevent another outbreak.

Rumors of federal intervention with troops, current were said yesterday to be without foundation but the United States government will take a hand throught the district attorney's office in running down and prosecuting the opponent of the draft law.

District Attorney W. P. McGinnis, of Muskogee has informed Sheriff Al. Nichols at Wewoka, in Seminole county that representatives of the United States marshal's office and of the district attorney's office would arrive today to aid the state authorities.

It was said also that it was not likely the state would send troops to the district affected.

Men arrested were for the most part willing captives. A number sent word by women members of their families that they were willing to surrender. Twenty-two bands remain, according to reliable information, the others having broken up when pursuit became hot. Twenty-six men are in one group eight miles northwest of here, camped on Salt creek, while a gang is ten miles east. Rumors of trouble near Lamar, in Hughes county, could not be traced to reliable sources.

Among the captured objectors are four alleged leaders, Mate Harris, John Spears, who sent word that he wished to surrender, Albert Huckleberry, and Jaboz Ebenfield. At least three of the leaders, according to prisoners' statements, are still at large. Two of these men it is said are expected to show fight before captured.

The trailing of the disturbers was made easy by full blood Indians, Seminoles for the most part, who followed the tracks unerringly and by their ability in woodcraft effected many captures. The Indians have aided the loyal white citizens throughout the disturbance and but few have been found in the ranks of the malcontents.

Affidavits by prisoners tell of the belief of the tenants inspired by agitators, that to be drafted into the national army was to go to sure death.

This resistance to service has been the binding element holding together the scattered elements of the uprising. However, the discontent which rendered the movement possible had its beginning more than two years ago, it is said. Shortly after the outbreak of the war, when cotton prices were low and transportation costs high tenant cotton farmers asserted that if they ran out of food and money they would get it by force.

Since that time, the agitators, with promises of wealth and power, have worked continuously in the vicinity, finding a fertile ground for their propaganda. Lately the meetings have been held as often as three times a week, and always in a secluded spot in the woods.

The capture of "Bud" Manealey early Sunday by Parney Fixico, a Seminole Indian, presented a humorous feature of the grim happenings of the last few days. Manealey, dressed as a woman, and accompanied by two members of his family, was discovered on the road to Sasakwa by the Seminole. Suspicious of the coarse tone on Manealey's voice, he shoved his rifle into his ribs so violently that his bonnet was knocked off, disclosing a bald head. Marching his prisoner to town and failing to find a place in the jail, Fixico placed a log chain around his neck and fastened him to a post, and stood guard over him until relieved.

Thirty-One Dead In Mine Disaster.

LUCY CARTERET ADMITS THAT SHE IS LYDIA CRAVENS AND THAT HER FATHER DOESN'T KNOW SHE IS GOING TO AMERICA TO LIVE WITH HIM

A well-bred young Englishwoman, nervous and suspicious, finds when she boards the steamer Alsatia, bound from Liverpool to New York, that her stateroom mate is Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, a fascinating, wealthy American widow of sixty years. The girl introduces herself as Lucy Carteret and explains that she is going to make her home with her father in America. Something about the girl's behavior puzzles the widow, and she is much surprised to find that Lucy owns a magnificent necklace which had been stolen from a museum collection some time previously, and informs her friend, Mr. Quoin, a private detective. Lucy, dressing in the dark in her stateroom, hears a mysterious conversation between men just outside her window and recognizes one of them.

Two minutes later the stewardess, hastening to answer a series of impatient rings from B75, found that stateroom bright with light and tenanted by a pale but animated young woman frantically struggling into a haphazard selection of garments, with the evident intention of making immediate appearance in public.

"Winant, do you think you could find me a passenger list?"

"Oh, surely, miss."

"I want very much to see one. Please fetch it at once."

Gravely Winant shrugged and went her way, shrewdly guessing close to the cause of the passenger's excitement. "Some sweet'art, likely," she reflected with the indulgent pity of a self-supporting married woman not obliged to live continuously with her husband. "Found out some'ow 'e's on board, w'ich she wasn't expectin'."

So instead of summoning the ship's doctor to pass upon the advisability of allowing the convalescent to go on deck, Winant serenely carried out her instructions, returning to find Miss Carteret all dressed save for hooks and shoebuttons.

"You've been in since I went to sleep this afternoon, Winant?" the girl demanded as Winant entered.

"Yes, miss, tidyin' up a bit."

"You didn't notice a brooch anywhere—on top this chest of drawers?"

"A cameo brooch? Yes, miss, I did, and left it w'ere I saw it."

"Really? But it's not there now. What can have become of it? Oh, is that the passenger list?"

In her excitement, almost snatching from Winant's grasp the printed list of first-cabin passengers, the girl promptly forgot the missing brooch.

"You're sure, miss," the stewardess pursued, first examining the chest and then kneeling to paw the carpet beneath it, "you're sure you didn't by any chawnse knock it off while dressin'?"

"What?" the girl murmured abstractedly, her gaze racing down the dense columns of small type.

"The brooch, miss—"

"Oh, bother that! It's surely somewhere about. I'll find it later. Oh, Winant!" she broke off with a cry of delight. "It is true! I knew I couldn't be mistaken! He is on the ship!"

Her trembling forefinger indicated midway down the column headed "C" the entry, "Craven, Thaddeus—New York."

"The gentleman as you're engyged to, miss?" Winant hazarded impersonally; and having noted the name stepped behind the girl to hook up her frock.

"Engaged to? Oh, no, Winant!" The girl laughed. "How absurd! Why, he's my father!"

"Mr. Craven, miss? But I thought as 'ow your nime was Carteret, miss."

"Oh!" the girl gasped in transient dismay. Then she laughed. "To be sure, that is the name I sailed under. But my real name's Lydia Craven—not Lucy Carteret at all. You see, I didn't want—well—somebody in England—to know I was sailing."

"Your father, miss?" Winant hazarded dispassionately, kneeling again to attend to the girl's shoes.

"No; someone else. I—I didn't know my father was in England, you see," Craven's daughter faltered in a first faint chill of doubt. "He—he must have made a hurried trip on business—he's a very busy man—and didn't have time to notify me. But that," her spirits dictated on the rebound, "only makes it more strange and wonderful—that we should meet this way! He will be surprised."

"I warrant!" Winant commented with an ambiguity lost upon Lydia, who accepted the response as one of simple concurrence, whereas the woman at her feet was hiding an ironic smile.

In point of fact, this Tad Craven of Mrs. Beggarstaff's acquaintance was a conspicuous figure among transatlantic travelers, one who crossed frequently, and, lacking any other title to notoriety, would have made himself remembered by his lavish tips. Moreover, Winant read American as well as English newspapers, and knew a vast deal more about Craven than that man would have cared to credit—who, when all's said, wasn't lightly to be termed a man of retiring disposition. Thus the discovery that he had a daughter (and why not a wife living, as well?) was one tremendously titillating; for trade in gossip about notabilities goes on as briskly between decks on fashionable Atlantic steamships as below stairs in fashionable homes on either side of the water.

But Craven's daughter, forgetful of the serving woman, sat with eyes serene in a face radiant with the glow of happiness in her heart. Never a doubt troubled her ardent anticipations. That ominous note which had been sounded in the brief conversation outside her window was now forgotten—at worst could not have shaken her faith in his loving kindness. That was something always to be counted upon, something that had never failed her. And if his attitude of late might have seemed inconsistent with truly sympathetic affection, Lydia knew better: her father had not so much opposed her wishes as he had underestimated the sincerity of her mutiny against the rule of Agnes Hicks-Lorrimer.

How could it be otherwise, with a gap of five long years in their association, five years of separation, change and growth?

His thought aroused appreciation of the great changes time had wrought: so great that it wasn't difficult to fancy Craven failing to recognize his daughter, whose memory with him must be that of a hobbledehoy of fifteen, long-legged and awkward, with perpetually freckled snub nose, mouth too wide, and eyes too large for her thin face, and her hair in plaits—two wrist-thick cables of it falling below her waist, carroty red, and bound with broad butterfly bows of stiff blue ribbon.

Mrs. Hicks-Lorrimer's idea, that of the butterfly bows—the final touch of ignominy! Lydia dated her hatred of the woman from the hour when she had been compelled to submit to those unspeakable decorations.

But today—Lydia smiled tenderly. No; Craven wouldn't know his girl—not until she told him—unless, to be sure, she had grown somewhat to resemble her mother, who had been a famous beauty—or so Mrs. Grummle of the Bloomsbury lodgings had asservated—and so Craven himself, under pressure of persistent questioning, had once admitted.

Winant, rising from her knees, dispelled reverie. "Is that all, Miss Craven?"

Lydia smiled brilliantly. "That's right," she affirmed with decision. "Let me be Miss Craven from now on. Do you think you could find my father for me, Winant?"

"Oh, surely, miss." Winant preserved a straight face. "Would you wish me to send 'im to you 'ere?"

"Oh, no. I merely want to know where to look for him. But to send him here to find me—why—don't you see?—that would spoil it all!"

"Quite so, miss. I won't be a minute."

To Lydia, waiting with eyes shining and lips tremulous with anticipation, entered unexpectedly her Dowager Dragon; and entering, for the first and only time in their association betrayed no signs of some slight embarrassment and bewilderment.

"Heaven help our home!" Mrs. Beggarstaff cried, thunderstruck. "Where are you going, child?"

"On deck, probably." Lydia informed her with a twinkle of mischief.

"But—my blessed income—"

"Dear Mrs. Beggarstaff," Lydia interposed impulsively, "I must tell you, something has happened—something so wonderful and delightful that I verily believe it would have got me out of bed had I been at the point of death!"

"Poh!" exclaimed the Dowager Dragon impatiently. Surprise faded in her eyes, and was replaced by something strangely like disappointment. With a quick movement she closed the door and sat down on her bed. "Nonsense!" she added with unaccountable irritation, looking the excited young woman up and down. "My dear, you're not going to tell me you've found out your father is on board?"

"How in the name of wonder did you guess?"

"I didn't guess—I knew," the Dragon retorted, sententiously. "I know everything, including my own mind: my middle name is Omniscience. Remember that, next time you try to keep Amelia Beggarstaff in the dark. You're Lydia Craven, and your father's Thaddeus Craven—Tad Craven to me and—"

"You know him? You know my father, Mrs. Beggarstaff? You dear!"

With a grim smile, the Dowager Dragon submitted to a spontaneous embrace, then gently fended off the agitated girl. "There!" she growled with an attempt at acerbity not wholly successful. "Save your kisses for your dad! I dare say you've played the deuce with my complexion, and as for my wig," (this while readjusting that disarranged adornment) "if you can't keep your own hair on for joy, you might at least be good enough to let mine roost where it belongs!"

"But—I don't care!" Lydia retorted with gay defiance. "You know my father, and I've a perfect right to kiss you for that, if I want to. Tell me how long you have known him, and how long you've known I was his daughter, and what made you begin to suspect, and—"

"In pity's name!" the Dowager Dragon interrupted, covering her ears. "One question at a time. Be still, and I'll tell you."

But here, to her open relief, the stewardess knocked and entered, with the effect of rendering Lydia oblivious to all else.

"Yes, Winant? You've found him? Where?"

"One of the stewards tells me, miss, 'e's just seen Mr. Craven abaft the deck'ouse on the main deck, astern."

"Thank you so much, Winant. Good-by, Mrs. Beggarstaff!"

Snatching up wrap and scarf, Lydia was off in a breath.

Those she left behind eyed one another oddly—the Dowager Dragon with a twinkling look of inquiry: the stewardess with discreetly tightened lips and half-lowered lids that, hinting at mysteries unutterable, were a plain provocation to any competent catechist.

And the face of Mrs. Beggarstaff grew bright with the light of battle.

CHAPTER IV.

Lydia stepped over the high sill of a doorway to open air upon the main deck abaft the superstructure and gained the shadow of the deckhouse wherein the rudder engine clanked and groaned. When she came to the open space between the deckhouse and the taffrail the moon slipped from behind a cloud, drenching the ship with ghostly radiance, and she stopped short. In no other public part of the vessel could one—or two—have found greater privacy.

Two, at least, seemed to have thought of that. In that fan-shaped space behind the deckhouse, close by the singing meter of the log, Craven stood with Mrs. Merrilees in his arms. Wholly unaware that they were not alone, these two clung to each other, lips sealing lips in the ecstasy of a long and passionate embrace, moveless save as they yielded to the motion of the ship.

Lydia stood rooted in incredulous embarrassment. In that pitiless wash of naked moonlight she could not fail to recognize the woman. She was Mrs. Merrilees beyond question, gowned precisely as she had been that first night out, forever to be a figure of radiant loveliness in the galleries of Lydia's memory.

But that the other, her lover, could be Thaddeus Craven—impossible! A passing likeness to his sturdy but graceful figure—deceiving eyes too eager to recognize a beloved parent: it could be nothing more than that. Impossible that he, her father, could be the lover of a woman but little older than herself!

Things happen immediately which Lydia did not bargain for, and the unfolding of a mystery is vastly disconcerting to several persons. The veil is lifted in the next installment.

Mean Brute!

"Women lack discipline," growled Mr. Gabb.

"In what way?" demanded Mrs. Gabb.

"You can't induce them to cease firing when they begin shooting off their mouths," replied Mr. Gabb.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 12

JOSIAH'S GOOD REIGN.

LESSON TEXT—II Chronicles 34:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth.—Eccles. 12:1.

The reign of Josiah is in striking and pleasing contrast with that of many of his predecessors, especially that of his father, Amon, and grandfather, Manasseh.

I. Time of Beginning (v. 1). He ascended the throne when only eight years of age. At this tender age he evidently had a sense of the import of the service of God's house. This sense must have been strong to enable him to withstand the corrupt influences of his surroundings. The prevailing idolatry influenced this boy, but influenced him in the opposite way in which boys are usually influenced. It aroused his hatred for it. This serves to demonstrate the fact that circumstances do not necessarily determine the direction a life may go. Each individual has the ability to determine the course of his life; and moreover, his responsibility so to do. It is a most perilous thing to be thrust into such a prominent position while so young. However, sometimes such responsibility has a sobering effect, calling forth one's latent powers. That his aspiration for God and the right was genuine is proven by the fact that he persisted therein for thirty-one years, the entire length of his reign.

II. The Character of His Reign (v. 2). "He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David his father, and declined neither to the right hand nor to the left." He not only maintained outward order and decorum as to the worship of God, but doubtless at heart desired to please God. Though a tender youth in a position of honor and trust, he was not ashamed of his fathers. He did not regard their ways as too antiquated for him. The fact that he did not decline to the right hand nor to the left shows that he was acting from a heart purpose and not through the influences of his surroundings. It is to be noted that he did that which was right in the sight of God, not merely his fellowmen. Doubtless many could have been found who could have pointed out mistakes of his life. He definitely and positively addressed himself to seeking after God (v. 3). He did this while yet young. He did not belong to that class who think they can live for self while young, and when old they will seek after and serve the Lord. He did this while he could give God the benefit of his unimpaired strength of body and mind. Much can be expected of such youths.

III. Josiah's Reformation in the Kingdom (vv. 3-7). He first set out to root out idolatry from the land. This was a prodigious task, requiring great courage and skill. He did this with a strong hand. Without pity he swept out from the land these abominations. In the execution of this task he—

1. Broke down the altars of Baalim (v. 4). This form of idolatry was first brought into the land by Jezebel when she married Ahab. The images seem to have been such as would appeal to the sensual nature of men; therefore it was but natural that the grossest licentious practices should be associated with this worship.

2. He broke in pieces the groves, carved images, and molten images (v. 4). He even made dust of them and strewed it upon the graves of those who had been offering unto them.

3. He burned the bones of the priests on their altars (v. 5). He not only showed no pity for them, but he manifested a decided fierceness in the execution of his task. He also displayed his contempt for them, for no greater brand of infamy could be imposed than the digging up of the bones of the unfaithful priests and burning them upon the very altars which had been used for this idolatrous worship.

4. He extended this destruction to certain districts in the northern kingdom. It was not until all this was done that he returned to Jerusalem (vv. 6, 7). His reformation thus began at home, but was extended to the widest extent of his kingdom.

IV. Josiah Repaired the Temple (vv. 8-13). Having rid the land of its idolatry, he set himself to the repairing of the temple which had been so long neglected. This neglect, coupled with gross abuses at times, made it to be sadly in need of attention.

1. His deputies (v. 8). This work he intrusted to a committee of three—Shaphan, the royal secretary (II Kings 22:3); Masseiah, mayor of Jerusalem; and Joah, the recorder, the historian of the nation. In the matter of ridding the city and country of idolatry Josiah took the lead in person, but now the work had gone far enough forward that he could work by deputy. He chose his deputies from among "laymen" instead of the priests. Frequently the surest way to get an important work done is to commit it to intelligent and consecrated laymen.

2. Method of procedure (vv. 9-13). (a) Collection of money (v. 9). It would seem that for some time collection of money for temple repairs had been going on. Perhaps it was begun in connection with the destruction of idolatry some six years before. The agents in this work were the Levites. They collected it from all over the kingdom, even giving the remnant of Israel an opportunity for fellowship in this matter. This shows us that religious interests of the people should be sustained by all the people adhering thereto.

(b) Money placed into the treasury (v. 9).

Hilkiah, the high priest, was the treasurer. From this treasury the overseers drew the money and paid it to the workmen who repaired the temple.

(c) The overseers (v. 12). Among the overseers were certain skilled musicians. The duty of these overseers was to exercise supervision over the carpenters, builders, and other artisans, and the helpers of all classes. The musicians, by skillful music, incited the workman to diligence and activity, thus lightening the burdens of their toil. Music in the soul while working bears a very vital relationship to the work itself.

3. The character of the work (v. 12). They did the work faithfully. This is a fine thing to be said of a set of workmen. Happily it can be said of all workmen who are in fellowship with God.

Sea Storehouse of Treasure.

Perhaps everything that is lost finds its way to the sea, the great swallower of valuable things, which certainly has a capacity equal to hiding from human sight every movable object on earth. Among the strangest stories of the sea are those relating to treasures fished from its depths. The incident of a fish being caught, and having in its stomach a ring, has occurred so frequently that it has lost its strangeness. The fish of the sea are voracious and not at all discriminating, so that it is almost impossible to say what has not been found in their stomachs. Sharks have been made to disgorge pipes, boots, books, money, clothing and hardware, and other fish are but little less voracious. Vast as it is, the sea, in course of ages, has received so many wrecks that its bottom is a storehouse of treasure.

Guard Is Exonerated

The board of state charities made public Thursday at Indianapolis the results of its meeting Wednesday at the state house and exonerated officials of the state farm at Putnamville of any responsibility connected with the shooting and killing of a prisoner named Hall on July 20, and the shooting of another prisoner named Smith. The action of the state board was made public in the following statement:

"The board of state charities has made an investigation of the killing of prisoner Hall, when he, with others, attempted to escape from the state farm and was shot on the evening of July 20, last. While it regrets the unfortunate occurrence it feels that no blame should attach to, and no criticism is made of, the officers."

Amos W. Butler, secretary of the board, said that it had been impossible to ascertain who shot Hall, who was sent to the farm from Lake county. Seven or eight guards at the farm fired at four escaping prisoners on the night in question, he said.

As the prisoners were being lined up for roll call, just after dinner in the evening, preparatory to going to bed, four men broke from the line and started for a barbed wire fence 500 feet away, Mr. Butler explained. All of them succeeded in getting over the fence and one is still at large. Two were shot and the other was captured. Both the men shot were colored. In answer to questions Butler said there had been no grand jury investigation of the affair in Putnam county, but that the county coroner had made an investigation and "didn't fix any responsibility."

A statement given out by the board relative to the meeting, says:

Insane Hospitals Overcrowded.

"All the Indiana hospitals for insane are full, and there are practically 1,000 insane persons in the state who can not be admitted. A number of these are very distressing cases in county jails. This is particularly true in the eastern and central districts.

"There is great pressure for admission to the School for Feeble-Minded Youth. Under present conditions many who now seek admission can not be received for a number of years. If a colony is established and some of the inmates removed to it, that will leave room at the Fort Wayne institute for the admission of the most urgent cases. It is believed that by the system of colony expansion we shall be able eventually to take care of the ordinary demands.

"Of course, no one knows what the pressure is going to be by reason of the extraordinary demands of war time. The increase in the number of mental defectives and persons suffering from mental diseases on account of the war or war conditions in other countries is enormous. We shall doubtless have ours in Indiana."

Vineless Potatoes

Garden experts at Fort Wayne are puzzled over the discovery of vineless potatoes in that city. Mrs. Geo. Wright, who is cultivating a back yard garden in Parnell avenue, was the first to notify the Fort Wayne food headquarters of the unexplainable fashion in which her potatoes are growing. Since an examination was started in the Wright garden, several cases in the immediate neighborhood have been reported to those who have charge of the city food relief committee.

Practical farmers, who have tilled the fields of Allen county for half a century, have never before heard of potatoes developing without the aid of sunfed sprouts. The growth of the potatoes in each of the gardens examined by F. W. Gray, who has charge of the garden work in Fort Wayne, are about the same. The small tubers are growing all about the original piece of seed potato. They are bound to the rotted bit of potato by tender white filaments. Some of the new potatoes are half grown. They are solid and appear well nourished.

Mr. Gray believes that the strange manner of growth may be due to chemical action of the sandy soil in that particular neighborhood on the elements of the potato plant.

Why Shoes Wear Out

The average step is 26 inches. This means 2,437 steps to the mile, or 12,185 in a five-mile day. A person weighing 160 pounds, in a day has pounded into his shoes 974 tons and 1,600 pounds of meat, bone and troubles, and all this he carries above his shoes. Men buy three pairs of shoes a year. A steel hammer weighing 160 pounds coming down at that rate for four months would have to be renewed each day and would have to be fished out of the deepest hole in the earth at the end of four months.

It begins to look as though war had struck home when we see the boys in their uniforms.

COMPILING MAILING LIST OF DEKALB COUNTY FARMERS

Since being supplied with office help, County Agent A. Z. Arehart is making some changes in his system of handling his work that will mean much to the farmers. A complete mailing list of every farmer in the county is being compiled, and the particular line of farming of each. Where a man is specializing in certain lines of the agriculturral industry Mr. Arehart will be able to send him literature that will apply to his special line of work only, and thus much time, expense, and unnecessary work will be saved.

"Patriotism leaves profits out of the question. In these days of our supreme trial, when we are sending hundreds of thousands of our young men across the seas to serve a great cause, no true man who stays behind to work for them and sustain them by his labor will ask himself what he is personally going to make out of that labor."

None of that For Him

"None of that for me," remarked a Civil war veteran as he saw some men putting up chautauqua banners advertising the five days' entertainment.

"What do you mean?" asked a bystander.

"I saw more than five days at Chattanooga during '61-'65 and I never cared to go back, even for five days," said the soldier.

UNCLE SAM'S THRIFT THOUGHT FOR TODAY

Here is an appetizing way to use that meat left from yesterday's roast, Madam Housewife. It is suggested by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Meat Pie.

Cut meat into fairly small pieces. Stew in saucepan with a little water, left-over gravy or soup, salt to taste, and such seasoning vegetables as onions and celery, if desired. Thicken liquid with flour. Line baking dish with biscuit dough, pour in the meat filling, cover with biscuit dough and bake in a medium oven.

If the quantity of meat is small, a little macaroni or diced potato may be added.

Such pies to be at their best must be well seasoned.

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

NOT just to have one, not merely for the purpose of saying that she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and undivided attention to any such accounts.

SEED WHEAT FAKIRS ARE ABROAD IN STATE

Warning to Indiana wheat growers to beware of unscrupulous dealers selling wheat for seed was issued Monday by the Indiana committee on food production and conservation at Indianapolis.

The warning said:

"Unscrupolous dealers already have agents in a number of counties in Indiana selling wheat for seed for which they are claiming exceptional yielding power. This game is so old and daring and has proven false so frequently it seems that every farmer in the state would be wise enough to adhere to standard varieties of wheat."

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive ganids are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP DRAIN TO COST $2,261

Another drain in DeKalb county was sold at the office of Attorney Charles S. Smith in Auburn Saturday. It was the John Souder ditch in Jackson and Butler townships. The successful bidder was Perry Carnahan, the contract calling for $2,261.30. This amount includes one tile lateral. The system is about four miles in length and about half of it will be of tile and the other half an open ditch. George Ditmars is the superintendent of construction.

EAT LESS AND BE HEALTHIER SAY INDIANA DOCTORS

State Medical Society Recommends Buttermilk as a Beverage of excellent Food Value.

"Drink buttermilk, eat less and be healthier," is one of the mottoes which members of the Indiana medical society would like to see hung on the walls of every home, with special emphasis on the buttermilk.

The popularity of buttermilk as a beverage is steadily increasing, although its excellent food value is not always appreciated. It is a lactic acid drink containing from .6 to .9 per cent. of the acid. Strictly, buttermilk is a byproduct of butter making but with the development of the milk industry the demand for buttermilk, at least in the cities, is met by fermenting the skim or separator milk which remains as a byproduct of the cream trade. The fermented product is not literally buttermilk, but may be indistinguishable from the latter in properties and composition.

The use of fermented milk is to be recommended not alone for its intrinsic food values. Equally important is its "tonic" action in the digestive tract. The presence of the small percentage of lactic acid in the milk is known to destroy germs of dysintery, typhoid, diphtheria and cholera. The slower milk sours the greater is the chance of disease germs surviving.

BUTLER WOMAN DIES SUDDENLY FROM INDIGESTION

Suffering an attack of acute indigestion as she was getting ready to go to prayer meeting, Mrs. Artimissa Teutsch of Butler, rapidly grew worse and lost in the battle with the grim reaper shortly after midnight Friday night. Her death came as a shock to her friends, very few knowing of her brief illness.

Mrs. Teutsch was 63 years of age and she with her late husband, Peter Teutsch lived in Wilmington township, north of Butler, practically all of their married life, moving to Butler about nine years ago. The husband died four years ago.

The deceased was a charter member of the old United Brethren church and was a faithful member of this religous body. The funeral was held at the United Brethern church Monday afternoon at 2:30, with Rev. W. H. Rittenhouse, the pastor, in charge. Two sons, Frank and Foster, living near Butler, and a daughter, Mrs. Logan Wood of Fort Wayne, survive.

"Oh, Willie, Willie!" cried the teacher to a hopelessly dull pupil. "Whatever do you think your head is for?"

Willie (who evidently thought this another of the troublesome questions that teachers were always asking, pondered it deeply)—"Please, miss." he replied at last, "to keep my collar on."

THE TRUTH ABOUT ECZEMA AND PILES

Thousands and thousands of people, says Peterson, are learning every week that one 25-cent box of Peterson's Ointment will abolish Eczema and banish piles, and the grateful letters I receive every day are worth more to me than money.

I had Eczema for many years on my head and could not get anything to do it any good. I saw your ad and got one box and I owe you many thanks for the good it has done me. There isn't a blotch on my head now and I couldn't help but thank Peterson for the cure is great. Mrs. Mary Hill, 420 Third Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

I have had itching piles for 15 years and Peterson's is the only ointment that relieves me, besides the piles seem to have gone. A. B. Ruger, 1127 Washington Ave., Racine, Wis.

Use Peterson's Ointment for old sores, salt rheum and all skin diseases. Druggists recommend it. Adv.

Sociable.

An orderly chosen from among the student officers at Fort Harrison sits daily outside Brig. Gen. Edwin F. Glenn's office door. A different man is chosen each day, and the other day the post fell to the lot of Charles E. Shafe of Indianapolis, says the Indianapolis News. Shafe went on an errand for the general, and returned just after the general had wished to speak to an officer in one of the other rooms and there being no orderly to summon him, had gone after the man himself.

"By George," Shafe commented to the camp adjutant's orderly, a Tenth infantryman, fresh from five years in Panama, "the general did some of my work for me."

"Yeh, ain't that nice, now!" the adjutant's orderly returned. "Why don't you go in there now and do some of his work for him, just to be sociable?"

Quite Happy.

Through the wild ways of her good-for-nothing husband, a hard-working charwoman had to remove to a little two-roomed cottage, where there was scarcely space to sneeze without shaking the ornaments from the mantelpiece.

"It's hard lines for you to be brought down like this, after what you've been accustomed to," said a sympathetic neighbor. "I don't doubt you feel very miserable, Mrs. Jones."

"No, I don't," the charwoman stoutly denied. "I'm happier here by a long way than I used to be in the old place. For one thing, when my husband comes home in a brute of a temper, he can't throw me down the cellar steps, as he used to do, 'cos there ain't none now!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Getting Out From Under.

It is probably quite natural that there should be considerable rivalry at Ft. Harrison between the student officers of National Guard training and those with no previous military experience, and sometimes stories are told which might not be told if it were not for this rivalry, says the Indianapolis News.

A young student officer was putting a squad of fellow-students through squad formations the other day of a rather intricate nature and tre process proved to be like climbing a roof. It is easy to climb into a perilous position astride the cone, but difficult to climb down to safety. The young student officer got along very well until he attempted to get his squad back into its original formation. Somehow it wouldn't work out right. Then he cut the knot of his difficulty with one command, delivered as sternly as possible.

"As you were at first! March!"

This would not have been told if there had not been several former National Guardsmen in the squad.

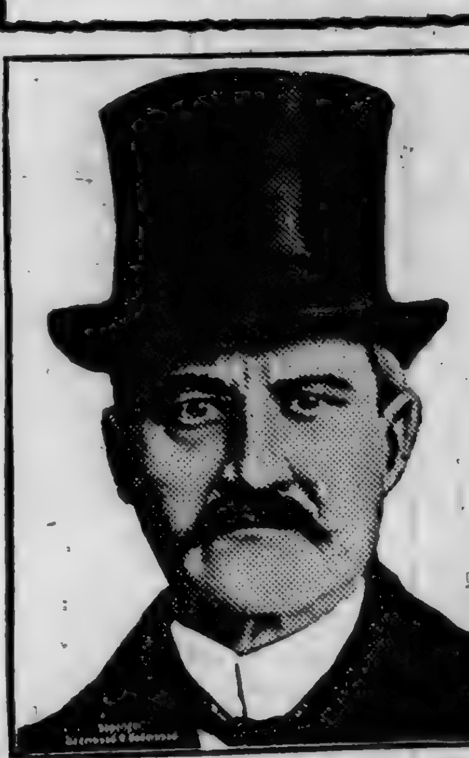
WHO IS WHO NOW

NEW GERMAN CHANCELLOR



Dr. Georg E. Michaelis, successor to Von Bethmann-Hollweg as the imperial German chancellor, was little known to the public outside of Germany until his appointment last February as special commissioner on food questions with the rank of minister.

The son of a Prussian official, he was born on September 8, 1857, in Haynau, Silesia. He received a university education, making the law his profession. In 1879 he became a court referee in Berlin, and in 1884 was attached to the district attorney's office in that city. Several years later he went as professor of law and political economy to the University of Tokyo.

Returning to Germany in 1889, he was chosen district attorney for Berlin. His services won much praise and he was afterward sent by the government as an official in the provisional government at Trevas, Germany. In 1897 he was transferred to Westphalia, where he was chief councillor for the government there. In 1900 he was made provisional president at Liennitz and in 1902 first privy councillor in Breslau. His work there won him an appointment as under secretary of state in the department of finance, which post he still held in connection with his work as food commissioner.

Chancellor Michaelis is a conservative, favoring direct and equal suffrage, but has never taken an active part in politics.

ACTIVE IN RED CROSS WORK

When it was felt that the Red Cross needed an advance agent in Europe, someone to break the ground for the routine handling of the wounded and their nursing, and to prepare a skeleton force for the equally great task of co-ordinating relief in the devasted districts, rebuilding towns, and reviving industries, they looked around for someone with present big financial affiliations and previous big business experience. And such a one they found in Grayson M.-P. Murphy at the senior vice president's desk of the Guaranty Trust company. He had had experience in general business from art metal construction to woolen worsteds. He was a young man, with a dynamic personality and a great degree of tact. And he had had military experience. After serving as a volunteer in the First Pennsylvania infantry during the Spanish-American war he entered West Point and graduated in 1903. He did his four years of army service in South America, Panama, Cuba, and the Philippines. Murphy is now in France, a major on Pershing's staff, and is probably well engaged in spending the first million cabled over to him. He won't be back until the close of the war; but, when in residence at New York he lives in the 'Sixties and has a summer place at Cedarhurst.—Town and Country.

PERSHING'S "RIGHT HAND MAN"

Lieut. Col. James G. Harbord, chief of staff, is the "right hand" of Maj. Gen. John J. Pershing in France.

Harbord's first duties as an officer in the United States army took him to Cuba, where during the reconstruction period he served under Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, who was one of the first high-ranking officers to realize that in Harbord the army possessed a soldier of great possibilities. Later, in the Philippine constabulary, under Brig. Gen. Henry T. Allen and under Col. H. H. Bandholtz, now chief of staff of the National Guard division of New York, he made a record for efficiency. When he arrived in the Philippines he was a captain in the Eleventh cavalry, and his transfer to the constabulary carried with it the temporary rank of colonel. As Colonel Harbord he was assigned to organize the Moro units of the Philippine native forces, in the island of Mindanao. General Wood was then, as he had been in Cuba, the executive head under whom Colonel Harbord worked.

The commanding officer of the United States forces in France has duties so onerous that he will welcome the coming of Colonel Harbord, to whom he may delegate some of the detail work which otherwise would constitute an almost unbearable burden, even for the shoulders of so efficient an executive as General Pershing.

By the officers under him, and the men in the ranks, Colonel Harbord is recognized as a friend as he is appreciated as a leader.

PROMINENT IN CHINESE POLITICS

Can Sun Yat-sen come back? An American business man, A. Masters MacDonell, just back from a four months' visit to China, during which he had several conversations with the first provisional president of the Chinese republic, is of the opinion that, although Sun Yat-sen is making no attempt to become president, events may easily shape themselves in such a way as to make his selection necessary, because he is the strongest available man.

Mr. MacDonell regards Sun Yatsen as perhaps the master mind of China. In the interview he gives the substance of what that romantic figure, upon whose head a price totaling $500,000 has been offered by provisional governments and the central authorities in Peking during the last 20 years, thinks of the present political upheaval, and the part that he believes the United States will play in the Orient. China is broadly divided into three political parties, according to Mr. MacDonell's analysis. The military, official, and reactionaries compose one, which he referred to as the tories. The others are the Kuomintang, or progressive group, and the Chinputang, a subdivision of the Kuomintang.

PUBLIC SCHOOLTEACHER'S VIEW.

A Chicago teacher, writing to the Illinois Issue, calls attention to one feature of the liquor evil which "editors and doctors and reformers overlook," namely, the "immeasurable waste in teachers' efforts caused by alcoholism." In regions, she says, "where saloons have always been abundant and conditions of living—usually because of alcoholism—are bad, at least one-third of the average teacher's time is required to merely hold in check and partially develop the children of alcoholics. Most of the abnormal and subnormal children have alcoholism in their families, and the sins of the father are visited upon the children even unto the third and fourth generation.

"These children have one grave fault in common. They cannot concentrate the mind long on any one subject—not long enough to follow the thought of the lesson. In some this takes the form of irritation or rebellion, and in others there is the stupor, the deadness, that defies the most interesting lesson and the most magnetic teacher.

"Of course this waste is a loss to the normal pupils, whose teaching must lag while these weak ones are given special help. If we could eliminate wholly the effects of alcoholism, which would require more than one generation, elementary education might easily be accomplished in seven or even six years instead of eight years, as at present required.

"High school and college teachers would probably not agree with this statement, for the simple reason that the descendants of alcoholics seldom get to high school or college."

ARMY OFFICERS AND ALCOHOL.

Under the above caption the "How to Be Healthy" department of the Chicago Herald, conducted by the Life Extension institute, has a timely article. It says in part:

"Grenfell, Kitchener and Roberts of Great Britain, Von Haeseler of Germany and Wahlberg of Finland, have testified that, from their keen observation on soldiers engaged in warfare, abstainers from alcohol can stand up under hard work better than nonabstainers, even though they drink in so-called moderation.

"A certain doctor took two gangs of soldiers and set them to work at the same kind of manual labor. To one gang he gave an alcoholic beverage. To the other gang he gave none. The gang without the alcohol did far more work than the gang with it.

"The next time he tried the same experiment he shifted the gangs. Again the gang without the alcohol did the most work, showing that the result of the first experiment was not due to a superiority of the men."

WHO IS GUILTY?

Compensation! Yes, we believe in it. We published recently an account taken from the Chicago papers of the diabolical cruelties inflicted by a drink-crazed man on his wife and five helpless children. When the monsters who poisoned that man and turned him loose to work his alcoholic spite on his own household have compensated that heart-broken wife and those bruised and bleeding children; when those monsters have somehow recovered for that wife the love they have stolen from her; when they have given back to those children a father whom they can respect, then we will give audience to brewers and distillers while they talk about compensation.—The American Issue. And the man who votes "wet," where does he come in?

UNFITNESS DUE TO ALCOHOL.

According to Lieut. W. Randolph Angell, U. S. N. R. F., examining officer of the Boston recruiting station, nearly every man failing to pass the physical examinations on application for enlistment in the United States Marine corps is refused partly because of conditions directly traceable to the use of alcohol before maturity. The adverse effect of even the moderate use of intoxicants are revealed in the examinations, and Lieutenant Angell declares that the conditions which make such a state of affairs should be abolished at once.

THE COUNTRY'S NEED.

"There is no such thing as pacifism now," said William Jennings Bryan, addressing Cornell university students, and he argued for nation-wide prohibition on the ground that in this crisis our country needs young men with "clean and quick-thinking brains, men with steady nerves and muscles."

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

FAIRYLAND PARTY.

"It had been such a hot summer day," commenced Daddy, "that the fairies thought they should give an evening party.

"'We haven't given one for so long a time,' said Fairy Ybab.

"'That is so,' said Princess Twilight-Bell, 'and now is just the time of the day I love to think of a party. The sun is going to bed and the moon is about to join us. It is in the lovely in-between time of blue shadows and wonderful colors.'

"'You have a name well suited to you,' said Princess Joy. 'No one loves the twilight as you do. And your voice is just like a lovely bell too. Ah, you have a name just made for you.'

"Princess Fairy Twilight-Bell, or Twilight-Bell, as she was usually called, made a low bow and said,

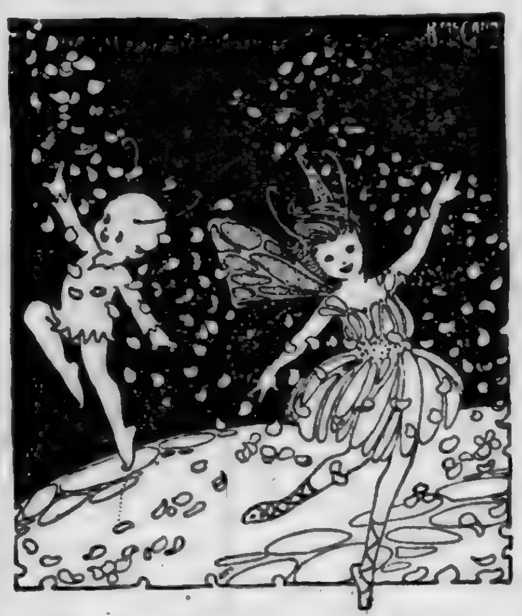
"'I thank you, Princess Joy. You make us happy with your sweet smiles and kindly speeches.'

"'Well,' said Princess Joy, 'it is so much more fun to tell creatures how lovely they are than to always be scolding and fussing.'

"'And you are well named, too,' said Twilight-Bell.

"Princess Joy laughed, threw her wand up in the air, and said, 'Oh, for an evening of fun. Oh, for dancing, singing, story-telling and a fairyland supper.'

"Just then the Queen of the Fairies came along. She was wearing a gown of purple with silver stars and on her head was a crown of silver with a beautiful long purple feather in the front.



The Rose Petals Danced About.

"'I hear rumors of a party tonight,' said the Fairy Queen. 'In fact, I think we all feel like one. Well, let's hurry. We'll ask all our friends—the gnomes, brownies, bogeys, elves, oaves, old Mr. Giant, Witty Witch and the merry little goblins.'

"'Ah,' said Princess Joy, 'it will be a great and large party. Fairyland will be aglow with joy and merrymaking this very evening.'

"Soon all the woodland creatures came to the party. The messages had been taken to them ever so quickly, for the Summer Evening Breeze Brigade had carried them. And they, too, were asked to the party.

"'We must have the summer breezes,' said the Queen of the Fairies, and all agreed.

"Mr. and Mrs. South Wind were invited, too, and they came right on time. The stars all came out and laughed to see such fun. The moon beamed and grinned.

"He often played hide-and-seek behind the big pine trees, but most of the time he was right out shining over them all. The reason for that was because he did not want to miss a moment's fun while he was 'hidin' and not 'seeking.'

"'We have come, too,' said some very soft voices, and the most wonderful fragrance filled the air.

"'It's like a rose garden,' said the Queen of the Fairies.

"'It must be a rose garden,' said the other fairies and guests.

"But they were some distance from the nearest rose garden, and they couldn't quite understand the delicious, wondrous scent of roses.

"Soon, all about them, scampered the rose petals. 'The Summer Evening Breeze Brigade brought us,' they said. 'We just came along with them, dancing over the ground until we got here. Do you like us?' And the rose petals danced about and flew gently over the green moss and the soft woodland ground.

"'You are so lovely,' said the fairies, 'and the sweet rose fragrance makes this indeed a fairyland party.'

"'And,' said the Queen of the Fairies, 'we must thank the Summer Evening Breeze Brigade, for they invited our guests and they brought us the rose petals for a glorious surprise.'

"The Summer Evening Breeze Brigade were so much pleased that they began to sing a song of a summer evening in fairyland. The earth people thought the trees were whistling and the breezes blowing gently and whispering, perhaps, but it was the echo from fairyland of the song of happiness and joy they were singing.

"And the fairyland party kept on until the Dawn fairies arrived for their breakfasts, and the others went to the land of fairyland dreams."

She Was.

"Hello, Bub," said the stranger to the small boy sitting on the steps of the house. "Is the boss home?"

"Yes," replied the small boy. "She's in the back yard."

A Turkish Love Story.

A Turk knocked at his beloved's door, and a voice answered from within, "Whose there?"

Then he answered, "It is I."

Then the voice said, "This house will not hold thee and me."

And the door was not opened.

Then went the lover into the desert, where there is nothing but Allah, and fasted and prayed in solitude.

And after a year he returned and knocked again at the door.

And again the voice asked, "Who is there?"

And he said, "It is thyself."

And the door was opened to him."—Exchange.

Two elderly New York clubmen who have retired spend much of their time gazing out upon the Fifth avenue throngs from their leather rest chairs at a club lounge window.

Charles B. Towns was seated near them the other day. A very stunning woman of middle age passed in a handsome turnout.

"I wonder how old she is?" said one.

"Woman is as old as she looks," was the reply.

There was a pause. "And man is not old until he quits looking," said the first—and both resumed their gazing.

Was Laid Up In Bed

Doan's, However, Restored Mrs. Vogt to Health and Strength. Hasn't Suffered Since.

"I had one of the worst cases of kidney complaint imaginable," says Mrs. Wm. Vogt, 6315 Audrey Ave., Wellston, Mo., "and I was laid up in bed for days at a time.

"My bladder was inflamed and the kidney secretions caused terrible pain. My back was in such bad shape that when I moved the pains were like a knife-thrust. I got so dizzy I couldn't stoop and my head just throbbed with pain. Beads of perspiration would stand on my temples, then I would become cold and numb.

MRS. VOGT.

"My heart action was affected and I felt as if I couldn't take another breath. I got so nervous and run down, I felt life wasn't worth living and often wished that I might die so my suffering would be ended. Medicine failed to help me and I was discouraged.

"Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended to me and I could tell I was being helped after the first few doses. I kept getting better every day and continued use cured me. My health improved in every way and best of all, the cure has been permanent. I feel that Doan's saved my life." Sworn to before me, HENRY B. SURKAMP. Notary Public.

HOW TO CONQUER THE CRAMP

Worst Effect Is Panic, Which Causes the Swimmer to Let All the Air Out of His Lungs.

A cramp is merely a contraction of the muscles caused by the penetration of the cold. Obviously, it could not of itself cause drowning. Its effect, according to Popular Science Monthly, is to cause a panic which throws the swimmer off his guard, causing him to let the air out of his lungs and thus allow the air passages to become filled with water. The safeguard against such a panic is absolute confidence in the floating power of the body and a demonstrable knowledge of the proper way to quickly fill the lungs to utmost capacity with air.

The moment a cramp is felt, the swimmer should turn on his back and begin to gulp the air, making no effort to keep himself from sinking. As he sinks he slowly exhales under water, through the mouth, with the lips puckered as for whistling. If it is a stomach cramp the knees will be drawn up against the abdomen, but the swimmer should force them out, pushing on them with both hands and using all his strength until they are fully extended. This will no doubt cause great pain for a few seconds, but as soon as the legs are straightened out the cramp will vanish, and the body, buoyed up by the air in the lungs, will shoot up to the surface. There still inhaling in great gulps and exhaling through puckered lips, the swimmer may float until he regains his strength or is picked up.

In case of cramp in the leg or arm the same system of breathing is followed and the affected part is straightened out by sheer strength.

An Apology.

"Are you not ashamed to use poisoned arrows?"

"I'm doing the best I can in my limited way," whimpered the savage. "Of course, poisoned arrows only get 'em one at a time. But we lack the mechanical facilities for wholesale operations with U-boats."

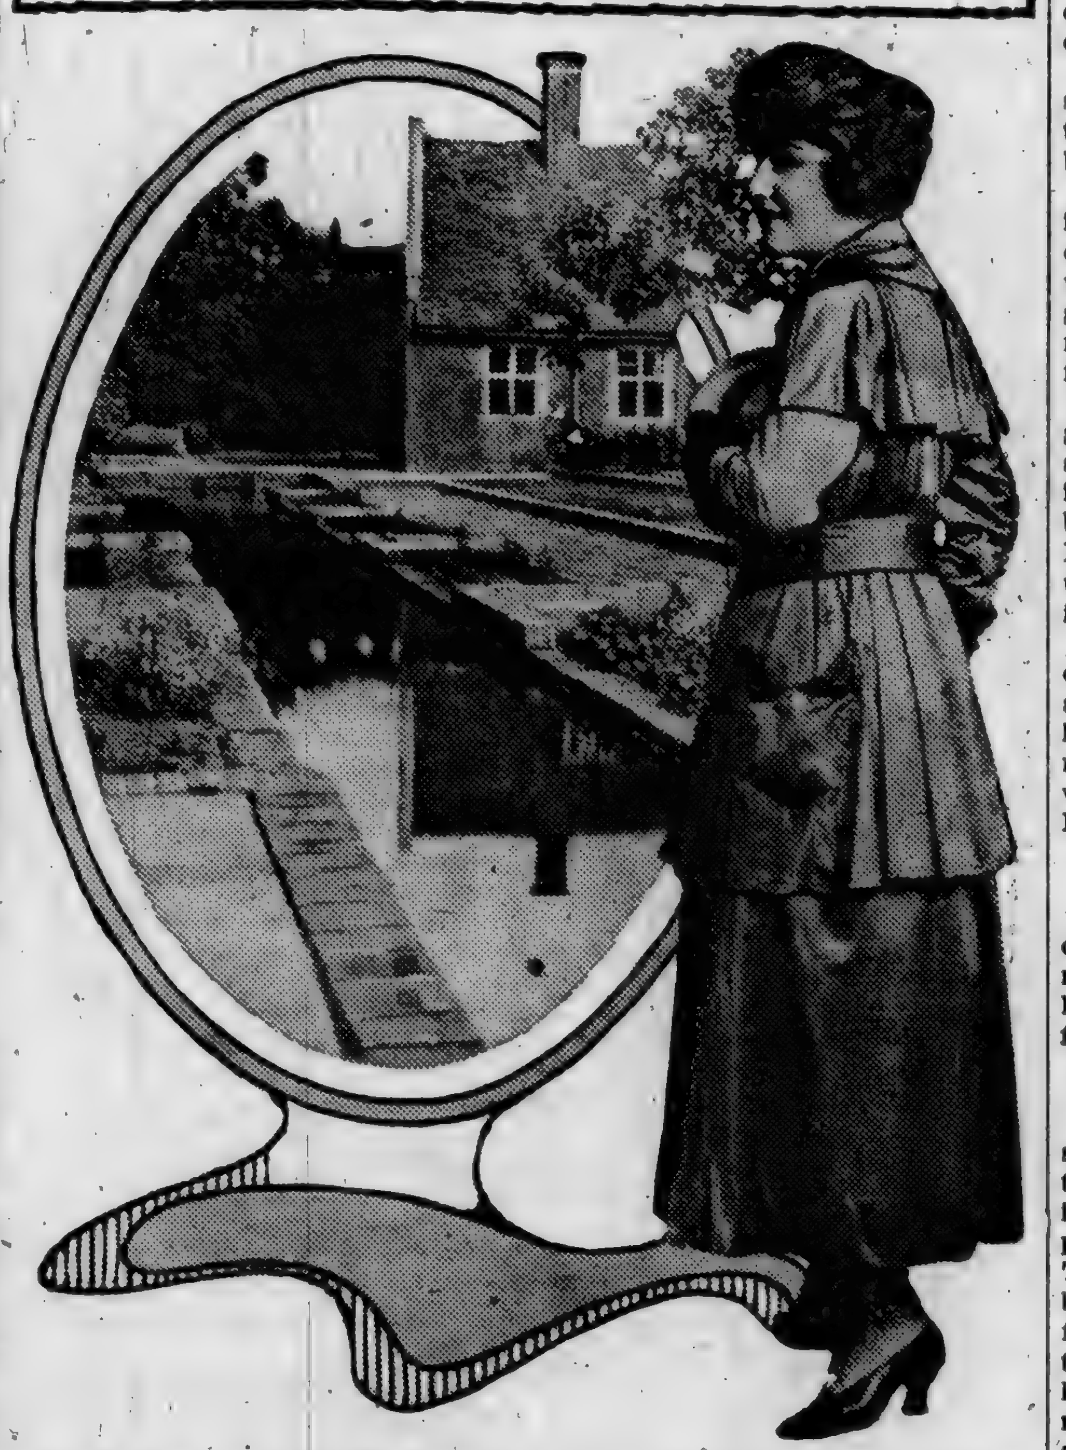
"There's a Reason"

Suited to Changing Occupations



Many summer suits bear the impress of styles in sports clothes, much to the satisfaction of the busy, up-to-date woman. A single day's program would require her to be something of a "lightning change artist" if she were to attempt a different dress for every one of her occupations. Thanks be, it isn't done. Leaving out of the reckoning the ordinary business of living each day, which has to be attended to, there may easily be a morning of golf, an afternoon of bridge and a dinner dance all scheduled for one date. Or a morning of Red Cross work, an afternoon of shopping and an evening concert. The woman of today manages by making small changes in the details of her dress. Her capacious "sweater bag" carries a change of hose and slippers, an extra blouse, or whatever she may elect according to the order of the day. Wool or silk jersey in skirt and coat will see her through.

An attractive suit of silk jersey, in contrasting colors of the same material, is shown in the picture. The skirt is plain and only moderately full, and with the right blouse and footwear it answers the demands of sports wear. The coat is quite another matter. It is plaited and elaborated with a cape and shawl collar. These and the cuffs, belt and pockets employ a contrasting color in the silk jersey and it is dressy enough for formal wear. A suit of this kind will serve for many occasions.

Jersey cloth, in wool or silk, may be said to have "arrived." It has made an important place for itself as a fabric of definite character; the liking for it grows with acquaintance, so that it bids fair to become an old, tried friend, like serge.

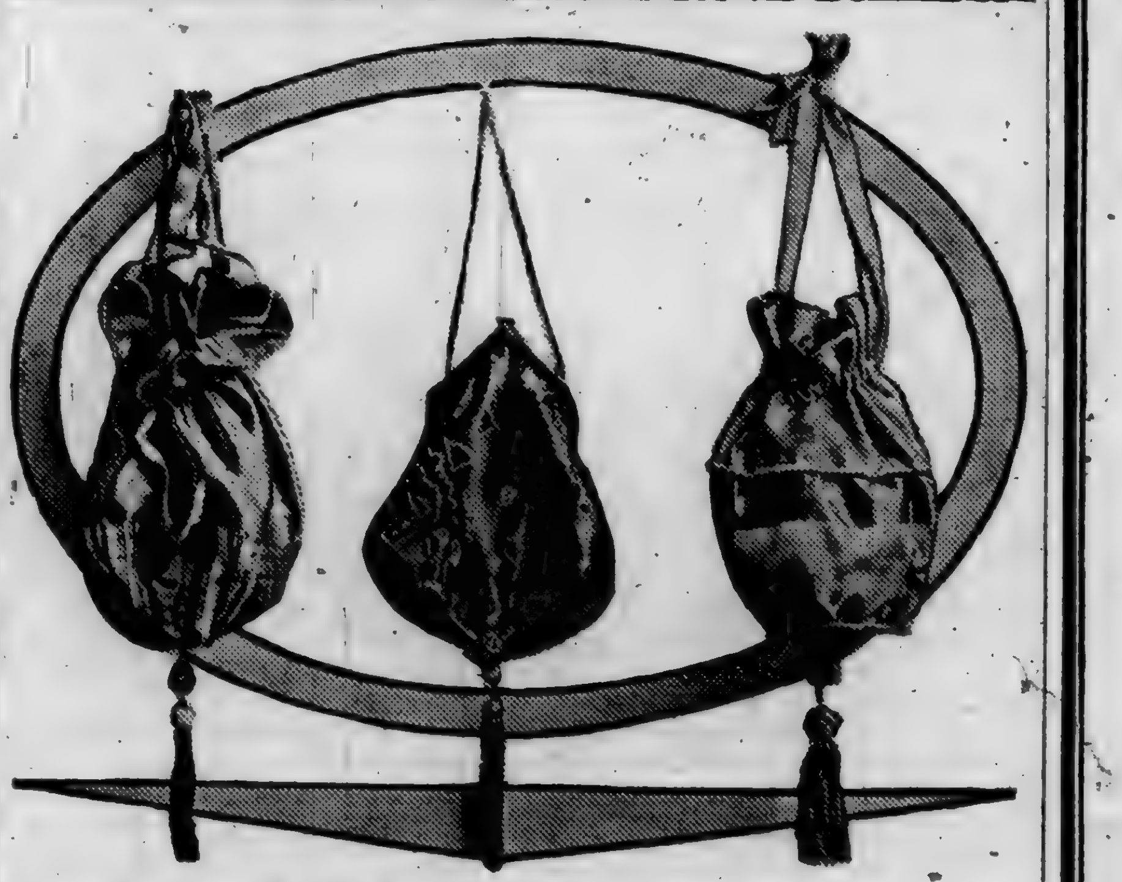
A Patriotic Costume.

The girl who would be patriotic yet exclusive and smart will select one of the new navy blue velvet sports coats. These are immensely the thing and are very stunning indeed, double-breasted, with big white pearly buttons, and with patch pockets below the belt at either side. Worn with a skirt of white linen and a sports hat in blue and red, they produce the gallant red, white and blue color scheme, and also a costume past criticism for correctness and chic effects.

Hats Trimmed With Near-Aigrettes.

Hats covered with aigrettes which stand out like quills upon the back of the fretful porcupine are worn by extremely well-dressed women. They are not always the veritable aigrettes. Their importation is still forbidden by law. But peacock and like plumes are burnt till nothing but the fine stems remain. An almost perfect imitation is the result, and it is difficult to tell the difference at a short distance.

Wrist Bags of Ribbon



There are many bits of feminine finery made of ribbon that are joys to their possessors. Just now, of all of these, ribbon bags hold first place in the hearts of those who have beautiful things, and they are of all sizes and shapes and for all sorts of purposes. That badge of patriotism and usefulness, the knitting bag—is made of wide ribbons, in ample sizes, to carry the yarns and knitting needles that are like Mary's lamb. For everywhere the lady goes the knitting bag goes too.

Then there are the wrist bags that carry handkerchief and coin purse, powder and powder puff—and quite likely a small mirror—or other of the indispensables of life for the girls of today. They are made of wide ribbons, or narrower widths set together to make sufficient width. They are in gay, soft colors in stripes, and in all sorts of lovely brocades and printed flower patterns.

Some of the new wrist bags are made with mountings in gilt or silver, such as are used for leather bags, but a far greater number are gathered on narrow ribbons that serve to close and carry them. The bags on mountings are nearly always lined with plain, bright-colored satins, while those closed and suspended by narrow ribbons are often unlined. Three of these pretty luxuries are shown in the picture. It takes little ribbon to make any one of them and they are so simple that every woman can add them to her belongings.

Julia Bottomley

Nainsook Union Suit.

The fact that women are going in so strong for athletics has brought about an interesting thing in underwear for the feminine sex. The strenuous exercise is hard on fine underwear, and, therefore, there is being made an athletic union suit of nainsook. This is fashioned much on the same order as the men's. Striped muslins, dotted nainsooks in both white and pink are also favored materials for this new garment. A narrow edging of cluny or valenciennes trims the top. At the waistline at the back there is an insert of knitted material to give plenty of reaching room. The suit buttons down the entire front and extends beyond the knees.

Plumbers.

Whenever you invite the plumbers in to spend the week and fix the kitchen faucet you should plan ahead. Have everything in readiness.

Plumbers are often a little hurt to see that there have been no preparations. Plumbers take these things very keenly.

If a pipe is leaking and you are going to have the plumbers come, move everything out of the kitchen so they will have room for their tools. With good weather and no mishaps they may get all of their tools around the first day.

Getting all the tools around is a good day's work for two plumbers and a boy. On the second day they examine the leak and make notes then get busy planning the week's work on it. If the leak is a plain hole then the thing is simple and they finish it up in smart shape within the week.

It is best to send the children to the country when the plumbers come. Put a lid over the goldfish bowl. If you haven't a spare room or a stable you might arrange to have them board with the neighbors.—Illinois State Register.

Alice Pork and Beans are much cheaper than meat. Yet they contain more fat and much more protein than lean beef. This gives them their high food value.—Adv.

Business.

In selecting men from among the student officers at Ft. Harrison for the quartermaster's corps, preference is given those with some business experience, says the Indianapolis News. This was explained to the companies by the instructor officers. One young fellow put in a request for consideration for this department, and said that he had had seven years business experience. He appeared rather young for so many years business training, and the instructing officer proceeded to question him.

"How old are you?"

"Twenty-one."

"What sort of business experience have you had?"

"I've followed the plow and the binder every year since I was fourteen, pitched hay, milked, fed the stock, hauled grain to the elevator, and shocked corn every fall, and believe me, that means business."

SAXON "SIX"

A BIG TOURING CAR FOR FIVE PEOPLE

25.9 Miles Per Gal. of Gas

234 stock model Saxon "Sixes" travel 70,200 miles July 18 and set grand average of 25.9 miles per gal. of gas

To give a national demonstration of the remarkable gasoline economy of Saxon "Six", 234 Saxon dealers joined in a 300 mile drive July 18.

A grand average of 25.9 miles per gallon of gasoline was registered for the 70,200 miles of travel.

Consider that this run took place in 234 different parts of the country, under 234 different sets of conditions, over 234 different kinds of roads.

Consider that these 234 cars were stock model Saxon "Sixes", not "tuned up" special cars, not cars with "doped" gasoline.

That proves that this 25.9 miles per gallon of gasoline is the ordinary, the average performance of 234 Saxon "Sixes" taken right out of stock.

And it proves as nothing else would prove, the gasoline economy your Saxon "Six" will give you. No other car in its class can match this record.

Furthermore, these 234 Saxon "Sixes" averaged 175 miles per quart of oil.

And not a single instance of mechanical trouble occurred throughout the entire 70,200 miles.

There is the proof that Saxon "Six" is your kind of a car. Price f. o. b. Detroit, $935.

Sad Death of Little One

Geraldine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eben Sawyer, of Chicago, died at the home of her parents last Friday evening, aged 4 years, 7 months and 3 days. Death was caused by spinal meningitis. The remains of the little one were brought here for interment at the Newville cemetery, where all that is mortal of the household pet was laid to rest, while the soul went up to Him who said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Short services, conducted by Rev. Fred Thomas, were held at the graveside Sunday morning.

J. Glenn Miller, of Chicago, brother of Mrs. Sawyer, and Miss Sadie Bartlett, of Waterloo, an aunt, attended the funeral.

Mr. Sawyer and wife will remain in St. Joe this week. The latter was reared near Newville, and will be remembered as Miss Ethel Miller.

The executive committee of the Civic League has decided to discontinue the meetings until after the heated spell. The society has proven very interesting; and, no doubt, when the weather cools, an enjoyable and profitable winter's work will be begun.

Taking a Vacation

Rev. A. K. Mumma and family started on a three-week vacation, Monday. They will visit at a number of places while gone, but principally at Leesburg and Dayton, Ohio. The former is the home of Mrs. Mumma's parents and the latter of Mr. Mumma's. They will travel via the automobile route.

Mistake in Draft Order

The Steuben county exemption board is disatisfied with the quota of men assigned to that county to be raised for the new national army. In making up the credit for enlistments the county only received a credit of 28 men in the national guard and 11 in the regular army. In some way the members of Angola's national guard company were ommitted altogether from the credit and Steuben county was assigned 91 men to be raised for the new national army.

The Angola company has 91 enlisted men who should have been credited to the county. The board in that county has gone to Indianapolis to have the quota lowered but the state officials say that it is impossible do so at the present time. The board has carried its appeal to the governor but he is unwilling to overrule the state conscription agent.

Many Fishing Licenses

July was the record month for some years in the county clerk's office for issuing of hunting and fishing licenses, 114 having been made out. Of this number 19 were nonresident applicants, coming from Ohio, Michigan, and Illinois. The remaining 95 are from all parts of the county. A year ago there were but 94 in July.

Eight marriage licenses were issued against fifteen a year ago. Twenty-five poultry dealers in the county also secured licenses during the month.

Cemetery Side Walk

Attention is called to the side walk to the cemetery. The weeds that line it do not add anything to its beauty and threaten to hide it from view. The foregoing is overdrawn; but, candidly, the walk presents an unsightly appearance, which could be remedied by a few hours' work.

Need More Physicians

In a report made to the State Council of Defense by the medical committee through Charles P. Emerson, dean of the Indiana University School of Medicine, Dr. Emerson made a specific appeal for the council to take steps to interest Indiana physicians in enlisting for service as war physicians. He showed, by actual figures, that hundreds of physicians are needed in the service and that to date only 200 have been accepted by the war officials from Indiana. Out of a total of 4,773 physicians in the state, there are 3,100 eligible for war service, and a very small percentage of these have enlisted, Dr. Emerson said. Approximately 800 physicians are needed from Indiana alone for the first army, he said.

Dr. Emerson also discussed plans for protecting the morals of the army camps of conscript men and went into details concerning the necessity for so doing.

Dr. Emerson reported that the medical committee had adopted a resolution in favor of hospitals and nurses' training schools allowing candidates for nurses' credentials to take short war preparatory courses.

He also discussed the problem of the insane, advocating, for the medical committee the addition of new units to the state's insane hospitals, each of which will care for 100 more patients than now are in each of the hospitals. He believed an increase in insanity would come with actual war.

American Efficiency

German efficiency has been held up as a degree of excellence unattainable by a Democracy. The accomplishments of the United States since April 5th last refute the truth of the claim. In the short space of time since that day the United States has accomplished the following:

Declared a state of war as existing between this country and Germany.

Seized 91 German ships and began repair work on them.

Authorized unanimously a war fund of $7,000,000,000.

Appropriated $600,000,000 for merchant shipping and as much for air fleets.

Agreed to loan our Allies $3,000,000,000 and advanced them a large proportion of that sum.

Passed a selective draft law and in a single day registered nearly ten million men for military service.

Enlisted 600,000 volunteer soldiers in the Regular Army and in the National Guard of the States.

Sent a Commission to Russia to aid Democracy there and a body of railroad men to Russia and another to France to advise and assist in railroad transportation in those countries.

Began the construction of 32 camps for our soldiers.

Sent to England a fleet of destroyers and to France a detachment of troops.

Authorized and now enforcing embargo whereby our enemies will receive no more food or material from us.

Passed a food conservation law.

Organized many voluntary commissions and boards who are aiding the government and the people in the speeding up of work, conservation of food, and other national movements.

Drafted by lot 687,000 men for military service.

While the government was accomplishing these things the American people have loaned the United States $2,000,000,000 and offered $1,000,000,000 more, over four million citizens subscribing the loan.

In addition they have given over $100,000,000 to the American Red Cross and $3,000,000,000 to the Young Men's Christian Association .

All these things were accomplished while our soil was not invaded or even threatened with invasion and wiothout any disturbance of business conditions. All was done with the calm determination and judgment of an earnest, patriotic people performing a service for civilization and mankind and maintaining the rights, dignity and the honor of the greatest nation in the world.

The German leaders derided America's entry into the war as a bluff. This is our answer.

The German Imperial government was nearly fifty years perfecting its military efficiency. In less than four months the American Republic has made such strides as to indicate that in less than two years time the boasted superiority of German efficiency will have been discredited. There is such a thing as American efficiency ,and time will prove that German efficiency can not withstand it, fighting as it is for liberty, justice and humanity.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

VOL. XXXI ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1917 NO. 33

The St. Joe Red Cross

The St. Joe Branch of the DeKalb County, Indiana Chapter of the American Red Cross is organized with a membership of 110 and with the Concord and Newville territories as yet unreported. Arrangements for the ladies to begin work are being completed. Mrs. Dunkle, who has charge of the buying and cutting of materials, will have her first shipment here this week and next week, Tuesday the 21st. at one P. M. is the date planned to begin the sewing.

H. L. Dunkle has very kindly offered his vacant store room for this purpose on the reasonable conditions that after each class meeting the key be returned to him, also that children not engaged in classes be not allowed. This latter is in consideration of the glass show cases which are in the room and belong to Mr. Holden.

Class No. 1, will meet Tuesday the 21st., from one to five P. M. with Mrs. Alice Copp as chairman.

Class No. 2, the knitting class, will meet Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. George Milliman as instructor.

Class No. 3, will meet Thursday P. M. from one to five with Mrs. C. A. Patterson as chairman.

Class No. 4, the young ladies Comfort Kit class, will meet Friday afternoon with Mrs. Chas. Koch as chairman.

The present aim of the class is to furnish every soldier boy from this section with one of these kits and they will finance their efforts apart from our Red Cross fund. Hours will be arranged for the girls knitting class and the children's snipping class.

Any lady may work with class 1, class 2 or class 3, or all of classes 1, 2 and 3.

All materials will be made into articles which will contribute to the comfort of sick and wounded men in hospitals.

The Red Cross was organized at the close of the Civil War, yet until the year 1900 it was still a struggling organization, largely a private charity, without official recognition or national standing. It first impressed itself upon the notice of the country by its relief work at the Johnstown flood in 1888. When the Spanish war broke out it was still outside the government and not organized or prepared along military lines. In 1905 congress gave the organization a federal charter and designated it as the official relief organization of the United States. It is the only organization permitted to give volunteer aid to victims of war, and every lady in Concord township and the north half of Newville township will be welcome in our work room if she be a member or not a member of the Red Cross. There is work for all. Articles to knit may be taken from the work room to the home with permission of the class chairman, who in turn must comply with standard specifications furnished by the Bed Cross. The rules will be explained in the work room.

Each lady must furnish her own knitting needles which will be on sale in the work room.

No chairs are in the room and will each person who can loan a chair please bring it. Also not enough sewing machines have been offered. If there is any one who will loan theirs please report to the St. Joe chairman, Mrs. C. R. Price.

BRAINSTORM

THE desire to escape public duty gives elasticity to the conscience. Up in LaGrange county, a young fellow suddenly beame troubled in his mind on the subject of war. He eased his conscience on July 26 by joining the Amish church and by taking unto himself an Amish wife. This was too much like a death bed repentance, and the examining board told him that in due time Uncle Sam would measure him for a suit of khaki and make him a present of a gun and send him where there is no closed season against shooting Germans.

—O—

NO ONE is more interested in the discovery and punishment of those who make false claims for exemption from conscription than the young man who has a bona fide reason—has some one actually dependent upon him. If these slackers are not ferreted out, the deserving will suffer for the wrong doing of the undeserving. Wholesale and foundationless claims for exemption make it more difficult for all to obtain their rights. Many a good boy who is down on the list may be called earlier than he would have been by the falsifying of a slacker who stands higher up. Justice demands that all be given the same chance and that the dishonest individual does not profit by his own dishonesty, and who is more interested than the one who may be forced to take the place of one of these public dead beats?

—O—

THE Amishman, in his efforts to dodge his duties as a citizen, forgets to write in his creed that he is "conscientiously opposed to paying taxes." How he neglects to do so is a quandary. Never thought of it, perhaps. Give him time, however. By the way, should some denomination interpret "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's" to mean that every possessor of a dollar becomes a Cæsar so far as that one particular dollar is concerned and his conscience forbids his enriching the public exchequer therewith—or, in other words, that the Bible forbids tax paying—would the members of that church be excused from contributing to the public treasury? Certainly not: they would be forced to pay their share. If the law plays no favorites when going down into men's pockets and taking out paltry dollars, why should it do so when reaching into the home and taking out the most priceless asset, the son? If any favors are shown, why not take the one that is of the least value to the community?

—O—

THE War has proven a revelation; and a light—an effulgent light—has burst upon all with blinding force. It is the light of the knowledge that women haven't anything to do. The war has revealed the fact the young men of the land have made ma, sister, daughter and wife the objects of such tender care that they (the young men) exude solicitude along with perspiration on these hot summer days. They fairly revel in solicitude; and the picture of dear ones bending over wash tubs has been changed to those same dear ones undergoing the torture of slow starvation while their heroic selves are fighting in the trenches, and is ever before them. Is there any reason why they should not stay at home and lavish affection upon those they have learned to love so devotedly since the war began? Their favorite song, "What the H— Do We Care!" has given place to "Who Will Care For Mother Now?" sung to a sobby accompaniment. Home has become a veritable eleemosynary institution, wherein women have no harder task than to be the objects of solicitous care.

Organize the Boys

Pursuant with the governor's proclamation concerning the boy's working reserve of the U. S. A. as published in THE NEWS last week, a meeting will be held next Thursday evening, August 16, at the school house to thoroughly organise this movement.

County director, Mr. Binford, of the Auburn Y. M. C. A., so well known to all the boys here will direct the meeting and will be ably assisted by other good speakers.

All boys of the township between the ages of sixteen and twenty, with their parents are earnestly requested to be present. It is a patriotic and instructive movement and allies you with the federal government and you become an active factor in a great nation-wide movement that has been promulgated by the U. S. Labor Bureau and heartily sanctioned by our own governor.

Let us have every eligable boy in the township out to hear the speakers and get acquainted with the workings of this great movement.

Attending Conference

Rev. J. C. Coons and Sol Barney are attending the M. P. conference at Frankfort this week. It opened Monday evening and will continue over Sunday. Rev. J. C. McCaslin, formerly pastor at this place, who has been out of the work for some time, is at the conference and will re-enter the ministry, his health being greatly improved.

Ralph Sechler Benedick

Ralph Sechler has become a Benedick. In other words, he is a married man. He surprised his St. Joe friends on Monday by returning with his bride, as none but his immediate friends were aware of his intentions.

He was united in marriage to Miss Anna Martindale, of Greenfield, Ind., at 4 p. m. Saturday, the ceremony being performed at the home of the bride's parents. The young couple became acquainted at school.

Mrs. Sechler is a comparative stranger to St. Joe people, their acquaintanceship with her being limited to a visit here several weeks ago and to what they have seen of her since her marriage; but she has created a favorable impression. She is to be commended on her good judgment in the selection of a husband: Ralph is an exemplary young man with a laudable ambition to do something and be somethnig in the world. His entire life has been passed here and he has many friends and a good reputation; and if the young wife should bear the worst that can be truthfully said about him, she would not hear anything very bad.

The young couple will probably make their home here until he is summoned to the army or she has to return to Greenfield, where she is domestic science teacher in the city schools.

Thornton Reunion

Mrs. F. M. Thornton and daughter, Geraldine, left on Friday for Elkhart to attend the Thornton reunion, held at McNaughton park, that city, on Saturday. One hundred and sixty members of the family were present. An enjoyable day was passed. Before returning, Mrs. Thornton expects to visit friends at Dunlap, Elkhart, South Bend, Edwardsburg and Battle Creek. Mr. Thornton was unable to accompany her.

Taken to Hospital

Monday evening, Dr. Farnham took Mrs. Stella McNabb, of Newville, to the Lutheran hospital, Ft. Wayne. She had appendicitis. An immediate operation was necessary, and this was performed by Dr. Duemling. The diseased organ was filled with pus and was on the point of bursting. The patient is doing well.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 19

FINDING THE BOOK OF THE LAW.

LESSON TEXT—II Chronicles 34:14-33.

GOLDEN TEXT—I will not forget thy word.—Psa. 119:16.

I. The Book of the Law Found (vv. 14-17). 1. The occasion (v. 14). It was found while the work of repairing the temple was going on. At what part in the temple we do not know; perhaps in the treasure house, for it was found while bringing out the money to pay for the repairs. Perhaps this was in or near the ark, for the law was usually kept in or by the ark.

2. By whom (v. 14). Hilkiah, the high priest, was the finder. It is strange that the high priest was ignorant of the place where the law was found. It is a sad comment upon the moral and spiritual condition of priests and kings, since they were appointed guardians of God's law. It is, however, always true that when one does not want to have his life ordered by the Bible he will put it out of his sight. The disappearance of the Bible from our homes, and the neglect of it in our study, is a certain sign of evil in our lives. Be assured, however, that though the law of the Lord be removed from our sight it shall sooner or later come before us to judge us. God has declared that his Word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that whereunto it hath been sent.

3. Its disposition (v. 16). Hilkiah gave the law to Shaphan the scribe, who delivered it to the king along with his report as to the disposition of the money which had been collected.

II. The Book of the Law Read (vv. 18, 29, 30). 1. To the king (v. 18). This was a most impressive scene, the king listening to the reading of the law of God. It was the proper thing to do, for those appointed by God to rule over the people should be anxious to know the will of God concerning them. The pious king, believing in it as God's Word, was anxious to know God's thought concerning the nation. His interest became intense, as he was made conscious of the apostasy of his people from God's law. His chief anxiety was to know what was God's purpose as to the nation in view of their idolatry. It is a sensible thing to make oneself intelligent as to his responsibilities, even to know what judgments shall befall those who have turned from God. One should know the worst while there is time yet to escape his wrath, for repentance is the only door of escape from perdition.

2. To the people (vv. 29, 30). At the direction of the king the priests, elders and all the people were called together to hear God's Word read. This was as it ever should be. People have a right to hear what God has to say to them as well as the king. To keep the people ignorant of the Word of the Lord is a great crime. The crying need of the age, with all its boasted knowledge, fine church equipment and cultured ministry, is for the Word of God to be brought to the ears of the people.

III. The Effect of the Reading of the Law. (vv. 20-28; 31-33). When God's Word is intelligently read and understood there is bound to be an impression made.

1. The king rent his clothes (v. 19). The man who will honestly listen to the reading of God's Word will be brought to his knees, for he will be convicted of sin, and will take the place of self-abasement before the Lord. The king first saw his own sins and confessed them. It is a good sign when one sees his own shortcomings and failures, and not primarily those of others.

2. The king made inquiry of the Lord through Huldah the prophetess (vv. 22-28). His supreme motive in this inquiry was to find out whether there was some way to avert the awful judgments which were impending, as set forth in the Word of God. After all, the human heart instinctively turns from threatened woe to inquire whether there is not a way of escape. Alongside of the flaming, thundering Sinai was placed the Levitical system of offerings. Law and grace are not far removed. The law becomes our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. Through Huldah the message came that God had taken account of all their sins and that judgment must fall, but Josiah would be spared the sight of all God's visitation of wrath. The penitence of the king turned aside God's wrath from himself, but the nation would be obliged to suffer for its awful apostasy.

3. The king made a covenant (vv. 31, 32). This was to the effect that he would walk in the commandments of the Lord. He also made the people stand to this covenant. He no doubt acted from the sincerity of his heart.

4. Further reforms (v. 33). Josiah now reached out as far as the national boundaries, took away their abominations and made Israel to serve the Lord their God. The fact that the book of the law was found implies that it had been lost. The way it had been lost is not definitely set forth, but numerous ways may be suggested. The Bible is a lost book to many professing Christians today, maybe through lack of interest in it, willful neglect or neglect through the stress of life's business and pleasures. May we not each one inquire as to whether our Bibles are lost?

STEEL BAIT-CASTING RODS.

My Dear Buck:

Well, old scout, we now come to that part of the tackle outfit that has caused more argument than the European war, by which we refer to the steel rod vs. the split bamboo. There are a lot of anglers that swear by the split-bamboo rod and look with horror on the steel rod. These split-bamboo purists are considerably in the minority, however, as can be easily proved by a straw vote of the rods in use at any camp or resort in the game-fishing country. Personally, old man, when it comes to downright class to a rod, you certainly must place the blue ribbon on the split-bamboo. It is first choice of materials, being light, springy and considerably active, but in the hands of a beginner it sure stands a mighty fine chance of breaking if he hooks onto a real live wire of the weedy waters.

Steel a Sturdy Worker.

The steel rod naturally is a little heavier than the split-bamboo, although the slight difference in weight is not enough to put your casting arm in a sling after a day's casting. It has plenty of backbone; at the same time has enough action to make it a fine caster without the whippiness of the split-bamboo. For tossing out the heavier artificial lures it is in a class by itself. It is a sturdy strong rod that can be depended on to "pump" a fighting bass out of the weeds without giving you heart failure over wondering whether it will hold or not. By this, old man, do not take it that it is only a good rod for rough work, handled with the skill of an expert it makes as fine a fishing tool as any rod. It may not be as speedy in action as the split-bamboo, but as a buying proposition for the beginner, dollar for dollar, you will get a better rod in steel in the lower-priced rods than you will in either the split-bamboo or solid woods.

The steel rod does not require much care, being a husky tool, about all that is necessary to keep it in first-class shape is to wipe it dry after using, and oil occasionally in order to avoid rust. It is always ready for use and you never have to bother with frayed windings, cracked varnish or warped joints. You will never make a mistake if you include a steel rod in your kit, in fact if you are going into the woods far from your tackle supply as a "safety first" tote a steel bait-caster. The general construction of the steel rod is three-piece with short handle, and the fact that the ferrules, which are merely a band of bronze, are built right into the rod, overcomes the weakness of the three-piece split-bamboo. It is the most satisfactory rod of the three-piece construction. There is one little old veteran steel rod up in the North woods which started its bait-casting life as a five-footer some six years ago. A number of breaks and accidents have reduced it to a trifle below four feet. The guides have been resoldered a number of times, the enamel has passed away, yet this old pal of a rod made a 31½-pound musky come up to the gaff, without a quiver in its short length, and at that it's still good for many a cast. Wonderful strides have been made in the steel-rod end of the game, and it's here to stay, as shown by its popularity on the fishing waters anywhere, and if you get a good one you can feel sure that it will be there with the goods when you hook your big one, excellent for learning the game, and, in fact, a fine rod for any time.

Solid Wood Rods.

Of the solid woods for bait-casting rods noibwood takes first place. It is a wonderful resilient wood, at the same time tough and strong. It makes a mighty fine rod, but for the average fisherman the price is so high that it's just on the top shelf out of reach.

Bethabara is a more commonly known material of the solid-wood family, and you can get a fine rod of this wood for $10 that will make a handsome appearance and give you a caster that will more than satisfy you. The bethabara rod is a livelier caster; it is tough enough to stand hard handling, although careless use may warp it.

A close second in casting power, strength and resiliency comes greenheart, and this wood is far lighter than bethabara, thus the rods of greenheart are considerably thicker than those of bethabara and not any heavier. Good greenheart rods can be bought for $6 and up.

Of the solid woods, lancewood is by far the cheapest and some years ago had quite a following, however you will see few in use today. It has a tendency to warp under a strain, and even atmospheric changes will have a noticeable effect on it.

SPACE ECONOMY IN HOUSE PLANS

Modern Dwellings Have Very Little Waste Room to Catch the Dust.

BEDS DISAPPEAR IN CLOSETS

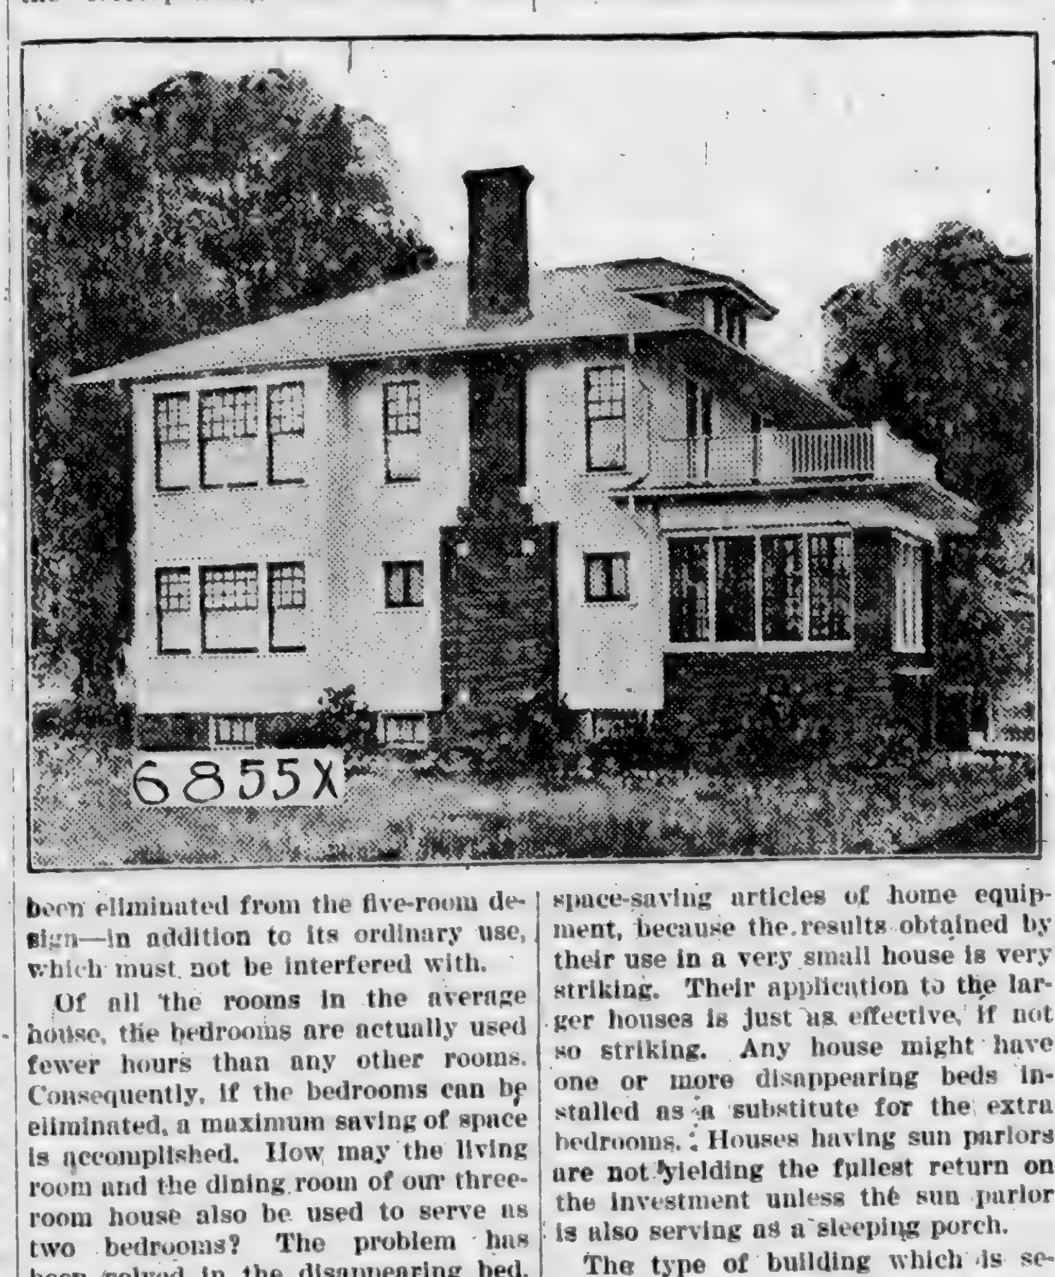
Design Described Here an Example of Architectural Ingenuity—Stucco and Brick Blend Well in Decoration.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

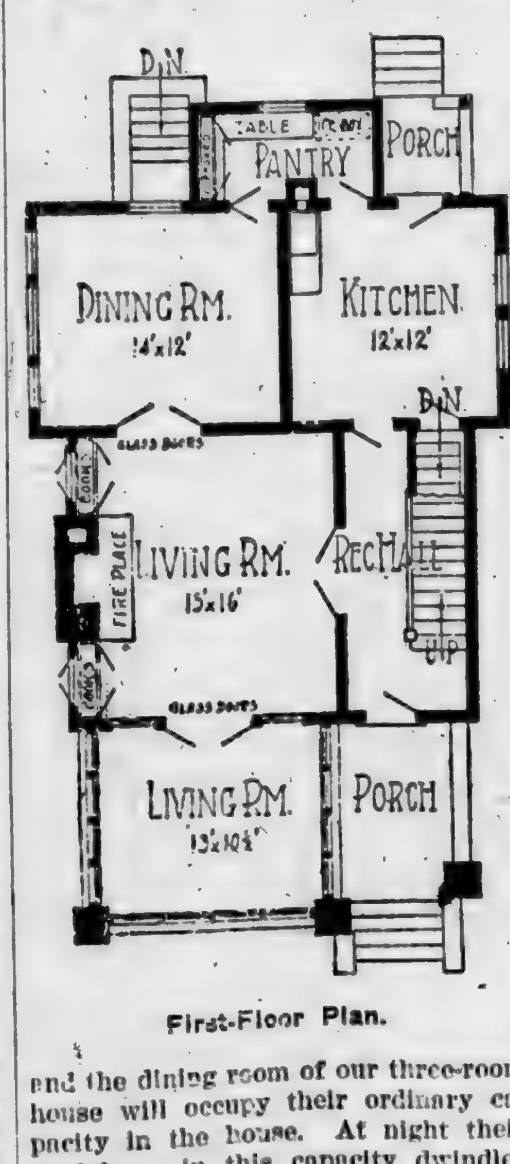
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

There are two methods of designing a house so that it will have sufficient capacity to meet the needs for which it is required. One method is to proportion the size of and number of rooms to the special requirements of the case. The other is to utilize certain of the space for two or more purposes and thus obtain the same results with a lesser actual floor area. Home equipment designed for the purpose of saving space has been and is being developed with success because of the fact that its need is urgent, calling forth the efforts of exceptionally ingenious men to meet the need.

Suppose, for instance, we consider how it may be possible to realize the same utility out of a house of three rooms which might be expected of a house of five rooms. Naturally, this requires that two of the rooms in our three-room house be so constructed and equipped that each will successfully provide every useful quality of the corresponding room which has been eliminated from the five-room design—in addition to its ordinary use, which must not be interfered with.



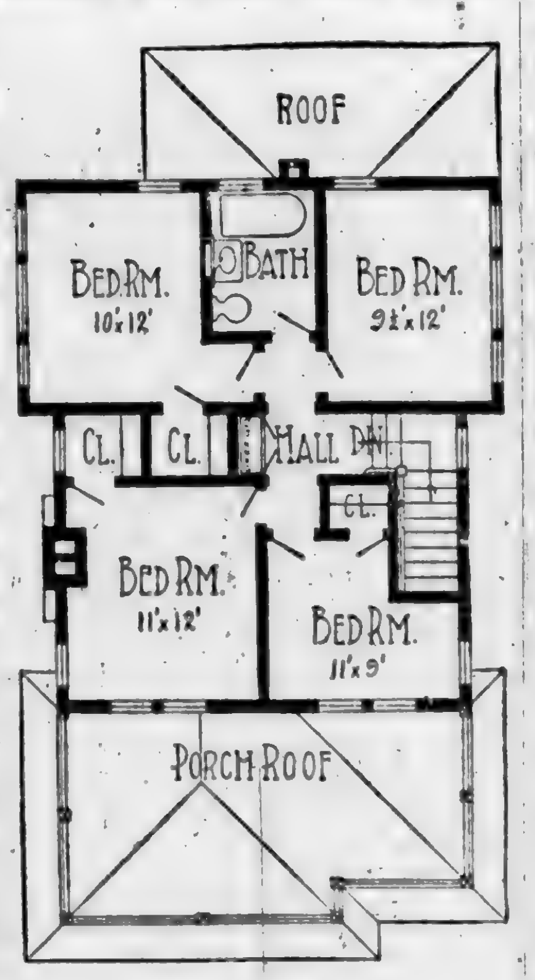
Of all the rooms in the average house, the bedrooms are actually used fewer hours than any other rooms. Consequently, if the bedrooms can be eliminated, a maximum saving of space is accomplished. How may the living room and the dining room of our three-room house also be used to serve as two bedrooms? The problem has been solved in the disappearing bed. During the daytime, the living room and the dining room of our three-room house will occupy their ordinary capacity in the house. At night their usefulness in this capacity dwindles and, by an easy rearrangement of the furniture and the addition of a disappearing bed, they come into new usefulness.



First-Floor Plan.

But where is the bed during the daytime? It is tucked away out of sight in a closet, folded back into a wall recess or drawn up into a ceiling receptacle. Closet space is required, no matter what type of bed is used, but the net result will show a good saving of space in favor of the scheme, even if these closets are made fairly large.

This three-room house will not have space on the main floor which can be used for storage purposes. The basement is not a suitable place for the storage of certain articles, and so the attic space must be utilized. It hardly seems like good design, when space economy is the object, to take up quite a considerable amount of floor space with a stairway to the attic which, it is probable, will not be used a great deal. There is a solution to this problem also. The movable stair is being manufactured for just such use. It is built into the attic floor, has a neat appearance from the floor below, is strong, substantial and serviceable and is very easy to operate. All that can be seen from the floor below, when the stair is folded up, is a carefully finished panel of wood, which is finished to match the trim in the room where it is located.



Second-Floor Plan.

We have mentioned only a very small house in connection with these space-saving articles of home equipment, because the results obtained by their use in a very small house is very striking. Their application to the larger houses is just as effective, if not so striking. Any house might have one or more disappearing beds installed as a substitute for the extra bedrooms. Houses having sun parlors are not yielding the fullest return on the investment unless the sun parlor is also serving as a sleeping porch.

The type of building which is selected will determine largely to what degree economy of space can be carried into the design of the house itself. Perhaps the greatest capacity per square foot of ground within the foundation walls is possible with the so-called "square" type of house. A house of this type is very easily divided up into rooms without necessary loss of useful space. Furthermore, the appearance of the square house is altogether pleasing, as may be seen from a study of the accompanying perspective view.

In the design illustrated, the walls of the house proper are finished with stucco, while the sun parlor, porch, chimney and foundation wall above the grade are built of brick. In a house of this size the combination of stucco and brick is striking. The color and texture of the brick surfaces may be selected with the object of producing the effect which is most pleasing to the owner, and the stucco is capable of various treatments to bring out the desired effect.

The rooms are arranged in a very pleasing manner. In the large reception hall an open staircase is built. Double doors lead off to the living rooms. In the main living room a brick fireplace and two bookcases are the most attractive features. Glass doors having an ornamental window on each side are placed between the main living room and the sun parlor. These two rooms give the house a splendid basis upon which a model home may be founded.

The dining room and kitchen are connected by a pantry built out from the rear wall of the house between these two rooms. The arrangement is very convenient.

Four bedrooms and a bath are provided on the second floor. Every room is well lighted, of good size and full height. There is a balcony above the porch, the roof being covered with deck cloth and waterproofed.

BOOMERANG ARGUMENTS.

Replying in public debate to the liquor man's argument for compensation, Dr. Clarence True Wilson Said: "Suppose we grant that they (the United States and the liquor seller) are partners. Suppose two thieves are in business to rob. One of them 'hits the trail' and gives up robbery and crime. Would you say the other thief has a case for damages for injury to his business by the conversion of his partner?

"When we stopped piracy on the high seas, did we compensate the pirate? When we stopped lotteries, did we compensate those who conducted them? Have we compensated dealers in dope whose business was destroyed by the Harrison act?"

Another point made much of by Doctor Wilson's opponent was that the first year after prohibition went into effect in West Virginia the governor of the state had to appeal to the legislature for additional tax measures to make up for the loss in revenue from liquor. "And in the second year," Doctor Wilson replied, "West Virginia swept her state debt off the map. Today she stands among the leading states of the Union in the amount of surplus in her treasury."

ALCOHOL GETS MEDICAL TABOO.

At the annual meeting of the house of delegates of the American Medical association, held in New York in June, a resolution was adopted condemning the use of alcohol. Such resolution was presented by Dr. Frank Billings of Chicago, chairman of the association's council of health and public instruction, and after discussion was passed as follows:

"Whereas, We believe that the use of alcohol is detrimental to the human economy, and whereas its use in therapeutics as a tonic or stimulant or for food has no scientific value, therefore

"Be it resolved, That the American Medical association is opposed to the use of alcohol as a beverage; and

"Be it further resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be further discouraged."

The American Medical association has a membership of 81,000 physicians and surgeons.

NEW OCCASION IN SHIP-LAUNCHING.

Three boats—large cannery tenders for the Alaska fisheries—were recently launched from one ship-building plant in Seattle. Each was christened with the sparkling nonalcoholic beverage, applestaff. The bottles were entwined in the national colors and hung from the three prows on silken ropes of red, white and blue. The three young women sponsors, said the Seattle Times, carried out the triple ceremony with great brilliancy. The crash of the bottles, sounding at ten-second intervals, bathed the bows of the vessels in glistening foam. "The new christening beverage made good in whirlwind style. Not a hitch, not a halt or pause of any kind, which means, according to tradition, that it is safe and sane to christen a ship with the new Seattle beverage."

THE WHOLE TRUTH.

"A lie that is part the truth is ever the blackest of lies." A part truth, according to a liquor journal: "Kansas, bone-dry, has 75 more prisoners in the penitentiary than it had when drizzling wet."

The whole truth: The Kansas penitentiary is a federal prison and the United States government sends more prisoners there than to any other federal prison because it has plenty of spare room for outsiders and because it is a model of its kind, improving both the health and the morals of its inmates.

ASHAMED OF ITS BREWERIES.

In advertising Milwaukee as a manufacturing center, the Rotary club of that city omits from the list of products any reference to the city's ouput of beer. The Rotary club represents 25 nationally known firms, not one of which, it declares, is "sister, cousin or aunt of the beer business."

Maybe He Did.

The couple had stopped before the brilliantly bejeweled window of a shop in Fifth avenue, near Thirty-seventh street, New York. The girl, petite and altogether a treat to the passing masculine eye—passing, but hesitatingly so—was gowned charmingly in something which clung to her affectionately, pardonably so.

"Oh, Harold!" she exclaimed, "did you know that knee vanity boxes were becoming all the rage?"

"So I see," replied the unashamed Harold.

"You horrid thing! You do not."

A family tree is unquestionably of equal value to some persons as is real estate of a more material nature. But it all depends upon whether or not the branches of the tree are clean limbed. This was the decision reached by the two men discussing ancestry and heredity and such philosophy.

SOLD SHOTGUN FOR TEN DOLLARS

And Filed on Western Canada Land. Now Worth $50,000.

Lawrence Bros. of Vera, Saskatchewan, are looked upon as being amongst the most progressive farmers in Western Canada. They have had their "ups-and-downs," and know what it is to be in tight pinches. They persevered, and are now in an excellent financial position. Their story is an interesting one. Coming in from the states they traveled overland from Calgary across the Battle river, the Red Deer river, through the Eagle Hills and on to Battleford. On the way their horses were stolen, but this did not dishearten them. They had some money, with which they bought more horses, and some provisions. When they reached Battleford they had only money enough to pay their ferriage over the Saskatchewan river, and this they had to borrow. It was in 1906 that they filed on homesteads, having to sell a shotgun for ten dollars in order to get sufficient money to do so. Frank Lawrence says:

"Since that time we have acquired altogether a section and a half of land, in addition to renting another three quarters of a section. If we had to sell out now we could probably realize about $50,000, and have made all this since we came here. We get crops in this district of from 30 to 35 bushels of wheat to the acre and oats from 40 to 80 bushels to the acre. Stock here pays well. We have 1,700 sheep, 70 cattle and 60 horses, of which a number are registered Clydes."

Similar successes might be given of the experiences of hundreds of farmers throughout Western Canada, who have done comparatively as well. Why should they not dress well, live well, have comfortable homes, with all modern equipments, electric light, steam heat, pure ventilation, and automobiles. Speaking of automobiles it will be a revelation to the reader to learn that during the first half of 1917, 16,000 automobile licenses were issued in Alberta, twice as many as in the whole of 1916. In Saskatchewan, 21,000 licenses were issued up to the first of May, 1917. In its monthly bulletin for June the Canadian Bank of Commerce makes special reference to this phase and to the general prosperity of the West in the following:

"Generally speaking the western farmer is, in many respects, in a much better position than hitherto to increase his production. Two years of high prices for his products have enabled him, even with a normal crop, to liquidate a substantial proportion of his liabilities and at the same time to buy improved farm machinery. His prosperity is reflected in the demand for building materials motor cars and other equipment. It is no doubt true that some extravagance is evidenced by the astonishing demand for motor cars, but it must be remembered that many of these cars will make for efficiency on the farm and economise both time and labor."—Advertisement.

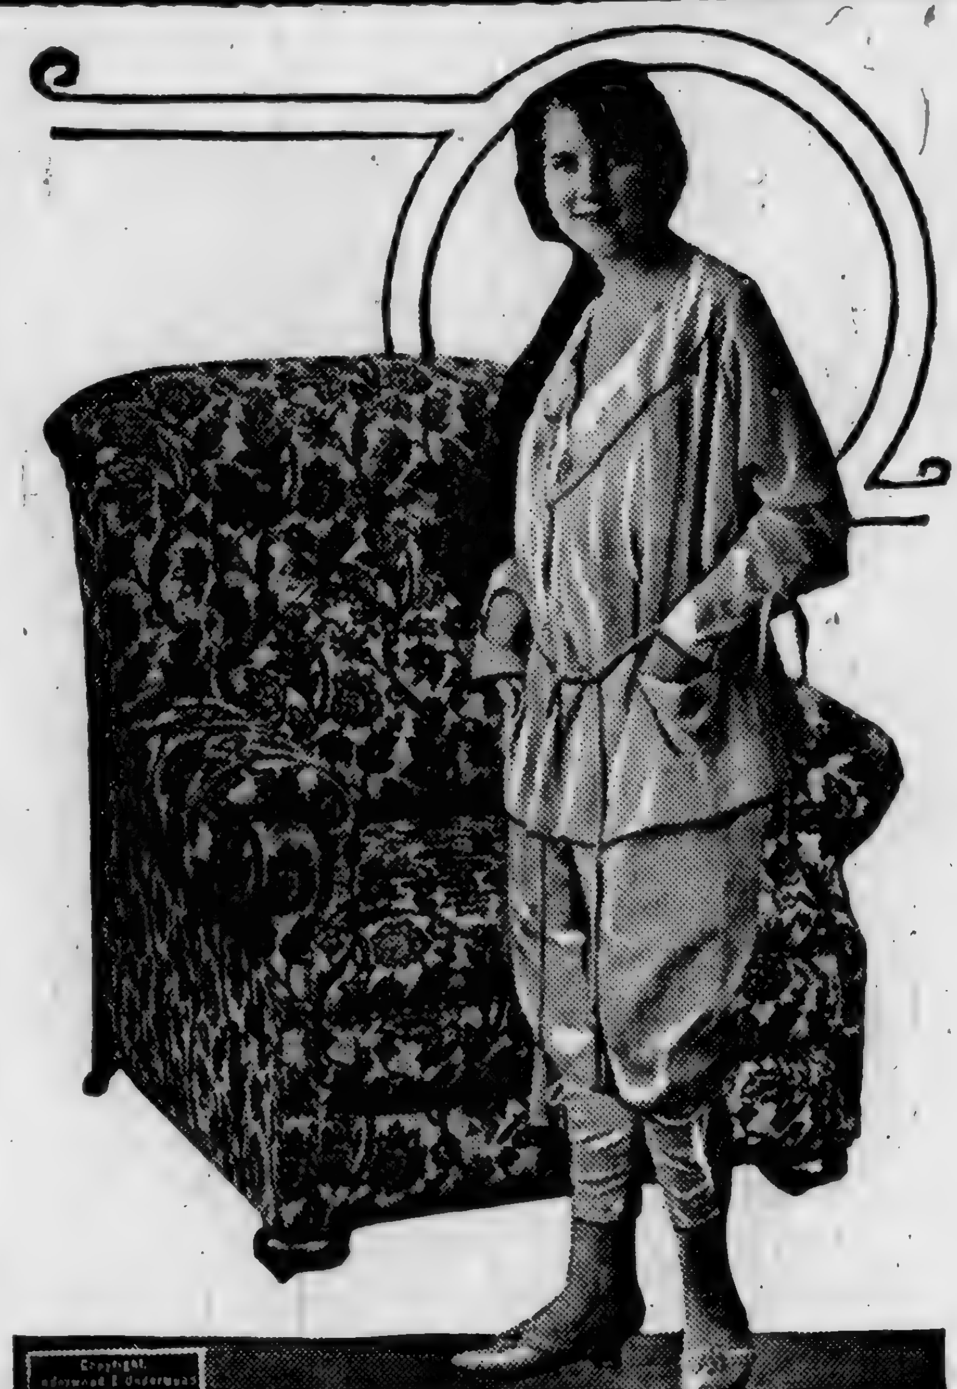
Rivaling the Glory of the Negligee



Ordering pajamas for the feminine form divine is no longer a matter of mentioning merely the size and material wanted. Such glorified garments as those shown here are evidently meant to elevate pajamas to a place of importance, making them a costume for the boudoir to rival the glory of the negligee.

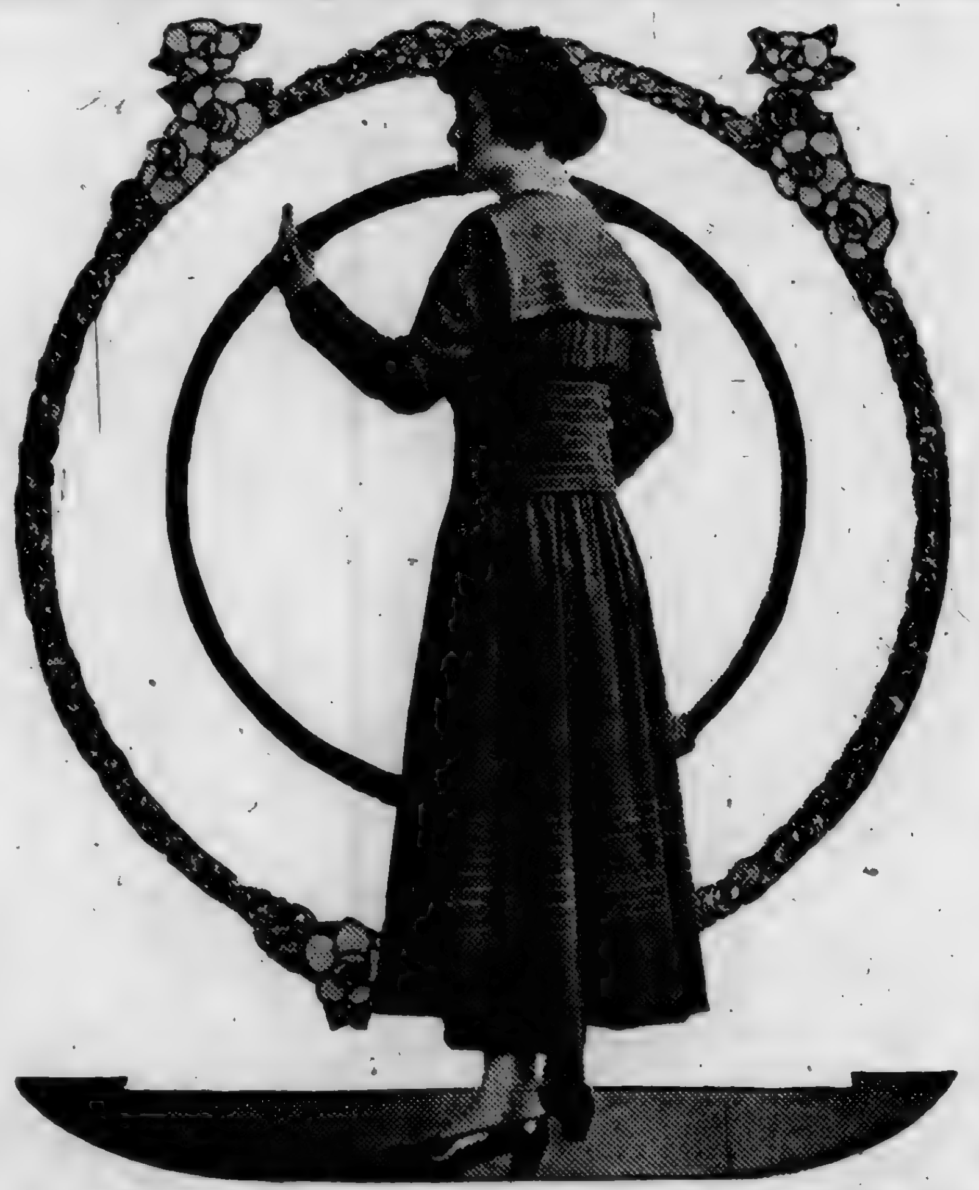
Wash satin is used for the knickerbockers and coat of this rather splendid outfit. The knickers extend below the knees, where they are narrowed to fit about the calf of the leg and are laced up the sides with satin ribbon. The jacket is cut with a collar opening in a low "V" at the front with the body of the garment gathered into it. Frivolous little pointed pockets at each side of the jacket have no particular reason for existing at all, but they add their testimony to the vogue of pockets on feminine belongings and might serve to hold an equally frivolous handkerchief—or a note—or other of the nonsensical treasures of youthful maidens.

The jacket is hemmed at the bottom and has graceful sleeves that are split along the forearm and laced together with ribbons. A silk cord is worn about the waist, tied at the front and allowed to extend itself into long ends, terminating in silk tassels.

There are other pretty costumes for the boudoir in which jackets and trousers replace the filmy negligee, and they bear the mark of Oriental inspiration. Full trousers and short coats of corduroy in light colors were among the first of the new departures to set designers thinking along lines that have resulted in such glorified garments as that pictured above.

Trim a plain hat with a decorative veil. A black veil sewn with a straggling pattern in straw and also in chenille, as well as in silk and metal threads, looks well.

New Chapter in the Story of Frocks



The one-piece frock of wool, for fall, has arrived in many new designs. This indicates that creators of styles for women expect it to come in for as much attention as the separate skirt, or the suit skirt, worn with a blouse. The one-piece frock, or the "dressmaker's dress," as it was called to distinguish it from man-tailored clothes, arrived in forceful numbers last fall. Paris launched it in place of two-piece suits, because there were no tailors left to make the suit—they were all gone off to war. But the one-piece frock did not interfere with the popularity of suits and blouses in this country; it merely made a place for itself.

The one-piece frock is very practical for the business girl or the young girl in school. It is freshened with organdie collars or collar and cuff sets, and, if cut on good lines, it is capable of doing much for the figure. One of the new models is shown in the picture above and it is especially suited to slender, youthful figures.

These frocks are made in serge, gabardine, twill or any of the smooth, pliable wool fabrics. The skirt is gathered onto a very wide girdle at its lower side and the blouse is joined to it along the upper edge, as in the frock pictured. Nine rows of chain stitching in white silk thread attest to the increasing regard for this kind of decoration. The stitching appears in five rows across the back of the sailor collar and in seven rows on the cuffs. The skirt is embellished in the same way with nine rows of stitching above the hem.

The blouse fastens at the front with buttons set rather close together, but the girdle hooks at the left side. Except for the painstaking stitching required this dress in not much of a task for the home dressmaker. It will interest mothers who must now turn their attention to outfitting their girls for school.

Sports Blouses of Color.

Although the colored sweaters, of all the hues of the rainbow, have made the all-white sports blouse rather desirable, still there are some sports blouses of color. Some of these are of striped wash silk, in white striped with color—yellow, rose, green, red or tan. These are made on the conventional shirtwaist order.

WAR APPLE CROP

This Year's Harvest of Fruit Will Help Whip Enemy.

SCARCITY OF PICKERS FELT

Size of Crop, Equal to Two Bushels for Each Person in Land, Calls for Special Methods of Handling for Market.

In a couple of weeks we will begin harvesting all over the United States an apple crop equal to two bushels for every man, woman and child in the country. This is a war crop. The consumers of the United States will be urged to use apples in the food saving campaign by which we are increasing the amount of wheat and other staple foods sent to our fighting allies.

"Eat an apple and send a biscuit," is the motto this year.

War conditions also confront the apple growers, for there is a scarcity of pickers, and careful preparations must now be made to see that this crop is all safely harvested and put into storage. Now is the time to begin organizing picking crews in every apple growing section. A survey of the situation shows that the farmer will need co-operation from business men in the towns and cities round about at which he trades, and which have just as great an interest in this crop as the farmer himself. This is emergency organization work to be taken up immediately by chambers of commerce, boards of trade, state and county councils of defense, and business men generally.

The labor supply to harvest this crop exists right in the cities adjacent to the apple orchards in most cases, but the draft and demands of factories and railroads for labor have disturbed the normal supply of workers upon which the farmer usually draws, and it is necessary to recruit new kinds of workers. People who have never regarded themselves as apple pickers may this year be asked to go to the orchards and help get in the crop for patriotic reasons.

Much is heard about the scarcity of labor, but there is not as great a scarcity as most people imagine. Workers upon whom the farmer depends in ordinary times have simply been shifted into other occupations, and war conditions demand that business men step in, locate other classes of workers who can be shifted to the orchards for this emergency and see that the farmer has plenty of help.

There will probably be some difficulty in harvesting the apple crop with these volunteer workers, many of whom have no experience at the work. Perishable fruit must be handled carefully to prevent injury to the skin and bruises. These would later cause decay when the apples go into storage.

The principles of careful fruit picking are very simple, and easily understood. If the farmer can start with two or three experienced pickers and spend a little time explaining good picking methods to his volunteers he should get excellent results, for these volunteers, while new to the work, will also be people of good average intelligence, and the war emergency will appeal to their interest so that they will be more than ready to help harvest the crop skillfully.

Apple growers are advised to get in touch with the business organizations in their nearest town, ask that help be given in securing pickers and report the number of pickers needed by themselves. One of the greatest difficulties in organizing harvest hands for any crop is that of gathering accurate information as to how many helpers are needed on each farm and in each township. For lack of such information it very often happens that one township will be handicapped because it is without sufficient helpers and a township twenty-five or thirty miles away will have a surplus of workers. By ascertaining in advance just how many workers will be needed in each locality, business organizations will be able to recruit a sufficient force.

This year's apple crop calls for special methods of handling. The size of the crop makes it necessary to send only the first-class fruit to market and to see that all seconds and culls are sold in bulk around home or worked up into by-products. There must be great care to see that apples are not exposed to the heat or outdoors after picking, but are properly housed in temporary storage places on the farm and carefully cooled. The scarcity of pickers will probably make it necessary to pick and house the crop first and grade and pack it afterwards. Full directions for handling the fruit will be published later.

The great big task immediately ahead is that of securing a picking force, and in this work the business man and the farmer are co-operating to an extent never known before. This is a war crop. It will be harvested with a war organization.

Whence Khaki Came.

It appears that khaki has been in use in the British army for more than forty years. It was in use at the time of the Jowalki expedition in 1877. All troops, British and native, engaged in the Afghanistan war of 1878-1880 wore khaki. Even the shoes were tan-colored leather, sword belts and saber scabbards were tan-colored leather, helmets were covered with khaki covers and pugrees. Buttons and buckles were not polished. Khaki is a Hindustani word meaning crusty, earthy.

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. Jones had been a member of the glorious company of the workless for some time, so that when the offer of work as a carter came Jones jumped at it.

But even to be a carter requires experience, particularly in loading up, and when one has a two-wheeled spring cart to load it is better not to put all the goods at the back. This, however, was what Jones did, with the consequence that when they were going up hill the horse, unable to stand the strain, stopped.

It did not strike our friend that his method at loading was at fault. He tried vainly to induce his steed to proceed, and then, noticing that the animal's feet only just touched the ground, he turned and drove back at full speed to his guv-nor.

Represents Government

Jesse E. Eschbach, Indiana conscription agent, Wednesday announced the appointment of H. C. Willis, of Waterloo, to represent the government in handling appeals for exemption from the DeKalb county board to the district board as provided in the selective service act.

Mr. Willis will be virtually prosecuting attorney for the United States in DeKalb county and it will be his duty to see that Uncle Sam gets a "square deal" in every case of exemption claimed under the selective service act. Each exemption granted by the DeKalb county board will be appealed by Mr. Willis to the district board where it will be again passed upon.

Money in Circulation

Money in circulation in the United States, the Treasury Departments circulation statement Tuesday shows, reached a new high record August 1. The total on that date was $4,852,084,469, an increase of nearly 23 per cent. within a year. This includes gold, silver and all forms of currency, but does not include money in the treasury which would bring the total up to $5,513,292,894.

The per capita circulation August 1, was $46.53. Within a year the per capita circulation has shown the phenominal increase of $7.53, greater than during any other similar period of time.

The amount of gold in the treasury and in circulation was $3,068,218,498, an increase of $586,000,000 within the year, and of approximately $1,300,000,000 since the European war started.

HERE THERE and EVERYWHERE

Waive the flag for the man who waives exemption.

Everybody is talking all at once about a long war and a short war—Believe what you please.

Our soldiers may not speak or understand German, but they can shoot in seven languages.

The coal mine that produces only half the coal it is capable of producing at a time when coal is short and prices extortionate is a slacker mine.

This is no time for talk of political booms for men who are in authority, nor is it the time to gather political campaign funds with which to advance the personal ambition of men who are engaged in our war work.

We don't believe President Wilson wants to use American soldiers to grab territory for any nation, or to force the payment of money. His speeches on the war have always shown a comprehensive international and humanitarian standpoint.

At this time of national crisis, the first duty of every man is to the state. This is the supreme obligation, paramount to all others, the family the church; for the state is the groundwork, the supporting layer of the social organization. The need for a patriotism that is unadulterated and unafraid is as great now as ever before in the history of the republic. Every American citizen should cultivate the spirit which impelled the fathers to dedicate their all to the cause of liberty, to pledge everything, their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor.

Charles A. Greathouse, democratic state chairman, resigned his political chairmanship immediately when he received a call to federal service. In this he set a good example for the republican state chairman, Will H. Hays, who is called on to serve state and nation with the council of defense, but who has seen fit to hold his political chairmanship. Mr. Greathouse's action is sufficiently suggestive, but the significance of his wise attitude is doubly emphasized when the republican state chairman's committee goes out to raise a $100,000 "slush" fund at the very time the republican state chairman is sitting as chairman of the people's council of defense, thus arousing a storm of criticism against the combination of partisan politics and common defense, with politics put above patriotic service.

Grasshoppers Next

Grasshoppers will be the next serious insect problem for the farmers and gardeners of Indiana to meet, according to Frank Wallace, state entomologist, in a warning issued on Saturday at Indianapolis. The warning said:

"Most of the grasshoppers are still quite small, but they grow, eat large quantities of vegetables and when the food in the pastures and fields becomes scarce they will attack the garden produce and the growers must be prepared to destroy them before they devour the crops.

"Poison bran mash is the greatest control method and for the city gardener, the following proportions will usually be sufficient: Take two pounds of bran and two ounces of Paris green and thoroughly mix while dry. Then take one pint of molasses and one quart of water and mix. Grind up one lemon, rind and all, and add to the syrup. Then mix thoroughly with the bran and Paris green. They should leave the plants and eat this preparation.

"Chickens will be poisoned by eating the bran mash or the poisoned grasshoppers, therefore they should be kept out of the gardens. They do not belong there anyway."

Preparing a Budget

County officials of DeKalb county are preparing their estimates of expenses in their offices for the year 1918, so that the board of county commissioners can prepare the county budget. It is expected that the expenses of carrying on public business in DeKalb county will exceed the budget of last year because of the increased cost of all materials

Fighting Preacher

"I am glad that I passed the physical examination. I feel that I can better serve God and my country on the battlefield than in the pulpit. I hope I shall be able to see service."

This was the statement Thursday of the Rev. Fred R. Hill, 28 years old, pastor of the Bethlehem Methodist Episcopal church near Wabash, after he had been examined and had been passed by the Wabash conscription board. He is the only minister drafted in Wabash county who did not file exemption papers.

McNagny Resigns

Phil M. McNagny, of Columbia City, a democratic member of the house of representatives, resigned as a member of the general assembly Friday, and Governor Goodrich accepted his resignation. Mr. McNagny has been in training at the officers' reserve corps training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, and on Thursday was named a captain. At the governor's offices in Indianapolis it was said that a special election probably would have to be held in the counties of Allen and Whitley which Mr. McNagny represented in the legislature, to select his successor.

Clean Up Schools

Township trustees of DeKalb county are receiving letters from State Superintendent Horace Ellis and Dr. J. N. Hurty, state health commissioner, asking that they make every effort to provide clean, comfortable school houses for the children this coming year.

The letters being sent out state in part:

"Without health the child will fail. In no small degree the future of our country is in your hands. Surely you will arise to this duty.

"Soon your schools will open. Practice no false economies in connection with schools. Don't hesitate to purchase with honesty and care all necessities. Don't wait until a few days before the school's opening date to make repairs. Banish dilapidation and dirt. A dilapidated, dirty school house is a menace to health, efficiency and life. Secure a good water supply. Children need plenty of pure water in order to grow properly and to keep in good health. To deny children an abundance of pure water is an assault upon them. Don't assault children. Outhouses must be in good repair—clean, screened and with good walks leading to them. This is a legal, moral and physical necessity."

Fail to Lower Price of Coal

The special coal committee of the Indiana state council of defense Thursday made its final report to the council at Indianapolis declaring it had failed in its efforts to bring about an agreement with the coal operators of Indiana for lower coal prices. The report, which was accepted by the council, follows:

"The special coal committee reports that efforts, continued since June 20, to arrive at an understanding with Indiana operators for reduced prices of coal has failed; that in the committee's opinion, there is no prospect of success in further effort; and that the consumers of the state should be advised of these facts to the end that they be under no misapprehension in delaying longer to supply themselves while transportation facilities are better than they are likely to be later."

There was practically no discussion of the report by the state council, but at the statehouse at Indianapolis it was regarded as the final step in the present "outrageous" coal price situation before Governor Goodrich calls into special session the Indiana legislature to enact laws not only to regulate the price of coal but to "embargo" enough of the Indiana supply—which means practically all of it—to protect the Indiana consumers.

Conserve on Flour

Buy flour in small quantities and protect it carefully from spoilage, is the keynote of a suggestion that comes from the United States department of agriculture. It is a pertinent point in connection with the nation wide campaign to save one-third of the normal wheat supply of the nation.

Sound flour, milled from standard wheat exhibits very little tendency to decompose when stored in a proper manner. Nevertheless there is considerable loss of flour through spoilage as a result of improper storage, particularly during the hot summer months.

Housekeepers on the farm and in the city should purchase flour in accordance with their present needs, only. It is false economy for the housekeeper to purchase larger amounts of flour than can be used within a reasonable length of time.

Any storage of flour in excess of the consumer's present need constitutes hoarding, which under existing circumstances is an unpatriotic and reprehensible practice, of no profit to the individual who thus offends the threatening serious injury to the best interests of the country.

COULD NOT EXPECT MORE

Two Years Illness Cured by Glando The Great Gland Tonic.

Mrs. Susan B. Taylor, 348 S. Williams St., Paulding, Ohio, said: "Two years ago I had a general break-down. I was nervous, languid, and hardly able to drag around. My liver and kidneys were sluggish and my complexion sallow. I felt sleepy and drowsy most all day, yet I did not sleep well at night. My heart fluttered terribly at times. I was in this miserable condition two years. A friend persuaded me to try Glando Tonic. The first treatment helped me. I am taking the sixth treatment and am feeling so well that I gladly recommend Glando Tonic to any one who suffers as I did."

Nearly every case of poor health is due to inactivity of the liver, kidneys and other glands. There is enough poison produced in the body every day to cause poor health if it is not eliminated. This poison can be removed only by keeping the glands in a good working condition. Some of the most common symptoms of inactive glands are headache, dizziness, indigestion, constipation, backache, pain or ache under the shoulder blade, biliousness, tonsilitis and quinsy. These conditions can be most quickly relieved by using Glando the Great Gland Tonic. It restores the glands to action, removes the impurities and builds up the entire system. Sold only in 50-cent treatments and guaranteed to give satisfaction. Manufactured by the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

HOW PEACE CAME TO THE TRENCHES IN '98

Nineteen years ago Sunday, August 12, 1898, a courier wildly dashing up the road in the rear of the American lines near Ponce, Porto Rico, brought the news of the signing of the protocol between the United States and Spain. The impending battle was stopped.

An armstice was declared and foemen sentries patroled in sight of each other, until the surrender of the Spanish troops and the hoisting of the Stars and Stripes over the custom houses of Cuba and Porto Rico heralded the approach of peace. The news did not reach the Phillippines in time to prevent further bloodshed, for on the following day, Manila was stormed and the Spaniards driven out. Marines and bluejackets from Dewey's fleet and regulars and volunteers under Generals Wesley Merritt and Francis V. Greene, commanding the first expedition to the orient, formed the assaulting column.

The fall of the citadel occurred on August 13, when Old Glory raised above the ramparts to the cheers of the American fleet, replaced the red and yellow banner of Spain. The following day swift vessels brought the news of peace from Asiatic ports but the battle was over and Manila and its defenses were in American hands.

Disloyalty in County

County Council of Defense will Present All Evidence to Federal Authorities—Like Movement All Over Nation.

The National Council of Defense supplemented by the State and County Councils of Defense have effected an organization throughout the nation, whose duty it is to discover evidence of disloyalty and take such action as will nullify the efforts of disloyal citizens.

In each county there is a director assisted by others in each township. For obvious reasons the names of the members of this organization are not made public.

Any evidence of disloyalty in DeKalb county should be promptly reported by any citizen, to any public official or to any member of the County Council of Defense and by them the information will be passed to the proper persons by whom it will be forwarded to Indianapolis and possibly to Washington. In case sufficiently flagrant the offenders will likely find a berth in a federal prison.

There may be an impression among the people that in rural communities like DeKalb county disloyalty is not likely to be found, but one instance should be sufficient to correct the impression. A citizen of DeKalb county is reliably reported to have made the expression: "If I must fight it will be in the army of Germany." Such a sentiment should insure the citizen an early one-way ticket to Germany.

Supposed to Be a Spy

Frank Koch, a German, Taken into Custody at Big Power Plant—Admits That he Came to United States From Mexico.

Admitting that he came to the United States from Mexico and that he had been in Fort Wayne for the past three weeks without taking out restricted zone permit papers, Frank Koch, a German, was ordered Monday turned over to the sheriff of Allen county, who will turn him over to federal authorities for investigation. He was tried in police court on a charge of drunkenness Monday morning.

Koch was arrested Saturday night when he was ordered to stay away from the power station on Spy Run avenue at Fort Wayne. He was told to get away, but insisted on returning. Upon being told the third time Koch is alleged to have taken out a knife. One of the employes whipped out his gun and held him until the patrol arrived.

Koch, who gives his age at 37 years, said he left Germany seven years ago. He emphatically denied that he had ever served in the German army. He said the authorities had turned him down when he presented himself for examination.

In his cell in the police station Koch said that he fled from his native country seven years ago and became a fireman on the ship Kronprinzessin Cecelie, which was interned in the Boston harbor shortly after the beginning of the war. Koch states, however, that this was nearly seven years ago and that he deserted when the ship reached an American port on one of its trips to this country.

Officials are prone to believe that the man is a German spy and that he escaped after the ship was interned in Boston harbor. This theory bears more weight, say officials, since the man admits that he was in Mexico the first of the year. They say that it is probable that he received instructions there from another representative of the German government just what was expected of him.

PROSECUTOR-ELECT KETCHAM NOT EXEMPT FROM DRAFT

Says the Indiana Daily Times published at Indianapolis:

Winthrop W. Ketcham, prosecuting attorney-elect of DeKalb county, who would take office January 1, 1918, can not claim exemption on the grounds of being a public official, according to a ruling announced by Jesse E. Eschbach, state conscription agent.

"I do not believe that any man who is merely elected to an office, but who has not yet assumed the duties of that office can claim exemption on the grounds that he is a public official," said Mr. Eschbach. "Mr. Ketcham would not become prosecuting attorney until next January and I can not understand how he can claim to be exempt from the conscription now under the public official clause of the conscription law."

GOOD WHEAT YIELD FORECASTED IN DEKALB COUNTY

DeKalb county farms will this year produce 373,600 bushels of wheat and 22,736 bushels of rye, according to estimates prepared by George C. Bryant, field agent for the United States Department of agriculture, on information furnished by a regular corps of correspondents in this county.

The estimated wheat yield of Allen county is 465,660 bushels and rye 50,475. Noble county's wheat yield is estimated at 560,200 and rye at 35,580. In Steuben county the wheat yield is estimated at 267,478 and rye at 72,525. In Whitley county wheat will amount to 256,480 and rye at 72,525.

To Subscribers:

We have not been bothering you about that subscription to The News; but, honest, now, if it is past due or nearly due, we need it and hope you will not forget us. Remember, the cost of everything we use has advanced; but the price of the paper remains the same. Hence, it is necessary for us to have the money as soon as it is due.

We are not complaining. We are only pointing out to our subscribers the necessity of prompt payment and urging them not to forget us.

News of the Week Cut Down for Busy Readers

U. S.—Teutonic War News

Denouncing some senators, congressmen and newspaper editors as "standing where the copperheads stood in the Civil war," Colonel Roosevelt demanded in an address at New York suppression of the German language press, deportation of "50-50 Americans" and called upon every man, woman and child in the country to exert every ounce of energy to win the war.

The commander of the armed guard of an American merchantman has reported to the navy department at Washington that his crew sank a submarine after the Germans had made an unsuccessful attempt to sink the ship.

* * *

More than 3,500 training camp students at Fort Sheridan, Ill., were made commissioned officers in the new American national army.

* * *

The regular army is at full strength. When recruiting began Thursday only 593 enlistments were needed to make the total in this branch 313,898, the authorized strength. Since April 1 over 184,000 men have enlisted, says a dispatch from Washington.

* * *

United States agents at Seattle, Wash., uncovered a gigantic plot to break down the selective service army plans by engineering wholesale exemptions. Propaganda is being mailed to men called for physical examination.

* * *

Dr. Fritz Bergmeier, president of the St. Paul Volks Zeitung, was arrested by order of President Wilson under the proclamation of April 6. The general policy of the Volks Zeitung has been to "cast aspersion by innuendo" on American war measures, it is charged.

* * *

Local exemption boards will be in full charge of assembling the men called to the colors September 1, says a statement issued at Washington. The civilian control of the men will continue up to the time they march through the gates of the cantonments and report to the commandants.

* * *

Revised regulations to govern physical examination of men registered under the selective draft were issued at Washington by Surgeon General Gorgas of the army and communicated to the governors of the states for information of local boards. The changes deal for the most part with questions of proportionate weight and height, but may result in the recall of some men rejected heretofore on physical grounds.

Domestic

Coal prices in Illinois are to go tumbling. Illinois citizens are assured a bounteous supply of coal. The state now has a "coal dictator." He is Chief Justice Orrin N. Carter of the state supreme court. Illinois coal mine operators threw up their hands in absolute surrender to Gov. Frank O. Lowden after a five-hour grueling conference at Chicago.

* * *

After the department of justice had received anonymous letters alleging that draft exemptions were being bought in district No. 99, in New York, the members of the local board were summarily removed from office by Governor Whitman. The members of the board were Louis I. Cherry, Dr. Henry M. Groehl and Dr. S. J. Bernfeld.

The administration food control and food survey bills were signed at Washington by President Wilson and became law. Formal appointment of Herbert Hoover as food administrator was announced at the White House later. The first bill provides for stimulation of production and the second for control of foods and fuel.

* * *

Bearing the president's stamp of approval and Secretary McAdoo's plea that it be made law, in justice to America's fighting men and their families, the long-expected war compensation, indemnity and insurance bill was introduced in both houses of congress at Washington. Drafted by international experts under Secretary McAdoo's direction, the proposed law is a substitute for the Civil war pension system.

* * *

Creation of a "labor adjustment commission" of three representatives each of the government, employers and labor, was officially announced at Washington. It is designed to have jurisdiction over all labor disputes concerning wages or employment conditions on government contracts.

A CALL FOR BOYS OF HOOSIER STATE

Indiana Asked to Enroll 50,000 for Boy's Working Reserve of the United States.

QUOTAS FROM THE COUNTIES

Nonmilitaristic Organization Being Formed Throughout the Country to Help Meet the Industrial Problems of the War.

Indianapolis.—Indiana will be called on to provide 50,000 boys as her quota of the Boy's Working Reserve of the United States.

The quota for Indianapolis, worked out on a population basis, will be 5,300 boys. Marion county outside of the city will be expected to provide 500 more, making a total for the county of 5,800 boys. Evansville and Fort Wayne have a quota of 1,450 each. Terre Haute will be called on for 1,400 and South Bend for 1,200. Gary's quota is 700 and East Chicago's 550. Hammond, Muncie and Richmond are each expected to provide 500. The quota for Anderson is 470, and that of Elkhart 430. Michigan City, and Lafayette will provide 420 each, while the cities of Kokomo, Logansport, New Albany and Marion have a quota of 410 each.

Non-Militaristic.

C. B. Fritsche, assistant state federal director, has emphasized the fact that the organization is non-militaristic and that a boy who is enrolled may at any time, on the written request of parents or guardian, receive a furlough or be discharged. Directors have been named for the Boys' Working Reserve in 80 counties of the state, and are actively engaged in preparations for making the enrollment of eligible boys next week. Thus far Madison county is in the lead as far as organization is concerned. M. F. Fultz, county director of Anderson, has a number of college men over the age of twenty-one to aid him in his work.

Not only do the state authorities expect to enroll 50,000 boys, but they also expect to register every eligible boy in the state. This will be done in accordance with the recent proclamation of Gov. James P. Goodrich, in order to make a complete survey of all the available man power in the state.

The quotas for the counties of the state are made on the basis of one-third of the eligible boys in each county. The quota for each county includes the quotas of the cities within that county.

Prepare for Mobilization.

In preparation for the mobilization of the Indiana National Guard Sunday, Adjt. Gen. Harry B. Smith has announced the following changes of officers: Maj. Edward Ott, quartermaster general, to be battalion commander Fourth infantry; Maj. George Healey of Rennsalaer made lieutenant colonel and assigned to First infantry; Maj. Arthur Miller of Mount Vernon, advanced to lieutenant colonel of Second regiment; Capt. Dwight Green of Muncie, promoted to major and assigned to Second regiment; Capt. Raymond Chambers of Laporte, promoted to major and made adjutant of the Indiana brigade; Lieut. Col Robert Youngman of Crawfordsville was assigned to the Fourth regiment; Maj. Carl F. Beyer of Warsaw, assigned to Third regiment; Maj. Clyde Dreisbach of Fort Wayne, Maj. Walter Universaw of Kokomo and Maj. J. A. Umpleby of Gary assigned to the new Fourth infantry.

Will Assist Mrs. Born.

Mrs. M. A. Potter, Miss Janet Flanner, Mrs. J. C. McCain and Mrs. Hence Orme have been appointed by Mrs. Isaac Born, a member of the Marion county council of defense, to assist her in the enrollment of women for service under the registration card system of the league for woman's service and to help obtain signatures to the Hoover food conservation pledge cards. Miss Julia Landers, as chairman of the Indiana League for Woman's Service also will serve as a member of the committee.

Labor Asks for Extra Session.

A meeting at the statehouse, called under the auspices of the executive committee of the Indiana State Federation of Labor, adopted a resolution urging Gov. James P. Goodrich to call a special session of the legislature for the purpose of referring to the people of the state the question of holding a constitutional convention.

Charles Fox of Terre Haute, president of the Indiana State Federation of Labor, who was chosen chairman of the meeting, explained that other Indiana organizations which favor the holding of a constitutional convention had been invited to take part in the meeting. Representatives of other organizations such as the Citizens' League of Indiana, the prohibitionists and the Legislative Council of Indiana Women were present, and some of them strongly objected to the wording of the resolution, particularly in its reference to the supreme court. Mr. Fox said the resolution had been prepared hastily under the direction of the executive committee of the State Federation of Labor.

After the resolution had been read to him at the afternoon session, the governor said he was in full sympathy with the meeting and its desire to bring about a revision of the constitution. He said he was not prepared to say at the present time what he would do in regard to the calling of a special session of the legislature, but said he would give the matter his careful attention and would be able to give his decision within a short time.

Market Roads Chosen.

The state highway commission announced that it has practically decided on the route for 800 miles of main market roads in the state, on the improvement of which some state aid will be extended. With Indianapolis as the central point, one north and south main highway through the state has been determined on, and three east and west routes in the northern, central and southern parts of the state, have been outlined. The north and south route will extend through South Bend, Plymouth, Rochester, Peru, Kokomo, Tipton, Noblesville, Indianapolis, Columbus, Seymour, Scottsburg, New Albany and Jeffersonville. The east and west road through the north part of the state will largely follow the course of the Lincoln highway, extending through Valparaiso, Laporte, South Bend, Goshen and Fort Wayne. The east and west road through the central part of the state will follow the course of the old National road, extending from Richmond through Indianapolis to Terre Haute. The route of the east and west road in the southern part of the state will run from Lawrenceburg through Versailles, North Vernon, Seymour and Bedford.

Canning of Foodstuffs.

"Eat what you can and can what you can't."

Canning and conservation of foodstuffs has now become the order of the day in Indianapolis as well as all over the country. The immense quantities of vegetables raised this year in the nearly 50,000 gardens in this city must be canned, dried or otherwise prepared for the winter. Otherwise enormous quantities of the all-important crops will be wasted, and waste is the one thing that the government and those in authority are seeking to eliminate.

Never before in the history of Indianapolis were there as many gardens as this year, and never before were such great crops of garden products raised. When the demand for more food production went out early in the spring the people responded willingly, and in a manner that surprised even those who started the campaign. What to do with the crops now is the question. The people could not consume at once all they will raise this year. The surplus must be saved.

Mrs. Carl G. Fisher has undertaken a movement in that direction, in connection with and backed by the state council of defense.

Mrs. Fisher has completed the organization of a general committee of women. She is chairman, Mrs. Maud McOuat is secretary and Mrs. Harry Miesse is treasurer and chairman of the finance committee. The members are Mrs. Ada Watts, Mrs. John N. Carey, Mrs. Lydia Teasdale, Mrs. Isaac Born, Mrs. L. F. Blaker, Miss Helen Wallack, Mrs. N. A. Potter, Mrs. B. F. Gadd, Mrs. H. E. Barnard, Miss Martha Criley, Mrs. George Dickson, Mrs. Fred Clark and Mrs. Ritter.

Another Ambulance Corps.

The enlistment of Indianapolis Ambulance Corps No. 18 of Indianapolis, for service with the national army, has just been authorized by the war department. This company, which is commanded by Lieut. Mason B. Light of Indianapolis, was first organized about three months ago under the direction of the American Red Cross.

The company now has 700 recruits, and to reach war strength 19 more must be enlisted.

Ambulance company No. 18 will be ordered to Fort Benjamin Harrison on or before September 1, and will probably be mustered into federal service at the time of mobilization.

War Recreation Work.

As a result of a conference between Governor Goodrich and leaders in recreational work for soldiers, a special committee to co-operate with the war department in advancing that phase of camp life will be appointed soon. Those present included Joseph Lee of the war department commission on training camp activities; Hugh McK. Landon, chairman of the war recreational social service bureau in Indianapolis; Will H. Hays, chairman of council of defense, and W. B. Dickinson of training commission.

GOVERNMENT TO REGULATE PRICES

FORD ADMINISTRATION MAPS OUT PLAN TO CONTROL MARKETS.

ESTABLISH BUYING AGENCIES

Is Prepared to Take Over 1917 Wheat Crop If Necessary to Conserve the Supply and Obtain Just Prices for Fighting Forces.

Washington, Aug. 13.—The food administration announced last night its plant for controlling wheat, flour and bread, revealing that the government is prepared to take over the whole 1917 wheat harvest if necessary to conserve the supply, obtain just prices for America's fighting forces and their allies and reduce costs to the general public in the United States.

Establishing of buying agencies at all the principal terminals, licensing of elevators and mills, fixing of a price to be considered fair, regulation of the middle man and of grain exchanges with the elimination of trading in futures, are the chief features of the plan. The licensing will begin September 1.

The minimum prices of $2 for wheat fixed by congress does not become effective until next year, but the administration proposes to exercise a very thorough control over this year's crop through powers conferred under the food and export control bills.

Following is the administration announcement:

"The disturbance to the world's commerce and short supplies has caused a greater disruption of the normal markets for wheat than any other cereal.

"—As a result of the isolation of certain of the world's wheat producing countries, by either belligerent lines or short shipping, the normal determination of the price of wheat by the ebb and flow of commerce is totally considered.

"2—In order to control speculation, and to secure more equitable distribution of the available wheat and flour between their countries the allied governments have placed the whole purchase of their supplies in the hands of one buyer. Also the European neutrals are now buying their wheat through single government agents instead of in the normal course of commerce. Therefore, the export price of wheat and flour and thus the real price if not controlled, will be subject to almost a single will of the foreign purchasers.

"3—In normal times American wheat moves largely to Europe in the fall months. This year, the shortage of shipping necessitates its distribution over the entire year. Therefore, there is danger of a glut in our warehouse system over a considerable period.

"4—There are large stocks of wheat which cannot be drawn upon by the allies during the war, but in the event of peace or defeat of the submarines, these would be available and might seriously demoralize the demand for American wheat.

"5—It must be clearly understood that the guaranteed minimum price of $2.00 per bushel for wheat, set out in the food bill, does not apply to the 1917 harvest, but only to the 1918 harvest; and then under conditions which must be elaborated. There is therefore no determined price for the 1917 harvest.

"The result of this situation is that the normal price-making machinery is entirely broken down unless some efficient government action is brought into play, either (a) the American producer may face a slump in wheat, possibly below his production cost and (b) the export price of wheat which ultimately determines the real price, is at the will of a single agency. (c) Some one must buy the surplus wheat at any given moment and if the surplus passes into speculative hands it will be held for higher prices later in the year. (d) With stabilized prices, extra hazards are introduced into all distribution links which must be paid for by the consumer. It must be evident that the United States government can more justly deal with the situation than any of the agencies mentioned.

"Therefore, the food administration has determined to take the following course:

"First—In order to eliminate speculation in wheat and flour, all elevators and mills over 100 barrels daily capacity, will be required to take out a government license and the conditions of license to be:

"That only reasonable and customary charges shall be made for warehouse service; that no wheat shall be stored for more than thirty days without the approval of the food administration; that certain information as to receipts and shipments shall be supplied regularly. The grain exchanges are being asked to suspend all dealings and quotations in future wheat. These regulations will come into force September 1 and the licenses will be prepared this week.

"While farmers' co-operative elevators are expected by the food bill, this, however, only applies to mutual concerns and not to stock companies, and in any event, under the advantages of joining the plan, none are likely to stand out.

LYDIA CRAVEN SURPRISES HER FATHER MAKING LOVE TO ANOTHER WOMAN—THERE IS EMBARRASSMENT, BUT LYDIA MAKES TWO REAL FRIENDS

SYNOPSIS.—A well-bred young Englishwoman, nervous and suspicious, finds when she boards the steamer Alsatia, bound from Liverpool to New York, that her stateroom mate is Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, a fascinating, wealthy American widow of about sixty years. The girl introduces herself as Lucy Carteret and says she is going to America to meet her father. Lucy's behavior puzzles Mrs. Beggarstaff, who is vastly surprised to find her possessing a magnificent necklace which was stolen from a museum collection some time previously, and passes the news on to her friend Quoin, a private detective on board. Lucy, dressing in the dark in her stateroom, hears a mysterious conversation between two men just outside her window and recognizes one of them as Thaddeus Craven, her father. Amazed, she hurries up on deck, searches about and finds him making love to Mrs. Merrilees, wealthy, beautiful young widow and friend of Mrs. Beggarstaff, to whom Lucy has just confessed that she is really Lydia Craven.

But before she could re-collect her wits and slip quietly away Craven abruptly lifted his head and looked directly at his daughter; and now she knew him positively. Though his jaw dropped, his mouth gaped, and his eyes stared prominently from a countenance that in a twinkling darkened portentously above the blank pallor of his shirt bosom, in every lineament he was Thaddeus Craven of the sempiternally youthful face, showed never a line to declare he wasn't thirty-one but a round decade older.

For a moment whose tension lent it the length of many, father and daughter remained transfixed and staring. Then his emotion communicated itself to the woman in his arms. Startled and wondering, she unveiled her eyes, caught a shadowed glimpse of the third figure, disengaged, and drew away. And Craven suffered this without a sign to indicate that he had not forgotten her, maintaining his poise and stare with a fixity that, penetrating Lydia's confusion, stirred her curiosity.

Taking one step toward him, she paused again, lifted one hand in a gesture at once apologetic and appealing, and said falteringly, "Daddy—"

With visible effort Craven pulled himself together and made an attempt to speak; but only a husky whisper rattled in his throat. Then his glance veered uncertainly to Mrs. Merrilees.

Abruptly this last, overcoming her astonishment, precipitated the situation. The blush that had shadowed her exquisite face ebbed again, leaving it incomparably fair. She threw back her shoulders and took full advantage of her inches.

"Really, Miss Carteret—" she began; and then her voice of crystal clearness broke in a cool and tinkling laugh.

"Oh, do forgive me, Mrs. Merrilees! I never dreamed—I expected to find my father alone—"

"Father!" With that iteration of superb insolence, Mrs. Merrilees became once more completely mistress of herself; and if her tone cried scorn upon a presumptuous girl, her look demanded explanation of the man.

But Craven had needed no more time to make good his recovery. It was his familiar self who stepped into this breach, amiable, unruffled, perhaps a shade too devil-may-care; but to balance that there was a not unbecoming ring of deference in his voice. "I'm afraid," he said, "my surprise knocked me silly for a moment. Lydia, I'd no idea you were on board; but you seem already to know Mrs. Merrilees. Betty, permit me to present my daughter."

"Your daughter, Tad?" There was unpropitious raillery in the woman's tone.

Craven replied only by a bow.

"Do you realize this is my first intimation that you were asking me to become a stepmother?"

"I've much to tell you, Betty," Craven answered with grave simplicity; then, turning to his daughter, "Lydia, Mrs. Merrilees has just done me the honor to promise to become my wife, and—the truth is—"

"To come out!" Mrs. Merrilees supplied incisively.

He laughed a little awkwardly. "Exactly! I mean to say, it was all quite unpremeditated. It isn't fifteen minutes since we found we—ah—loved each other; since when I—have been rather too preoccupied to advise Mrs. Merrilees of all my affairs. In another hour, of course, she would have known. As it is if the fact of my prior marriage—"

"Tad!" Mrs. Merrilees interjected with a spirit that commanded his deference. "We're neither of us fools. Don't overdo things. You're talking stupidly—quite unlike yourself. I don't care to hear more until you've found your bearings; and I want time to find mine, into the bargain. That's fair, isn't it?"

"Nothing more so," he affirmed cheerfully.

"Then I'll leave you to your—family reunion!"

"My dear Miss Craven!" she said with an odd little catch in her voice "I'm not sure yet I ought to call you Lydia; but I'm awfully fond of your father, and—and if I can get over what doesn't seem an unfair suspicion that he's kept me too long in the dark about you, I shall probably marry him."

"I can't wish him greater good fortune," said Lydia quietly.

"You are a dear! And so beautiful—I'm jealous. Do you think, Tad, it is wise to have two blondes in one family? Don't answer, please. It's a riddle I must solve to my own satisfaction before I listen to you again. But—I'm serious—think it over."

With a transient tightening of her grasp on Lydia's shoulders, a pressure that conveyed a hint of friendliness the woman turned away.

"No!" she insisted when Craven promptly ranged himself at her side. "Let me go for tonight, Tad. I'd prefer to be alone to think things out. Tomorrow, perhaps—"

Her smile flashed uncertainly toward Lydia as she disappeared round the shoulder of the deckhouse.

Craven delayed, however, barely long enough for a word, "Wait here—I sha'n't be long."

Lydia said nothing, but watched him go with eyes confused with pain, she who had found herself suddenly relegated from the status of a well-beloved child to that of a stumbling block in the path of her father's ambition, who could no longer doubt that he had planned to keep her existence secret until his marriage to this Mrs. Merrilees of the fabulous fortune should be a consummated fact.

A footfall sounded behind her, and she wheeled sharply about to join issue with her father. But it was Peter Traft who, briskly rounding the deckhouse, pulled up short at sight of that tense young person, Lydia, with her shoulders back, her chin up, and defiance a-glimmer in her eyes.

"I beg your pardon—" He peered eagerly to make certain; for the moon was just then thinly veiled in cloud. "It's Miss Carteret, isn't it?"

"Yes, Mr. Traft," said the girl quietly, relaxing. "Good evening."

He seemed puzzled by her manner, started to say something, reconsidered sharply, then ventured with engaging deference, "It's good to see you up and about again."

"It feels pretty good, thank you," she said, with a smile that gave him courage.

"Hope I didn't startle you, galumphing into your solitude without warning. Fact is, I was looking for old Tad Craven. We're needing a fourth. I don't suppose you know Craven, though?"

"Oh, yes, I've known Mr. Craven a long time."

"Really? He's a wonder, isn't he?" Traft exclaimed with enthusiasm. "Everybody's friend—not an enemy in the world. I don't believe there's a better-liked man in New York—our New York, that is."

"Your New York? You see, I've always lived in England, and have lots to learn about—home."

"Sheer snobbery on my part," Peter admitted cheerfully. "I meant the very small part of New York that we infest, whom my friend Mr. Martin likes to call the 'idle rich.' If he only knew!"

"But are you?"

"I'm afraid I'm idle enough; but as for riches, I'm poverty's poor relation."

"But what do you do?"

"Oh, I play a good hand at bridge, a fair racket at tennis, and am always on hand to fill in when somebody doesn't show up for dinner." The least trace of bitterness flavored this gratuitous account of himself, and the peroration was accompanied by an uneasy laugh. "In short, I'm what your English friends call a waster. But please don't think that I'm bidding for serious consideration."

"I understand," the girl said quietly.

"I didn't mean to bore you, either."

"You didn't; but you made me think—and wonder."

"Why I'm content to be—so useless?"

She nodded, with her shadowy smile.

A wry grin answered that. "You certainly take the curse off of it," Traft averred. "Candor like yours is good for the egotism. The register of my self-esteem is now subnormal."

"I didn't mean to be unpleasant, Mr. Traft."

"Don't, please. Thus far you've done me good; but if you say more, betray the least real interest in me, I'll get chesty and need taking down again. And I'm forgetting Craven."

"He was here only a few minutes ago, and promised to come back before long."

"Then may I wait? You don't mind?"

"No," said the girl. "Indeed, I've something to tell you. You've praised him to my face, and that makes me want to tell you. I'm not Lucy Carteret, really, Mr. Traft. My name is Lydia Craven. Thaddeus Craven is my father."

"Oh, I say!" Peter stared incredulously. "Not Tad Craven's daughter! You're serious?"

"Quite."

He nodded. "I see you are. But—well—you have surprised me. I don't suppose a soul who knows him would believe Tad Craven anything but a convinced bachelor!"

So—it was true—Craven had never mentioned his daughter to his friends! Staring seaward, Lydia worked her hands together gently; and, watching her closely, the man saw her face fugitively convulsed. And wisely he held silence.

"Mrs. Beggarstaff knows," the girl said presently, "and Mrs. Merrilees, and I dare say by tomorrow all his acquaintances on the ship will know. So, you see, I'm not violating his confidence. Only you spoke of him so warmly that you made me want you to understand." A quaver touched her tone; but she persisted: "I'm afraid I've made a great mistake—embarrassed him horribly, turning up this way. But I didn't know he was a passenger. I supposed, of course, he was at home—in New York—"

Much of Peter's charm lay in his instinctive recognition of those times when it is wisest to say nothing.

"I couldn't help it— They forced me to it—the people I lived with in London. I knew it wasn't right, because I didn't love him. How can one marry a person one doesn't love? But when I wrote to daddy he wouldn't even answer, and I couldn't help it—I had to run away! And now, of course, he's furious with me—turning up here like the bad penny—"

"Why should he resent that? I don't see why he couldn't have told us he had a daughter—especially one like you! It seems to me, the innocent bystander, that Tad hadn't any right to pose—"

"Don't! We mustn't misjudge him. You're his friend: surely you ought to make allowances for him, if I can. I'm sure he must have had his reasons—good enough reasons, if we only knew. Why must he take the world into his confidence?"

Dumfounded, Peter stared; then remembered himself that woman nature was a singular thing, its mental processes defying masculine analysis. "You're right," he asserted meekly, after a pause. "Of course you're right! I've known Tad Craven a long time and pretty well; if he is a bit older, and I know he wouldn't do anything dishonorable or calculated to hurt anybody. He's not that kind."

Impulsively Lydia's hand went out to Peter's; but in the long instant that they sat hand in hand and eye to eye, each smiling a trace consciously, signals of distress showed in her wavering glance, and within his grasp the pressure of her firm young fingers lessened until reluctantly he released them.

"What is it?" Peter asked gently.

"Only my presumptuousness—inflicting you with my troubles, demanding your sympathy, as if I'd any right whatever—"

"I'm your father's friend, at least, Miss Craven, and—such as I am—if you care to think of me as your friend too, I'll be very glad—not to say vainglorious."

She wouldn't have been a human girl had she lacked coquetry. A suspicion of mischief lightened the smile with which she regarded him, head judgmatically inclined a bit to one side. "Mrs. Beggarstaff seems to think well of you—"

"She's kind-hearted — and easily amused."

"How you do continually cry yourself down! What is one to think?"

"When a man has the grace to speak humbly of himself, Miss Craven, listen with gratitude and amazement: truth is rare music in this world!"

"Yet you urge your friendship upon me."

"It is all I have to offer," he dropped for a moment his bantering tone: "poor currency, perhaps, but not counterfeit; lightweight, but without alloy."

Then suddenly she was grave again. "You are kind," she averred wistfully, "and—I need friends."

Do you believe that Thaddeus Craven is an honest man? And does it occur to you that he may try to get rid of Lydia in order to insure the success of his projects—whatever they may be?

POWERFUL RECRUIT FOR RED CROSS

Another addition to the business executives enlisted in the service of the Red Cross during the war was made when John D. Ryan, president of the Anaconda Copper company, was appointed as director general of military relief.

Mr. Ryan will have supervision of the bureau of medical service, the bureau of nursing service and the bureau of supplies. The maintenance of 50 or more base hospitals will be one of the large tasks which will be laid immediately before him.

He has the position of director general of military relief and will be in charge of all relief work for the fighting forces.

Mr. Ryan succeeds Col. Jefferson R. Kean, who has been ordered to take command of the 160 United States army ambulance sections in the war theater.

The military relief department was organized by Colonel Kean in 1916 and in the past few months he has built up, through it, a great machine for relief work at the front. It was because of his intimate knowledge of this work that the war department made him commander of the army ambulance sections, which were first to carry the American flag to the fighting lines.

DIRECTED TO BUILD MERCHANT MARINE

The biggest constructive job since the building of the Panama canal, the task of fitting together a fleet of merchantmen that is to save Europe from hunger, and possibly starvation, has been turned over to a Chicago man—Edward N. Hurley.

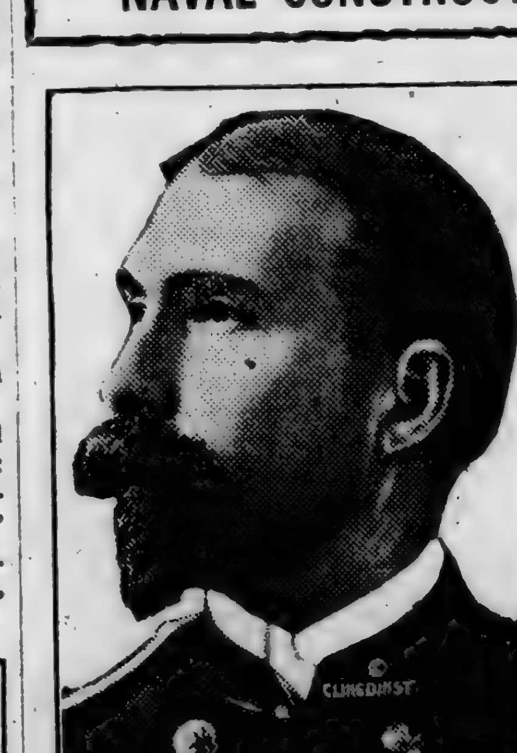
Edward N. Hurley was picked probably, because of his record of achievement. He is not a politician. He is a business man. It is not so many years ago that he was sitting on the throttle side of an engine cab for the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad. From this position he stepped into a salesman's job for the United States Metallic Packing company, of which concern he soon became manager.

For this enterprise he originated and developed the pneumatic tool industry of the United States and Europe.

He is the executive head and principal stockholder of several manufacturing and industrial concerns that have sprung from the development of this industry. His interests, however, are so diversified that they include banking and railroading as well, and have so broadened his outlook that his reports on his different studies of trade conditions and credits are regarded as some of the most authoritative contributions to the literature of American commerce.

Mr. Hurley has long been an advocate of an enormous merchant marine for the United States to open up neglected trade channels. And now he has been assigned to build it.

NAVAL CONSTRUCTOR PRACTICAL MAN



When Secretary Daniels informed Rear Admiral Washington Lee Capps that the president had selected him to build the merchant fleets that we must have if the U-boats are to be conquered, a shipbuilder had succeeded an engineer in a job upon which the destiny of democracy depends.

Admiral Capps will build ships in quantities desired, on order, for building ships, one way or another, has been his steady job for 30 years. He is a practical man, and as chief constructor of the navy has the innermost details of every yard in the country that bears the slightest resemblance to a shipbuilding plant in the grasp of his two hands.

The work upon which Admiral Capps has been employed since the new naval building program went into effect a year and a half ago is directly in line with that which he will have to do now in his new position. A man with an international reputation as a naval constructor and administrator, his failure in a post for which he has been trained by years of practical service, could come about only through politics and disagreements with associates, from which he has the instinct to steer clear. He will take orders and obey them although he will not surrender a professional opinio

Here's One for the Amateur Magician to Try on Friends

The performer spreads a newspaper on a table, so that there may be no suspicion of a trap or opening of any sort, and on it sets a glass of wine. Over this, for a moment, he throws a borrowed handkerchief. Then, picking up the covered glass, he exclaims in the language of Horace: "Nunc est bibendum," and, snatching away the handkerchief, shows a glass of water which he drinks.

Inside the glass, and dividing it like a partition, is a piece of transparent celluloid stained of a wine color; to this is attached a piece of fine silk thread, which hangs over the side of the glass. On the free end of the thread is fastened a small black button, which enables the performer to get hold of the thread easily and pull out the celluloid partition when removing the handkerchief.

The drinking of the water is to do away with the idea, that some of the audience may have, of any chemical preparation.—"Magicians' Tricks," by Henry Hatton and Adrian Plate in Century Magazine.

Better to Love.

Better to love while living,
And better than all that's said
To go with a heart forgiving
The living before the dead.
For with the dead it is peaceful,
And hearts can ache no more;
But with the living, they need you,
And their hunger is never o'er.

Better to love while singing,
And better than all that's sung
The love in a sweet word winging
To wed with a heart that's young.
For words are an empty message,
And life is a sunless gleam
Without the passion that purples
The silvery valleys of dream.

Better to love while toiling,
And better all toil for this—
The touch of a tender spirit,
The bloom of an answering kiss;
For the toil may tear us asunder,
And the care may batter and sear—
But love with a living wonder
Can baffle the bitterest tear.

FOR OLD AND YOUNG

But More Especially for the Old Is the Season of Thanksgiving.

IN NEW England the saying is "Christmas to the young, Thanksgiving to the old."

The saying, like most bits of folk lore, says the Delineator, has its roots in a common fact of living. Youth does not tend toward gratitude. It does not tend toward introspection. It does not tend toward a sense of proportion. And it is these tendencies that must unite to make the thankful heart.

Not that young people do not love Thanksgiving. They do. And country children love it more than city children, and children of servantless families love it more than those of the well-to-do. The reason is obvious. Thanksgiving day to a child is a feast day, and half the joy of a feast is in its preparation.

What simply reared, country bred grown-up would give up the memory of Thanksgiving day at home, for all the present comfort of a French cook and an elaborate menage?

First, there was the business of the turkey. A turkey was no ordinary, every Sunday in the winter bird in those days. Turkey twice a year was the rule, on Thanksgiving day and Christmas; on New Year's day, goose or duck.

The turkey was chosen anxiously, while mother poked its breastbone, father commented on the length and color of the pinfeathers. The afternoon before Thanksgiving school always "let out" early, in time for brother to fly into the kitchen and singe the turkey and for sister to break up the bread crusts carefully saved for weeks. Mother stuffed the turkey. Sister threaded the darning needle that sewed in the stuffing, brother carried the bird to the cellar to await tomorrow's oven.

Then there were the first cranberries of the season, the first nuts, the first pumpkin pies.

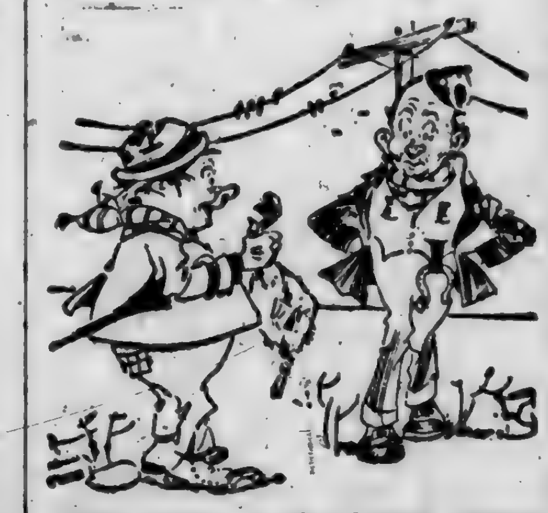
Thanksgiving day was always cold and cloudy, and about mid-afternoon, when one had reached the state of coma from overeating, it began to snow.

Mother always asked a schoolteacher to dinner, and always some bachelor of the neighborhood. And always some dear neighbor or friend, or once, grandmother, and once, little sister, had died during the year, and one noticed it more than ever at the Thanksgiving dinner.

After dinner all the women folks and the girls gathered in the kitchen to wash dishes, and the men folks and the boys went out to look at the stock.

It is for memories like these that older people are thankful, for these and other blessings. For the simple, homely facts of living; for the opportunity to serve with hand and mind those that we love; for happy yesterdays spent with those who loved us and are gone; for strength to see and hear and think and work, and for an occasional bit of leisure in which to dream; these make our older Thanksgiving day.

THANKSGIVING LUCK



"The folks at the house yonder couldn't eat this Thanksgiving turk, so they gave it to me. Luck, ain't it?"

"Yes; pretty tough luck, pard!"

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

Grading Wheat

The official grain standards of the United States for wheat were fixed, established, promulgated and published on March 31 by the Secretary of Agriculture, under the authority given in the Grain Standards Act. This act of Congress establishes wheat grades for the entire United States, from the farm to the export terminal. Effective on Indiana wheat July 1, 1917.

Number Two red winter wheat "Shall be cool and sweet, contain not more than thirteen per cent. of moisture, shall test not less than fifty-nine pounds per bushel, contain not more than 4 per cent. of damaged kernels, and not more than four per cent. of damaged kernels, and not more than one per cent. of foreign matter."

Number Three red winter wheat "Shall be cool and sweet, contain not more than fourteen per cent. moisture, shall have a test weight of at least fifty-seven pounds, shall contain not more than seven per cent. of damaged kernels, and not more than two per cent. of foreign matter.

Number Four red winter wheat shall be cool and sweet, contain not more than fourteen per cent. moisture, shall have a test weight of at least fifty-five pounds. Shall contain not more than ten per cent. of damaged kernels, not more than one per cent. heat damage, and not more than four per cent. foreign matter.

Number Five red winter wheat may be musty or sour, contain not more than fifteen per cent of moisture, test not less than 53 pounds per bushel. May contain not more than fifteen per cent. damaged kernels, not more than three per cent. heat damage and not more than 6 per cent foreign material.

For a full copy of the Official Standards write to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. or to your Congressman.

It will be seen that the requirements of grading are a trifle more strict. Dirty wheat, or wheat that is even slightly damp, can not grade either two or three in any market. It rests primarily with the farmer to see that the grain is threshed dry, and is properly cleaned.

The only time to get rye out of wheat thoroughly is while the grain is standing. More than one per cent. of rye prevents any wheat grading number two. One-tenth of one per cent. makes it unfit for seed. Cockle is still worse and must be removed, if at all, before harvest.

Successgul Surprise

The third attempt to surprise Mr. and Mrs. Dale Widney, last Monday evening, was a success. The Friendly Bible class of the M. P. Sunday School, of which Mr. Widney is teacher, to the number of about forty, went to their home east of town, and took them entirely by surprise. Last Sunday was Mrs. Widney's birthday and the fourth anniversary of their marriage, and it was in honor of these events that the party was pulled off. Refreshments were taken along and enjoyed by all, but the most enjoyable part was of a social nature. Contests and music had been arranged and a jolly good time followed. As soon as Mrs. Widney had recovered from her surprise and Dale had been summoned from his father's home, they got busy and enacted the parts of host and hostess to the satisfaction of the visitors.

Newville Chautauqua

Newville closed a successful rural Chautauqua on Sunday, the fourth of its kind and eight days in duration. The people of that community are to be congratulated upon their work and for the assistance they gave those having the matter in charge. An enterprise of this kind must have a head, of course; but success depends upon united effort. Hence, credit belongs to all the good people of Newville. This is not intended to detract from the efforts of the management. They had their part to do and did it well.

The sessions of the Newville Chautauqua were replete with good shings, but two days stand out above the rest—Wednesday, on which former Governor Hanly was present and the concluding day, on which O. A. Newlin, the evangelist, and Professor Upson, the singer, entertained and instructed two audiences that packed the U. B. church, where all the Chautauqua sessions were held. THE NEWS was so unfortunate as to be able to attend on the closing day only. In the afternoon, Rev. Newlin's subject may rightly be called "The Path to Timnath," in which he depicted the courtship of Samson and the Philistine girl of Timnath. The address was directed at the young men, although much was said that all could profit by. The speaker showed that Samson possessed many traits that could be followed today in the selection of a help meet. The boys, however, did not come in for the whole of the address: Rev. Newlin emphasized the wrong of setting up a double standard of morals for the two sexes; and he placed the blame where it rightly belongs, with the women themselves, who do not demand as much from their brothers as the latter demand from them.

The music added much to the interest of the occasion. Professor Upson, of Winona, had charge. A chorus choir from among the audience, sang under his leadership. An octette of male voices from Defiance also sang; and, judging by the applause that followed their efforts, the audience would have listened to them all afternoon with pleasure. But no one will deny that the leading feature of the musical program was the sing of Professor Upson. Mrs. L. W. Yeiser was pianist for the entire Chautauqua.

KITTY OF COLERAINE

As beautiful Kitty one morning was tripping
With a pitcher of milk from the fair of Coleraine,
When she saw me, she stumbled, the pitcher it tumbled,
And the sweet buttermilk watered the plain.

"Oh! what shall I do now?—'twas looking at you now!
Sure, sure, such a pitcher I'll ne'er meet again!
'Twas the pride of my dairy. Oh! Barney McCleary,
You're sent as a plague to the girls of Coleraine."

I sat down beside her, and gently did chide her
That such a misfortune should give her such pain.
A kiss then I gave her; and ere I did leave her,
She vowed for such pleasure she'd break it again.

'Twas hay making season—I tan't tell the reason—
Misfortunes will never come single, 'tis plain:
For very soon after poor Kitty's disaster
The divil a pitcher was whole in Coleraine.

BRAINSTORM

OUT OF the depths of the most abject humility and kowtowing before the public, Editor Schaufelberger, of Hicksville, laments his own weakness (some men are prone to become morally and spiritually wobbly when there are a few bits in sight) and whimpers condonance of his own slight deviation from the straight and narrow path between the sanctuary and the sanctum: "The News comes to its readers this issue with an apology. In a recent issue we primised our readers that cigarette advertising would no longer be acceptd. At that time we thought all our cigarette advertising contracts had expired. Imagine our surprise Wednesday when we received an order to continue the cigarette advertising for the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. We immediately got out our advertising contracts and found that Liggitt & Myers contract was for two years, instead of one. Hence The News is under contract for eleven months longer. A contract is a contract and we do not feel that it would be fair to the advertising agency if we refused to fill this one. However, readers of the News can feel assured that no new cigarette contracts will be entered into, and after the expiration of this contract, July 13, 1918, cigarette advertising will be forever barred. We trust that our readers appreciate our position in this matter and will hold nothing against us for this infringement on our former promise."

Consistency is rightly said to be a jewel, and Editor Schaufelberger is not scintillating much these days, his "jewel of consistency" being shy a spark plug. At first, one seems inclined to smile at the predicament into which he has gotten himself; but, on second thought, no one with a modicum of sympathy in his make up can help being saddened at the sight of this editorial spider who has woven a web from which he himself can not escape. 'Tis strange, 'tis passing strange; 'tis pitiful, 'tis wondrous pitiful. Imagine, if you please, a man—a man with a keen perception between right and wrong and animated by the loftiest principles (when nothing is at stake), in a position where he morally is bound to commit a wrong—where he sins if he doesent sin and sins if he does sin. If he doesn't sin by advertising cigarettes, he sins by refusing to fulfill a contract; and if he sins by advertising cigarettes, he sins, of course. Being forced to err, with commendable prudence, he errs on the side of the most small change. Some editors, particularly Sunday school officers, would have foregone the money. Moral precepts on Sunday and cigarette ads on a week day are not compatible—they won't mix. It's too much like saying to the boys: "Be good and you'll be happy; but if you're bound to be ornery, smoke Smudge & Punk's cigarettes"—too much like wishing them the long life that comes from right living and at the same time measuring them for coffins. Of course, Schaufelberger chose to err to his own advantage, and that's nobody's business but his; but why did he—oh! why did he?—accept the naughty contract in the first place? In conclusion, the choir will arise and sing the old song beginning

Schauf wants but pennies here below,
But wants them pennies bad.

Oh, yes! "A contract is a contract;" and a contract is an agreement to do something for a remuneration; and if an editor promises his readers not to publish objectionable advertisements, he obligates himself to do so in consideration of their continued support. A contract to do a wrong—advertise cigarettes, for instance—should not influence a Sunday school officer to go back on his pledged word. But money makes other things go besides the mare, and may even start a Sunday school officer down a questionable pathway.

THE man who spends his money for "skates" on Saturday evening has nothing left with which to buy his children shoes. The wife may toil over the wash tub and enonomize, but her little ones will not be able to attend Sunday school so long as the father exercises his "personal liberty" and makes a sewer out of his throat.

ST. JOE should be ripe for evangelistic work next winter. The Geesquawk whoopephone line has been provocative of crimson language enough to fit the entire town for repentance.

HOOVER TELLS OF FOOD SITUATION

Administrator Issues Message on Conservation.

IS GREAT PROBLEM OF WAR

America's Production and Needs of the Allied Nations Set Forth—What We Must Do to Keep Wolf From the Door.

Washington, Aug. 20.—Herbert C. Hoover, United States food administrator, today issued to the American public his statement covering the food situation as it now exists and the necessity of conserving the food resources of the nation to provide for the future during the continuance of the war. The statement follows:

Food is always more or less of a problem in every phase of its production, handling and consumption. It is a problem with every farmer, every transporter and seller, every householder. It is a problem with every town, state and nation. And now, very conspicuously, it is a problem with three great groups of nations, namely, the allies, the central empires and the neutrals; in a word it is a great international problem.

The food problem today of our own nation, therefore has as its most conspicuous phase an international character. A sufficient and regular supply of food for the maintenance of the great field armies of our fighting allies and of their no less great armies of working men and working women in the war industries, and finally for the maintenance of the women and children in the home, is an absolute necessity, second to no other, for the successful prosecution of the war for liberty. In the providing of this food for the great allied food pool, the United States plays a predominant part.

With the present diversion of tens of millions of men from the farms into the fighting and industrial armies, resulting in a marked lessening of food production, and the present necessity of increasing the daily ration of other millions of men turned from sedentary occupations into those of strenuous physical labor, resulting in a marked increase of consumption, this deficiency between the food needs and the food production of the allies becomes greater than ever, with the consequence of a large increase in the food quantities imperatively needed from the United States if the allied armies are to be able to "carry on."

World's Larder Examined.

This is a general statement of a condition which only needs to be elaborated in detail to show just what we have to do. The time has come when this detailed statement can be made. Our harvest and the harvests of Europe can now be forecast. We can also survey our combined stocks of food animals; in other words, the size of that part of the world's larder on which we and the allies can draw for the next twelve months can now be estimated. This estimate shows at once that it contains too little for our own and our allies use unless we all administer the supply with the greatest care and wisdom. The allied peoples are energetically undertaking this administration. It lies now with us to do our part. If we fail, the people of the allies cannot be maintained at war. Their soldiers cannot fight without food. A certain definitely determinable part of that food must come from us. Let us then examine carefully the world's larder as it appears today, or so much of it as is at our disposal.

I propose to review the situation first, as regards the cereals, second, as regards food animals and their products, third, as regards sugar, fourth, as regards vegetables, fifth, as regards fish and sea foods, and, finally, as regards our duty in the matter.

Cereals.

The 1917 harvest is now so far advanced that we may compare it with previous production, and with the demands which are going to be made on it.

Table No. 1 is given to show the normal peace sources of the annual supplies of France, Italy, the United Kingdom and Belgium, being an average of the three-year pre-war period.

It will be seen from this table that the normal imports of wheat are 881,000,000 bushels and of other cereals 845,000,000 bushels. The estimate of the 1917 harvest in the allied countries based upon crop reports from these countries, is as follows:

Commodity.	Probable 1917 production.	Av. normal production.	Deficiency in prod'n. due to war.
Wheat	393,770,000	590,675,000	196,905,000
Corn	94,464,000	121,109,000	26,645,000
Oats	337,235,000	570,890,000	233,655,000
Barley	93,585,000	125,201,000	31,616,000
Rye	41,732,000	78,573,000	36,841,000
Total	960,786,000	1,486,448,000	525,662,000

In order to provide normal consumption it would therefore be necessary to import in the next 12 months a total of 577,000,000 bushels of wheat and 674,000,000 bushels of other cereals.

The prospective position of our own and the Canadian harvest is given in table No. 2.

Our crops, especially our corn crop, cannot yet be considered as certain, but if all mature safely, North America will have an apparent surplus of wheat of 208,000,000 bushels and of other cereals of about 950,000,000 bushels.

Demand on Our Crops.

The allies are isolated from those markets, other than Canada and the United States, on which they were accustomed to rely before the war. The Russian supply cannot be got out. Bulgarian and Roumanian supplies are in the hands of the central empires. The voyage from Australia and India is three times as long and therefore requires three times as many tons of shipping as is required from North Atlantic ports. It is also twice as dangerous because of the longer exposure to submarine attack. There has been a large failure in the South American countries and the new harvest from that quarter will not be available in Europe until next spring. As already said, all the allied countries are and have been for some time rigorously administering and economizing their food. In Belgium, the relief commission has been compelled to reduce the consumption of cereals by nearly 50 per cent; this brings the food supply so low that the population are incapable of labor.

From the above tables it will be seen that on normal bases of consumption the total allied wheat import requirements are 577,000,000 bushels against a North American surplus of 208,000,000 bushels—and from our United States supplies we must reserve a certain amount for neutrals from which we receive vital supplies and also an amount to protect our stocks better next year than this last. There is therefore on normal consumption a deficit of over 400,000,000 bushels. In the other cereals used in Europe mostly for animal feed, the import necessities of the allies on normal consumption basis are about 674,000,000 against a North American surplus of 950,000,000. But again a reserve for neutrals and increased "carry over" will absorb all the margin. In any event it means we must multiply our exports of these cereals 20 times. However, upon the basis of our present crop prospects we should be able to supply their requirements in cereals other than wheat.

Wheat Situation Difficult.

The situation in wheat is one of great difficulty and concern, and must be met by an elimination of waste and reduction of consumption on the part of the allied peoples and ourselves, in one word, by an effective administration of the available supply.

The allies are unable to use other cereals alone for bread. They can use them only as added to wheat flour to make the war bread now in universal use in European countries. Except in Italy, whose people normally consume much corn, our allies have few corn mills and cornmeal is not a durable commodity and therefore cannot be shipped in great quantities.

Moreover, for generations they have bought bread from the bakeries; they have no equipment nor do they know how to bake in the household. Every American knows that it is infeasible to distribute corn bread from bakeries, and it is therefore necessary for us to furnish our allies with sufficient wheat to enable them to have a wheat basis for the loaf. However, they can use and must use other cereals for mixture in their war bread, and by this substitution and by savings on their part a great deal can be accomplished. On the other hand, a deficit of 400,000,000 bushels can be at least partially overcome if we can increase our exports from 88,000,000 to 220,000,000 or nearly triple. This can be accomplished if we will substitute one pound of other cereals for one pound of wheat flour weekly per person; that is, if we reduce our consumption of wheat flour from five pounds per week to four pounds per week per person. It will be no privation to us and will reduce the privation of our allies.

Food Animals.

Owing to the ascending standard of living, the world was already strained to supply enough animal products to meet the demand before the war began. The war has injected into an already difficult situation a number of vicious conditions which are jeopardizing the ultimate animal products supply of the world. The production of fodder in Europe has been diminished by the diversion of productive labor to war, and its import has been curtailed by shortage in shipping and by the isolation of markets by belligerent lines. From these causes not only are the actual numbers of animals decreasing in Europe, but the average weight and the annual output of dairy products per animal, are decreasing.

A careful estimate of the world's food animal position shows the following position:

	Increase or decrease United States	Decrease western allies	Decrease in other countries including enemies	Total net decrease
Cattle	7,090,000	8,420,000	26,750,000	28,080,000
Sheep	3,000,000	17,500,000	34,000,000	54,500,000
Hogs	6,275,000	7,100,000	31,000,000	32,425,000
		33,030,000	92,250,000	115,005,000

The problem facing the American people is not only one of supplying the immediate demand of the allies, but one which is more far-reaching in its future significance. As the war goes on there will be a constant lessening of the capital stock of food animals of the world. Among our western allies the demand outruns further every day the decreasing production, as shipping becomes further shortened by continued submarine destruction, less tonnage can be devoted to fodder, and further reduction of the herds must ensue. These destructive forces have given rise to reactions in many directions. The world's supply of meat and dairy products, of animal fats and industrial fats, wool and hides, are all involved not only now, but for far into the future.

Meats.

The immediate problem is to furnish increased meat supplies to the allies to maintain them during the war. An important factor contributing to the present situation lies in the disturbance to the world's trade by destruction of shipping resulting in throwing a larger burden on North America, the nearest market. Shipments from the Australasian, South American and from the continental countries into the allied countries have been interfered with. Their contributions must be replaced by increased shipments from North America.

The growth of American meat exports since the war began, most of which have been supplied by allied nations, is revealed by the following figures:

Three-year pre-war average, 493,848,000 pounds.

Year ending June 30, 1916, 1,339,193,000 pounds.

The impact of European demand upon our animal products will be maintained for a long period of years after peace. We can contemplate a high range of prices, for meat and for animal products for many years to come. We must undertake to meet the demand not only during the war, so as to enable our allies to continue to fight, but we must be prepared to meet the demand after the war. Our herd cannot be increased in a single night or in a single year. Our producers will not only be working in their own ultimate interest in laying the foundation of larger herds and flocks, but will serve our national interest and the interest of humanity, for years to come, if the best strains of young animals are preserved. The increase in herds can only be accomplished if we save more of our roughage and raise more fodder grains. It is worth noting that after the war Europe with lessened herds will, pending their recuperation, require less fodder and will therefore produce more bread grains and import less of them, so that we can after the war safely reduce our bread grain production to increase our fodder. But we must lay our foundation in the meantime to increase our herds.

There is only one immediate solution to the short supply of meat for export pending the increase in our herds and flocks which will take years. During the course of the war, we can, just as with the cereals, reduce the consumption and eliminate the waste particularly among those classes which can best afford it. In the meantime, in order to protect all of our people, we must carefully control our meat exports in order that the people shall not be denied this prime necessity of life.

Dairy Products.

The world's dairy supplies are decreasing rapidly for two important reasons. First, the dairy cattle of Europe are diminishing, for Europe is being driven to eat its cattle for meat; second, the diversion of labor to war has decreased the fodder supplies and the shortage of shipping has limited the amount of imported fodder and therefore the cattle which can be supported and the productivity of the individual cow have been reduced. Even our own dairy supplies are not keeping pace with our growth of population, for our per capita milk supply has fallen from 90 to 75 gallons annually in the past 15 years. Yet today we must ship increasing amounts of dairy products to our allies.

The dairy supplies of the allies in normal times came to a considerable degree from western Scandinavia, Holland and Switzerland, but under German pressure these supplies are now partly diverted to Germany. The men under arms and the wounded must be supplied with condensed milk in large quantities. The net result of these conditions, despite rigorous reduction of consumption among the adults of the civil population in Europe, is that our allies are still short of large quantities and again the burden of the replacement of this shortage must fall on North America. The growing exports of dairy products from the United States to the allies are shown in the following table:

	Three year average.	Year ending June 30, 1913.
Butter	4,457,000 lbs.	13,487,000 lbs.
Cheese	8,780,000 lbs.	44,394,000 lbs.
Cond. milk	17,732,000 lbs.	159,577,000 lbs.

The high price of fodder and meat in the United States during the past few months induced by the pressing European demand has set up dangerous currents in this country, especially in those regions dependent upon butter and the sale of milk to municipalities having made it more profitable to sell the cattle for meat than to keep them and produce dairy products. Therefore; the dairy cattle are decreasing in some sections. The only sections in which dairy products have had a rise in price in appropriate proportion to the increase in most of feeds are those producing condensed milk and cheese.

Our home milk and butter supplies are therefore looked at in a broad way, decreasing while our population is increasing. This deficiency of dairy butter is shown by the increased sales of margarine, which show an increase of several million pounds per month over similar periods in 1915. Dairy butter, however, has qualities which render it vitally necessary for children. Milk has no substitute and is not only intrinsically one of our cheapest animal foods, but is absolutely fundamental to the rearing of the children.

The dairy situation resolves itself into several phases. First, it is to be hoped that the forthcoming abundant harvest together with a proper restriction upon exports of feeding stuffs will result in lower prices of feed and diminish the impetus to sell the cattle for meat. Second, the industry needs encouragement so as to increase the dairy herd and thus our dairy supplies, for the sake first of our own people and second of the allies. The people must realize the vital dependence of the well-being of their children, and thus of the nation, upon the encouragement and upbuilding of the industry. Third, we must save the wastes in milk and butter during the war if we are to provide milk supplies to all. We waste large quantities of our milk value from our lack of national demand for products of skimmed and sour milk.

Pork Products.

The hog is the most efficient of machines for the production of animal fat. The hog not only makes more fat from a given amount of feed, but also the products made are specially capable of preservation and most economical for commercial handling.

The swine of Europe are rapidly decreasing and the consumption demand induced by the war is much increased, this particularly because bacon, ham and lard are so adaptable for military supplies. Moreover, our allies are isolated from many markets and a large amount from northern neutrals is being diverted to Germany.

While our hogs have increased in number by 3,000,000 animals, the average weight at slaughter is falling and our production is probably only about maintained. The increasing demand upon us since the war began is shown by the following figures of comparative exports:

Three-year, pre-war period, 1,055,614,000 pounds.

Year ending June 30, 1916, 1,512,376,000 pounds.

Wool and Leather.

Our national supply of both wool and leather are less than our needs, and we are importing them more and more largely, as shown by the following figures:

Importations of wool and manufactures of wool (value) for the three-year pre-war period, 862,457,965; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, $158,078,271.

Importations (value) of hides, leather, and manufactures of leather average of the three-year pre-war period, $133,171,398; for the year ending June 30, 1916, $177,880,902.

At the present time the world's demand for these products has increased far above the peace level owing to the extra consumption in supplying the armies. This demand is now again increased by the mobilization of a large American army. In the face of this, not only is the European herd decreasing, but also American sheep have decreased about 3,000,000 since the war began. After the war is over, the various countries of the world from which we formerly drew our wool are likely to retain it for their own use until their flocks again become normal.

Sugar.

The sugar supply on which our allies in Europe normally draw has been tremendously reduced, so that they must have recourse to other sources. In consequence of the shipping situation the area from which they must draw is also curtailed and, as a result, they are driven into those markets from which our own supply normally arises. Furthermore, their own production has been greatly diminished. Before the war, Europe supplied in a large measure its own needs, through the production of beet sugar, as will appear from the following table showing the average yearly production and consumption for the five years before the war (1909-1913), in some of the chief countries of Europe:

	Prod'n. (short tons)	Consump. (short tons)	Surp. (†) or deficiency (-)
Germany	2,525,890	1,299,555	†1,226,314
Austria	1,651,889	679,204	† 972,685
Russia	1,659,947	1,322,285	† 337,662
United Kingdom	......	2,056,000	-2,056,000
France	752,542	704,830	† 47,712
Italy	211,050	190,000	† 21,050
Belgium	279,918	120,358	† 159,560
Holland	246,146	131,538	† 114,608

As appears from the table, France, Italy, Russia and Belgium were self-supporting, while the United Kingdom drew its entire sugar supply from exterior sources. The supply of the United Kingdom came to the amount of about 70 per cent from countries from which it is now cut off by the war. Ten per cent came from the East Indies and 20 per cent from the United States and the West Indies.

The prospective 1918 crop in France has diminished to 207,000 tons and that of Italy to 75,000 tons, and they are therefore short 590,000 tons. The displacement of United Kingdom supplies amounts to 1,435,000 tons; and therefore, in total, these three allied countries must import about 2,700,000 tons in order to maintain their normal consumption. Of this, 2,000,000 tons must come from new sources.

The disturbance of shipping reduces the tonage available and drives the demand to a large degree upon the nearest markets, the United States and the West Indies. This field has since the war increased its production by 1,000,000 tons per annum. How far this demand will interfere with the American supply of 4,000,000 tons is difficult to forecast, first, because some increased supplies may be obtained by the allies from the East Indies, and, second, because the allies have reduced their consumption to some extent.

In any event, if all the enemies of Germany are to be supplied, there must be economy in consumption everywhere. The normal American consumption is about 90 pounds per person per annum and is just double the French consumption.

Vegetables.

We have this year a most abundant crop of vegetables for our use as a result of a patriotic endeavor almost universal throughout the country. Our potato harvest alone promises an increase from 285,000,000 bushels last year to over 400,000,000 bushels this year. The other vegetables are likewise enormously increased through the planting and extension of millions of gardens. The sweet potato crop promises to be from 10 to 20 per cent above what it was last year, and the commercial crop of sweet corn for canning purposes is estimated to be from 20 to 30 per cent above that of last year. The commercial crop of tomatoes for canning purposes will probably be somewhere between 10 and 20 per cent above what it was last year. There is an increase in the acreage of late onions of about 54 per cent over the area harvested in 1916.

Fish and Sea Foods.

The waters of our coasts and lakes are enormously rich in food fish and shell fish. Our streams, too, contribute a great quantity of fish. Many varieties are now not used for human food, but are thrown away or used for fertilizer. Habit has confined our use of fish to a few varieties, and inadequate methods of commercial handling have limited our use of these largely to only certain days in the week. With better marketing facilities, with better understanding of how to use the most varieties, with proper preservation by smoking and salting and by establishing plants for frozen fish, we can increase greatly our supply and thus relieve largely the pressure due to the inadequate supply of meat. We only have to harvest our own fish supply. It feeds itself. Every fish eaten is that much gained in solving the present problem of living. The products of the land are conserved by eating those of the sea.

Our Duty.

I have endeavored to show in previous articles that the world is short of food; that Europe is confronted with the grim specter of starvation unless from our abundance and our waste we keep the wolf from the door. Not only must we have a proper use of our food supply in order that we may furnish our allies with the sinews with which they may fight our battles, but it is an act of humanity towards fellow men, women and children.

By the diversion of millions of men from production to war, by the occupation of land by armies, by the isolation of markets, by belligerent lines, and by the destruction of shipping by submarines, not only has the home production of our allies fallen by over 500,000,000 bushels of grain, but they are thrown upon us for a much larger proportion of their normal imports formerly obtained from other markets.

They have reduced consumption at every point, but men in the trenches, men in the shops, and the millions of women placed at physical labor require more food than during peace times, and the incidence of their saving and any shortage which they may suffer, falls first upon women and children. If this privation becomes too great, their peoples cannot be maintained constant in the war, and we will be left alone to fight the battle of democracy with Germany.

The problem of food conservation is one of many complexions. We cannot, and we do not wish, with our free institutions and our large resources of food, to imitate Europe in its policed rationing, but we must voluntarily and intelligently assume the responsibility before us as one in which everyone has a direct and inescapable interest. We must increase our export of foods to the allies, and in the circumstances of our shipping situation, these exports must be of the most concentrated foods. These are wheat, flour, beef, pork and dairy products. We have other foods in great abundance which we can use instead of these commodities, and we can prevent wastes in a thousand directions. We must guard the drainage of exports from the United States, that we retain a proper supply for our own country, and we must adopt such measures as will ameliorate, so far as may be, the price conditions of our less fortunate. We might so drain the supplies from the country to Europe as by the high prices that would follow to force our people to shorten their consumption. This operation of "normal economic forces" would starve that element of the community to whom we owe the most protection. We must try to impose the burden equally upon all.

Action Must Be Voluntary.

There is no royal road to food conservation. We can only accomplish this by the voluntary action of our whole people, each element in proportion to its means. It is a matter of equality of burden; a matter of minute saving and substitution at every point in the 20,000,000 kitchens, on the 20,000,000 dinner tables and in the 2,000,000 manufacturing, wholesale and retail establishments of the country. The task is thus in its essence the daily individual service of all the people. Every group can substitute and even the great majority of thrifty people can save a little—and the more luxurious elements of the population can by reduction to simple living save much. The final result of substituting other products and saving one pound of wheat flour, two ounces of fats, seven ounces of sugar and seven ounces of meat weekly, by each person, will, when we have multiplied this by one hundred million, have increased our exports to the amounts absolutely required by our allies. This means no more than that we should eat plenty, but eat wisely and without waste.

Food conservation has other aspects of utmost importance. Wars must be paid for by savings. We must save in the consumption in commodities and the consumption of unproductive labor in order that we may divert our manhood to the army and to the shops. If by the reduction in consumption of labor and the commodities that it produces and the diversion of this saving to that labor and those commodities demanded by the war, we shall be able to fight to eternity. We can mortgage our future savings for a little while, but a piling up of mortgages is but a short step toward bankruptcy. Every atom that we save is available for subscription to Liberty bonds.

The whole of Europe has been engaged ever since the war began in the elimination of waste, the simplification of life, and the increase of its industrial capacity. When the war is over the consuming power of the world will be reduced by the loss of prosperity and man power, and we shall enter a period of competition without parallel in ferocity. After the war, we must maintain our foreign markets if our working people are to be employed. We shall be in no position to compete if we continue to live on the same basis of waste and extravagance on which we have lived hitherto. Simple, temperate living is a moral issue of the first order at any time, and any other basis of conduct during the war becomes a wrong against the interest of the country and the interest of democracy.

The impact of the food shortage of Europe has knocked at every door of the United States during the past three years. The prices of foodstuffs have nearly doubled, and the reverberations of Europe's increasing shortage would have thundered twice as loudly during the coming year even had we not entered the war, and it can now only be mitigated if we can exert a strong control and this in many directions.

We are today in an era of high prices. We must maintain prices at such a level as will stimulate production, for we are faced by a starving world and the value of a commodity to the hungry is greater than its price.

As a result of the world shortage of supplies, our consumers have suffered from speculation and extortion. While wages for some kinds of labor have increased with the rise in food prices, in others, it has been difficult to maintain our high standard of nutrition.

By the elimination of waste in all classes, by the reduction in the consumption of foodstuffs by the more fortunate, we shall increase our supplies not only for export but for home, and by increased supplies we can help in the amelioration of prices.

For Better Distribution.

Beyond this the duty has been laid upon the food administration to co-operate with the patriotic men in trades and commerce, that we may eliminate the evils which have grown into our system of distribution, that the burden may fall equitably upon all by restoration, so far as may be, of the normal course of trade. It is the purpose of the food administration to use its utmost power and the utmost ability that patriotism can assemble to ameliorate this situation to such a degree as may be possible.

The food administration is assembling the best expert advice in the country on home economics, on food utilization, on trade practices and trade wastes, and on the conduct of public eating places, and we shall outline from time to time detailed suggestions, which if honestly carried out by such individuals in the country, we believe will effect the result which we must attain. We are asking every home, every public eating place and many trades, to sign a pledge card to accept these directions, so far as their circumstances permit, and we are organizing various instrumentalities to ameliorate speculation. We are asking the men of the country who are not actually engaged in the handling of food to sign similar pledges that they shall see to it, so far as they are able, that these directions are followed. We are asking all who wish us well and who undertake our service to become actual members of the food administration, just as much volunteers in national service as we ourselves are, so that thus the food administration may not be composed of a small body of men in Washington and a small representation in each state, but may become a body of 50,000,000 people, devoted absolutely to the services of democracy. We hope to see the insignia of membership in every patriotic window in the country.

Autocracy finds its strength in its ability to impose organization by force from the top. The essence of democracy consists in the application of the initiative in its own people. If individualism cannot be so organized as to defend itself, then democracy is a faith which cannot stand. We are seeking to impose no organization from the top. We are asking the American people to organize from the bottom up, and this is the essence of democracy itself.

The call of patriotism, of humanity and of duty rings clear and insistent. We must heed it if we are to defend our ideals, maintain our form of government, and safeguard our future welfare.

SHEEP'S CLOTHING

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

AUTHOR of "THE LONE WOLF," "THE BRASS BOWL," ETC.

COPYRIGHT BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

LYDIA CRAVEN LEARNS SOME AMAZING FACTS ABOUT HER FAMILY HISTORY—AND HER FATHER EXPLAINS THE NATURE OF HIS MYSTERIOUS BUSINESS

SYNOPSIS.—A well-bred young Englishwoman, nervous and suspicious, finds when she boards the steamer Alsatia, bound from Liverpool to New York, that her stateroom mate is Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, a fascinating, wealthy American widow of about sixty years. The girl introduces herself as Lucy Carteret and says she is going to America to meet her father. Lucy's behavior puzzles Mrs. Beggarstaff, who is vastly surprised to find the girl in possession of a magnificent necklace, stolen from a museum some time previously and passes the news on to her friend, Quoin, a private detective on board. Lucy, dressing in the dark in her stateroom, hears a mysterious conversation between two men just outside her window and recognizes one of them as Thaddeus Craven, her father, whom she hasn't seen for five years. She confesses to Mrs. Beggarstaff that she is in reality Lydia Craven, goes on deck, and searching around, discovers her father making love to Mrs. Merrilees, wealthy, beautiful young widow and friend of Mrs. Beggarstaff. They and Lydia are much surprised. Mrs. Merrilees has just promised to marry Craven, but he has always posed as a bachelor and this fact she doesn't relish.

CHAPTER V.

In humor as radiant as that of a child presented with a long-coveted plaything, Craven returned to find his daughter as he had left her, alone. "Lydia! My dear, dear girl!"

She yielded without struggle to his embrace, instantly supple to the spell of that blind and unquestioning devotion which never before that night had wavered from his image. In those arms the old enchantment regained full power, doubts and misgivings were all forgotten. Craven became to her once more the most splendid of men, and the handsomest, dearest of fathers.

And then he was holding her by the shoulders at arm's length looking her fondly up and down, wagging an indulgent head. "The saints preserve us! But you've blossomed out into a woman, Liddy, my dear, to turn the heads of half the world! As tall as your old dad, as sweet as cherry blossoms, as lovely as the break of a day in June! It's like seeing your mother again, the way she was the day we were married—though she was only eighteen then, and now you're more than twenty! God forgive 'em, but the years have magicked me into an old man before my time! The father of a woman like yourself—I can't believe it!"

"You haven't aged a day, daddy dear."

Craven would have none of that. "It's of grandchildren I must be thinking now. Don't hang your pretty head: let me look my fill of my girl! But you might be so good as to tell me how it comes you're here. If you dropped from the skies—"

"Surely you know, daddy," the girl protested. "I ran away—I had to. You know why."

"Devil fly away with me if I do!"

"But I wrote you about it, everything, from the very beginning; and when you didn't answer, I thought there was nothing left for me but to run away."

"I tell you, Liddy, I've not heard a word from you for months!"

His manner carried conviction—credulous thrall that she was to the magic of that dear, carneying tongue! "You didn't get my letters?"

"Never one. If I hadn't been the busiest man alive these last three months, I'd have written to ask what was the matter. Not that I worried—Mrs. Hicks-Lorrimer's letters were regular and reassuring."

An ominous gleam informed the eyes of the girl. "Then she stole them!"

"Who stole what?"

"My letters to you—Mrs. Hicks-Lorrimer must have stolen them!"

"My dear girl, be fair to her!"

"If my letters didn't reach you, someone must have intercepted them. One might have gone astray by itself, yes; but it isn't likely five would."

"Lydia, I don't get this at all."

"You knew that woman wanted me to marry a man I didn't love?"

"She wrote me you were about to become engaged to young—what's-his-name—Keyes; gave a good account of him. I wrote to you at the time."

"That was three months ago. I haven't heard from you since. Her later letters must have told you I had refused him."

"They didn't. She said the thing was hanging fire—young Keyes a bit backward about coming forward. He must have been blind! You don't mean to tell me it's fallen through?"

"I mean to tell you," the girl cried, passionately, "I didn't like him! One of Mrs. Hicks-Lorrimer's tame cats! He may have money and family, as she claimed—I don't know—but he's abominable, and I loathe him! And she wouldn't let me alone. I stood her incessant nagging till I thought I'd go mad. Worst of all, my letters to you got no answers, save indirectly—I mean, she said it was your wish I should marry him."

"I never said that," Craven observed thoughtfully. "I did say that, if it was your wish and for your happiness, I gave my consent gladly. It wouldn't be like me, would it, to wish unhappiness to my own flesh and blood?"

"No—it wasn't like you: that's why I didn't understand. It—it seemed as if you'd turned against me."

"Liddy—dear!"

"Oh, I know I was wrong; but what could I think? You wouldn't write. But I knew if I could see and talk to you, I could make you understand. So I pawned some things—some of your presents—and got enough money for my passage. And now—"

Her voice was breaking. Craven passed an arm round her and drew her close to him. "There, my dear girl, there!"

"And now—I'm in your way!"

"Lydia!" He had lost none of his old-time trick of quieting her with a show of righteous indignation. "You've no right to talk like that to your old daddy!"

"What am I to think? I surprise you making love—you are angry with me—"

"Not angry, dearie, but so surprised I was hardly myself. Do be quiet now for a time, and let me do the talking. Listen, and learn never to judge a man hastily. Has it never struck you how little you really know about our family history?"

"How often have I asked you—"

"Ah, but that was long ago, when you were—ah—too young to understand. I never meant to keep you permanently in the dark. In the first place, you've always believed yourself the child of American parents."

"But surely—" the girl expostulated. "Mrs. Grummle told me—"

"What she believed, too, no doubt. The truth is, your mother was an American; but I'm British to the marrow of me. Craven's a good English name, you know. Not that it matters. I cut away from my people forever when they tried to prevent my marrying the woman I loved, an American girl who'd taken to the stage and somehow drifted to London. Well, we defied the family, and it disowned me, and I went on the stage with my wife. When you were born—yes, in Mrs. Grummle's, Bloomsbury—our combined pay didn't run to anything much. Most of the time one of us was out of a job. Still, we were happy enough till we went to America."

He was silent for several minutes, apparently lost in memories.

Lydia, fearing to interrupt, waited in mute fascination. Something of this history she had guessed; much she might have guessed from words, hints, clues, carelessly sown in the past; but little or nothing had she ever known definitely.

"You weren't a strong child, and we feared the effect on you of the Atlantic voyage. Besides, our engagement was to last eight weeks only. So we left you in Mrs. Grummle's care. Five weeks after we reached New York your mother came down with typhoid. A month later she died; and when I had paid funeral expenses I was penniless in a strange land, our company had gone back home, and my chance of ever seeing England again was to earn enough money for my return passage. I wrote Mrs. Grummle to look out for you, and— But this isn't a hard-luck story. Ultimately I left the stage for employment more attractive and better paid; but it meant permanent residence in America. However, nothing called me back to England, since you were in good hands. I think we may say that for Mrs. Grummle."

"She was always kind," Lydia affirmed gently.

"When I could afford a trip back to England, I found you in the best of condition, and it seemed hardly right to uproot and transplant you to a bachelor establishment in a strange country. Moreover, my new work, you see, had divorced me wholly from my stage associations, and none of my new friends knew anything about me before I came to them, properly introduced, and I was careful not to excite their curiosity for reasons that will appear. So I never mentioned your existence. This reticence grew into a habit as years went on. And when Mrs. Grummle died I had come to think it best for you to attain womanhood in England, and if possible marry some decent Englishman.

"Well—a substitute had to be found for Mrs. Grummle. Mrs. Hicks-Lorrimer presented the strongest credentials. I can only say I'm sorry she turned out badly—and surprised. That, however, is well over and done with. Henceforward you live with me."

"Oh, daddy, daddy dear! You mean it? I'm not in the way?"

"It would have been better if this could have been postponed a few weeks," Craven returned without enthusiasm. "But there is no helping what mischief has been done—"

"But surely, daddy, you can explain to her—" Lydia faltered.

He silenced her with a gesture effective if a shade theatric, and walked with her to a closed hatch, where they seated themselves.

"But I—"

"Hear me first, if you please, Lydia. Although your father, I'm by no means an old man. And—love is paramount! When you come to me and say, 'I love this man,' whosoever he may be, I sha'n't interfere—even as now, when you say, 'I can't love this man,' I refrain from insisting. Mrs. Merrilees and I love each other. She pays me a great compliment; for I'm fifteen years her senior. I can't permit my daughter—"

"But if you will only listen to me!"

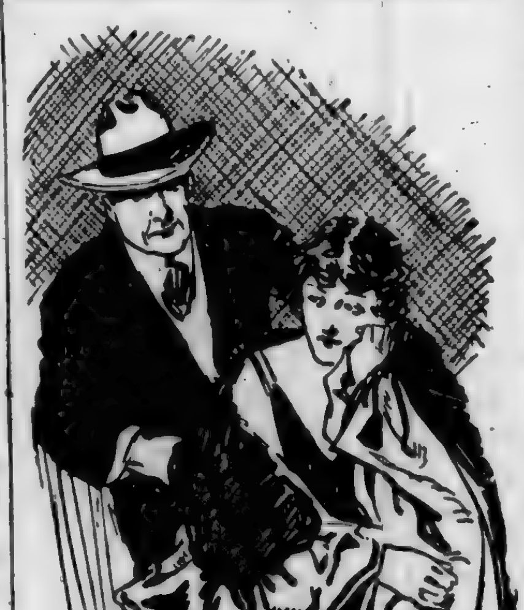
"Well?" Craven demanded severely.

"I haven't the least desire to come between you and Mrs. Merrilees. I think she's very lovely, and I wish you both every happiness."

"That is my own dear girl!" Clipping her face between his palms, he lifted it to receive his kiss.

"I only meant," the girl resumed, "I hoped you could make her understand, as you have me, by explaining—"

"Make your mind easy. There's been no real harm done. I've already received her assurance that our relations will continue as before. She understands—if not as fully as you do now. If I told her all that I've just told you, she might ask questions I couldn't answer; not, at least, until she is my wife, perhaps not then. Surely you must realize that your faith has taken a great deal on trust. You have refrained from putting a question that, with Mrs. Merrilees, would take the form of a demand—What is the nature of this business of mine to which I have referred but never named?"



"This Is a Great Secret, Dear Girl. Guard It as You Would Your Life."

"You will tell me when you think I should know, daddy."

"I'm quite sure you oughtn't to know," he said gravely; "but I'm quite sure you've got to, if our relations are to continue in love and trust. Moreover, I know I can trust you, and, were I to keep you in ignorance, much might happen that you wouldn't understand, that might make you doubt, misjudge, mistrust me. You may on occasion see me in conference with strange men, of a class I'd normally have nothing in common with. You'll have to become accustomed to my keeping strange hours—and help me keep them secret. You may even hear odd whispers about me—rumors that I'm not altogether what I seem. Well, they'll be justified; for I'm not. New York knows me as a feather-brained fashionable, with a decent income from the real estate business I maintain as a blind. I'm ashamed to have no object in existence other than amiable idling. Whereas, in reality—"

Though their solitude was absolute, Craven came closer to his daughter and lowered his voice:

"This is a great secret, dear girl. Guard it as you would your life. I'm in charge of the secret diplomatic service representing Downing Street in the United States!"

Does it seem to you that the nature of Tad Craven's work as a British secret service man justifies his posing as a bachelor for many years and his treatment of Lydia?

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR AUGUST 26.

THE CAPTIVITY OF JUDAH.

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 25:1-21.

GOLDEN TEXT—As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked.—Ezekiel 33:11.

Many years after the kingdom of Israel was taken captive by the Assyrians, Judah was carried away to Babylon. Judah's captivity was in three stages, covering about twenty years. The first deportation was while Jehoiakim was king. Daniel and his friends went into captivity at this time (Dan. 1:1-6). The seventy years captivity dates from this time. The second deportation was while Jehoiakim reigned. Most likely Ezekiel was carried away with this second company (Ezekiel 1:1-2). The third deportation, some twelve years after the second, is the one described in our lesson. At this time the greater part of the nation was removed to Babylon. Only the poor and unimportant were left. Jerusalem itself was destroyed at this time.

I. Jerusalem Besieged (vv. 1-3). Zedekiah owed his kingship to the king of Babylon (chapter 24:17), who appointed him to the throne after the removal of Jehoiakim. His name was changed from Mattaniah to Zedekiah. He was not a good man (24:19). Though having his position by the will of the king of Babylon, he rebelled against that king. He thought that by the aid of the surrounding nations, especially Egypt, he could throw off the yoke of Babylon. Jeremiah counseled submission, but the king refused. Nebuchadnezzar came in person with all his host and laid siege to Jerusalem, even building forts against it (v. 1). This siege lasted for about a year and a half. For a while during that period the Chaldean army withdrew because of the appearance of Pharaoh's army (Jer. 37:5). Shut off from help from without, the Jews soon were famishing for want of bread. The horrors of this famine were awful. For a description of it one should read the book of Lamentations. Mothers ate their own children (Lam. 4:10). The richest, even ladies in silken robes, wandered about searching for scraps in the dung heaps (Lam. 4:5-10). Their tongues clave to the roofs of their mouths, and their skins were dried up. Added to these horrors were murderous fights between parties among the Jews. Some wanted to surrender; others insisted upon holding out.

II. Zedekiah's Flight (vv. 4-7). At length the city was broken up, and the king and his warriors fled by night. His thought was to escape to the country beyond the Jordan. The Chaldean army overtook him, scattered his army, and carried Zedekiah to Riblah, where Nebuchadnezzar had his headquarters. Here judgment was passed upon him. In his trial it was shown that his solemn oath of allegiance to the Chaldeans had been broken, thus showing himself a traitor (II Chron. 36:13). As a punishment for his treachery his own sons were slain before him, his eyes put out (v. 7), and he himself carried to Babylon, where he remained a prisoner till his death (Jer. 52:11). In this we have a marvelous fulfillment of prophecy (Ezekiel 12:3), which says that Zedekiah shall be taken to Babylon and die there and yet not see the city. He could not see it because his eyes were out. Let us learn from this that that which God says will surely come to pass, even though we cannot explain its details.

III. The Destruction of the City (vv. 8-10). Not only were the people taken captive, but the city itself was subjected to the utmost rigors of war. They plundered the house of the Lord, the palace and the houses of the rich, and then consigned them to the flames (v. 9). They even broke down the walls of Jerusalem (v. 10) and massacred many of the people (Lam. 2:3, 4).

IV. Disposition of the Inhabitants and the Contents of the Temple (vv. 11-21). 1. The inhabitants (vv. 11, 12). They were divided into two classes, those who had deserted to the Babylonians during the siege and those who were found inside of the city at the time it was taken. Many doubtless deserted to the Babylonians during this siege, as even Jeremiah was arrested on this charge (Jer. 38:13). The poor of the land were left to be vine dressers and husbandmen. The wealthy and influential were taken away, as they would be of value to the conquering nation; besides they would be a menace if left behind. The poor were left because pauper captives would be a burden.

Besides it was very undesirable for the land to lie in waste, as then they could not exact tribute from it. To that end encouragement was given by the Babylonians as "vineyards and fields" were given to the poor.

2. The contents of the temple (vv. 13-21). From the temple which had been twice plundered before (II Chron. 36:7, 10), such of gold, silver and bronze vessels as still remained were taken, even the great pillars of the molten sea. The captives and the treasure were delivered to Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, where more than threescore of men were killed (vv. 19-21).

MOTHERS' DEMANDS.

There come to us very frequently most pathetic appeals from mothers and other interested parties, telling of the shocking conditions around certain military camps where drink and licentiousness—twin evils—hold daily and nightly revels, and asking "if something cannot be done about it," says Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of legislative work, writing from Washington, D. C. As one mother expressed it, "I would rather a thousand times that my son went to the bottom of the ocean unwarned, but clean and pure, than to have him back home polluted and tainted from drink and sensuality." Much is being done by the authorities, military and legislative, in response to appeals from mothers of the country. "That the saloon and brothel shall be done away with in military centers is a foregone conclusion," says Mrs. Ellis. "The United States government heard and answered the appeal of the W. C. T. U. for the unprotected girls in the Philippines and placed its ban on segregation in those far-away islands years ago and we know and believe that the insistent appeal to the president and members of congress by mothers and friends of the soldier boy will cause the complete overthrow of these direful temptations from their midst."

AUTHORITATIVE TESTIMONY.

Mayor Speer of Denver, speaking to 300 leading citizens of that city at a luncheon, referred to the fact that when the prohibition issue was before the people in 1914 he voted wet, and said that were it to come up again he would vote dry. One result of prohibition has been the lowering of the tax rate. "There had been a deficit at the close of the city's business for a number of years," said the mayor. "I am glad to report that at the close of 1916 we had a cash surplus of $135,000, and in addition thereto paid special improvement taxes on parks, firehouses, courthouses, city hall and bathhouse, to the amount of $112,000. We also remedied acoustic defects and decorated the Auditorium.

"For 1917, city taxes were lowered 13 per cent—or $480,000 less money will be collected as city taxes this year than during the previous year. The success of no city depends upon the sale of liquor, and Denver today is better off than it was when saloons were running."

OUT FOR PROHIBITION.

Quit your ease; forget your sorrow,
Give today and save tomorrow.
Come out, come out, come out for prohibition!
Waste no more of wheat and barley,
Down with compromise and parley,
Come out, come out, come out for prohibition!

Chorus:

We're out for prohibition! Hurrah! Hurrah!
We're out for prohibition! Yes, we're out for prohibition!
Hurrah! Hurrah! We're out for prohibition!

The rally song, of which the above is the first verse, was written by a white-ribboner of Maine. It is sung to the stirring tune of "Dixie!" For many years the W. C. T. U. sang it as a solo; today it has become a swelling national and international chorus.

BRANDED BY THE BREWERS.

The fools, fanatics and political swashbucklers of the prohibition outfit who would persist in carrying out their destructive aims under present circumstances must be branded as enemies of this nation.—The Brewers' Journal.

Who are these fools and fanatics? asks an anti-liquor paper. They are, it answers, the churches, the educators, leading political economists, food experts, farmers, cabinet members, United States senators and congressmen, governors of states, social service organizations, 90 per cent of the worth while newspapers, nearly all the women of the country—in fact, everybody except those who profit financially from the liquor traffic. "Some job," says the prohibition paper, "for the editor of the Brewers' Journal to brand all these."

WHY THE SALOON?

"The saloon exists not because man, by nature, must drink, but because by proper incentives he can be made to drink, and there is money in selling it to him."

FAR BETTER.

It is better for a youth to be tied to his mother's apron-strings than to be loose in a cafe or cabaret.

CONVENTIONS CHOOSE DRY CITY.

It was predicted by the wets that Springfield, the dry capital of Illinois, would lose its popularity as a convention city. The prediction is proving false. Indeed, worth while conventions are steering clear of dripping-wet Peoria and going to dry Springfield in order to escape any reflections upon the character of their membership.

GIVES SECRET OF SUCCESS

George W. Perkins' Method Is to Live Every Day as if It Were to Be the Only One.

"My own method has been to live every day as though it was the only day I had to live, and to crowd everything possible into that day. Pay no attention to the clock or what you are paid, but work and live for all that is in it—just as you play football—and everything else will take care of itself," said George W. Perkins.

"The head of the table is the place where there is most room. It is the tree that grows and grows until it overtops the others that gets the most air and sunshine. The thing for the young man to do is to strive with all the energy he possesses to excel in actual ability.

"Pull is not necessary. Nor should a young man bother too much about his wages. I never asked an increase in my life. You can command sooner or later what you are entitled to—if you pre-eminently deserve it.

"But you have got to be ultra-proficient in some particular thing. You must stand out and do it better than the fellows around you whether you are an office boy, a stenographer or an executive. You must use your head as well as your hands. Don't be afraid to do extra work lest it interfere with your theater going. I don't go to the theater half a dozen times during the winter, not that I don't like it, but there are other things more worth doing."—Leslie's Weekly.

"Pardon me, it was the angel who stood in the way and the ass which spoke."

TWO DIE WHEN TRAIN HITS AUTOMOBILE AT LARWILL

Another fatal grade crossing accident, the third double fatality of its kind in Whitley county this year, occured Friday noon when the car in which Hiram Long, 75, and nephew, Hiram Long, 40, were riding was struck on the Pennsylvania railroad crossing at Larwill. The machine was hit by a fast express train and was hurled forty feet. Both occupants of the car were so badly injured in the accident that they died a few hours later. Their deaths make six in the county in grade crossing accidents this year.

"HUMAN FLY" CAME NEAR FALLING AT KENDALVILLE.

"Billie" Mars, "the human fly," who climbed up the DeKalb county court house Thursday evening, did his stunt at Kendallville Friday evening for the benefit of the Kendallville soldiers. He came near getting a bad fall, as there were some places in the Masonic building which he climbed, where the stones were loose.

Luckily, he had a rope nearby, on which he helped himself over the dangerous spot. He also had the misfortune to cut one of his legs on the tin at the top of the building.

Mars said Friday that the collection taken at Auburn Thursday night was the largest one taken for any one climb he had made in the last three months.

TUBERCULOSIS CLAIMED 3,823 IN INDIANA DURING 1916.

The Indiana state board of health made public Monday an abstract of mortality statistics in Indiana for 1916. In the report it was shown that there was a total of fifty-one deaths from poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) in the state during the year. Tuberculosis claimed 3,823 lives. The typhoid fever death rate was below the average for the last ten years. The death rate from typhoid was 24.7 in each 100,000; in the country 18. The report follows:

"Total deaths from all causes in 1916, 38,249. The average number of deaths for the past seven years was only 36,247. In 1916, therefore, the deaths exceeded the average by 2,002.

"Organic diseases of heart headed the list as causes of death, with 4,253 deaths. Pulmonary tuberculosis was second with 3,259 deaths, Nephritis and Bright's disease was third, with 3,026 deaths. Smallpox caused but one death in 1916."

CUT DOWN USE OF GASOLINE IN DEKALB COUNTY

Indiana Council of Defense Urges That Pleasure Trips in Automobiles be Cut Down One-Half to Conserve Oil Supply for Government.

The Indiana Council of Defense in a letter to the DeKalb County Council of Defense urges that the local board use its influence in cutting down the consumption of gasoline used by motorists as much as possible. The State Council issues the following appeal:

"One-half of the 1,250,000 gallons of gasoline used annually in the United States is used in pleasure riding.

"It is estimated that the United States army alone will need 350,000 gallons of gasoline for aeroplanes, trucks, tractors and other machines.

There is no way of obtaining this in this country except by saving from the excessive amount being used.

It has been estimated that by economical use enough gasoline can be saved to supply not only the United States, but also its allies, for war purposes.

"The state council of defense does not recommend that automobile owners lay up their cars, but desires to emphasize the elimination of thoughtless and injudicial use of cars for either trade or pleasure purposes.

"The following suggestions should be observed by automobile owners:

1. Cut down pleasure riding on Sundays and at other times one-half. If your trip has heretofore covered fifty-miles, make it only twenty-five miles.

"2. Do not allow your gasoline engine to run idle.

"3. See to it that the carburetor does not leak. Form the habit of shutting off gasoline at the tank in order to prevent excessive evaporation and leakage.

"4. Use kerosene instead of gasoline for cleaning purposes in the garage.

"5. See that you have the right mixture of gasoline and air in the carburetor. By judicious regulation of the mixture both greater power and economy of fuel may be obtained."

The Other Man's Wife

A play with the greatest moral ever taught. Coming to Huber Opera House, Hicksville, August 24th.

Should a man live two lives, while a woman must stand or fall by one; and should her conduct be judged by an entirely different code of morality from his? Should some act of indiscretion in her past, that committed by a man, would be simply winked at, forever place a ban on her chance for happiness?

Around these questions has been woven the story of "The Other Man's Wife", the wonderful play by Victor Emanuel Lambert. Its an old idea at a new angle, never before publicly discussed; and has created no end of comment and controversy.

One thing is certain—it is the greatest play of the age, and Mr. Lambert has handled the subject in a very delicate and intensely interesting manner.

The scenery is wonderful, the gowns are beautiful, and the parts are interperted by actors of real merit. It is not a picture show.

This is one of the "really good" attraction to be seen in our immediate vicinity this season, and those desiring good seats should secure early reservations by phone or mail.

COLLEGE TRAINED MEN ARE NEEDED DURING WAR.

Purdue University Advises High School Graduates That They can be of More Service in College Than in Other Lines of Endeavor,

Where can I serve my country best? Should I go to college and complete my education or shall I stay on the farm and help produce food? These and many other questions are now being received from hundreds of young men in Indiana by the School of Agriculture of Purdue university. These young men are told that food is the first essential of a fighting force and that the farmer is the world's food producer.

They know that soldiers in both Europe and America have become consumers and destroyers of food rather than producers. They also know the government is urging the farmers to increase the output of their farms in order that the army may be supplied with food and clothing.

In answer to these questions Dean J. H. Skinner of the Purdue School of Agriculture has issued a statement. In this he says that never in the history of the world has there been such an urgent demand for trained men.

Within the three months since war was declared the attention of the nation has been directed to American colleges of agriculture as never before. The value and good influence of students of these institutions in the development of the agriculture and industries of the country is shown in a way that is astonishing even the most farsighted and practical men.

Those who think that the present situation is temporary and that it will be relieved at the end of the war could make no greater mistake. Whatever the outcome of the war the position of the trained men and the demand for his service will be very important and urgent.

With the great demand for trained men in this crisis it will be most unfortunate if young men who have completed high school or who have done some work in college discontinue their education. The needs of the country for efficient trained men are bound to increase as the war goes on.

If the ranks are depleted and the others are not prepared to take their places the industries and agriculture are bound to suffer seriously. After the war there will be the greatest problems of reconstruction and development work. At that time there will be even a greater demand for leaders. The opportunity for the scientifically trained man is very great and every one who can enter an institution such as Purdue University should plan by all means to do so.

WILL EXTEND GOVERNMENT'S FOOD-PRODUCTION WORK

U. S. Department of Agriculture to Attack on Larger Scale Problem of Maintaining Ample Food Supply during the War.—$11,346,400 to be Spent.

The task of maintaining during the war an ample supply of food will be attacked on a still larger scale by the United States department of agriculture through a score or more of projects, under the provisions of the food production bill just enacted by congress.

While most of the projects will be extensions of present activities, some of them will represent new undertakings. The task will be to find just where the country stands in so far as the adequacy of the present food supply is concerned, to speed up the production of food crops wherever this can be done, and to stop as many as possible of the leaks through which hundreds of millions of dollars worth of edible products annually are wasted.

Eleven million, three hundred and forty-six thousand, four hundred dollars are made available for the work in the food production bill. This money is for emergency use in addition to the funds appropriated in the regular agricultural appropriation bill for the usual activities of the department. The bill also is distinct from the food control bill, a measure having to do chiefly with the regulation of the distribution of food.

One of the most important steps to be taken in the emergency agricultural work will be the extension of the existing force of county agents—the joint field employees of the department and the state who come into most direct contact with farmers. With the addition of the new county agents an agent will be situated in practically every agricultural county in the United States, that will cooperate to advise and assist farmers in every way possible on matters of production, conservation and marketing. The number of women county agents in rural counties will be considerably increased and other women agents will be placed in a number of the larger towns and cities. These women will stimulate the production of garden truck, poultry and other products by women and children, and will advise and instruct in regard to the most efficient methods of food utilization and conservation.

TURNS OUT 500,000 FRUIT JARS EACH DAY

A half million fruit jars are turned out every day by Ball Bros.' big fruit jar factory at Muncie and every nerve is being strained to increase the output to meet the request made by the government that all fruit jar manufacturers devote themselves exclusively to the making of food containers at this time.

The Ball Bros.' Manufacturing company controls the glass fruit jar markets of the world and Frank C. Ball, the president, recently was appointed by President Wilson a member of the national volunteer committee on the preservation of fruit and garden products.

Mr. Ball says that this committee has found that tin containers practically are off the market, which "puts it up" to the glass fruit jar manufacturers to supply the entire demand. The Ball factories everywhere are converting bottle departments into fruit jar departments. In the Muncie factories 1,200 persons are employed keeping the big plant going day and night.

ASKS FOR GREATER ACTIVITY IN SWATTING THE FLY

State Food and Drug Commissioner Says That Much of Our Typhoid Fever Comes Through Food Infected by Flies.

Harry E. Barnard, food and drug commissioner of Indiana, Wednesday issued an appeal for greater activity in the state's "swat the fly" campaign.

"The only good flies are the dead ones, so kill every fly you can find and burn his body," he says. "If an epidemic among flies should exterminate the whole race from blue bottle to house flies, many of our worst diseases would leave us for the fly is a carrier of disease. Much of our typhoid fever is due to food infected through the medium of flies. Many diseases of children are fly borne. This is especially true of the so-called mortality. It is probably true that flies do their part in spreading infantile paralysis."

"The very presence of flies in the kitchen or dining room is evidence of somebody's carelessness. Flies are not longer tolerated where food is manufactured. They have even less reason to exist in the home.

The federal government makes the following suggestion for the destruction of house flies:—

Formaldehyde and sodium salicylate are the two best fly poisons. Both are superior to arsenic. They have their advantages for household use. They are not a poison to children; they are convenient to handle; their dilutions are simple and they attract the flies.

A formaldehyde solution of approximately the correct strength may be made by adding 2 teaspoonfuls of the concentrated formaldehyde solution, rommercial known as formalin, to a pint of water. Similarly dissolving 2 teaspoonfuls of the pure chemical (a powder) to a pint of water.

An ordinary thin-walled drinking glass filled or partially filled with the solution. A saucer, or small plate, in which is placed a piece of white blotting paper cut the size of the dish, is put bottom up over the glass. The whole is then quickly inverted, a match being placed under the edge of the glass and the container is ready for use. As the solution dries out of the saucer, the liquid seal at the edge of the glass is broken and more liquid flows into the lower receptical. Thus the paper is always kept moist."

INTIMIDATION IN DRAFT WILL NOT BE PERMITTED

Persons who intimate or "bully rag" men accepted for service in the army may face federal charges, according to L. Ert Slack, federal district attorney, who was in Franklin, Indiana, Thursday inquiring about the case of Webster Montgomery, a colored boy, who was frightened into a nervous collapse by acquaintances after he had passed the physical examination for military service.

"I don't like this practice at all," said Mr. Slack, "and any further attempts of this kind will be given prompt attention. There is absolutely no excuse for intimidating men who are offering their lives to the country by going into the army. Attempts to alarm young men entering the army will not be tolerated."

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

JUDGE LINK NAMED AS DELEGATE TO TAX CONFERENCE.

Judge D. M. Link Tuesday accepted an appointment as delegate from Indiana to the eleventh annual conference of federal, state and local taxation under the auspices of the National Tax association to be held at Atlanto, Georgia, November 13 to 16. Judge Link was named as a delegate to the conference by Governor J. P. Goodrich. The appointment is purely an honorary one as there is no provision under the law whereby the state can pay the expenses of delegates to the conference.

Judge Link has attended four meetings of the national tax association as a member of the state board of tax commissioners. The conference this year promises to be of special interest as the problem of taxation during war times is even more complicated than under normal conditions.

Judge Link is an authority on taxation and a better delegate could not have been named by Governor Goodrich.

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh at an alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

One to Fourteen Yrs.

Given Lee Chapman Wednesday by the Court--Is Guilty of Thieving - Goes to Michigan City Prison to serve his time.

L. B. Fisher, a butcher residing at Spencerville, has filed an affidavit with W. W. Ketcham, deputy prosecuting attorney of DeKalb county, charging Lee Chapman, of Spencerville, with stealing twelve calf hides from the slaughter house of Fisher & Henderson, located near Spencerville. The hides are valued at over $50.

Chapman was arrested Friday evening and arraigned in court on the above charge, to which he pleaded not guilty, and was released by giving bond, with Henry Markel and Dr. B. S Shook as sureties.

At the time the hides were stolen, Fisher & Henderson had a large number salted and spread out on the floor, and it was a hard matter to detect the loss of one or two of them. Each morning, however, the number seemed to be smaller and the two partners decided that some one must be visiting their slaughter house for the purpose of stealing hides.

The stealing of the hides continued for a week or two; and, although a watch for the thief or thieves was maintained, they were not caught. Finally, a clue led Fisher & Henderson to Fort Wayne, where they found and identified the stolen hides. The parties disposing of them had given fictitious names. The Fort Wayne men who had purchased the hides gave a good description of the person selling them and this led to the filing of an affidavit charging Chapman with the offense. It is believed that a number of young men at Spencerville are implicated in the stealing.—Auburn Courier.

Chapman was arraigned in circuit court Wednesday forenoon. Before the trial had gone far, he changed his plea of not guilty to guilty. Judge Link gave him from one to fourteen years in the pen.

NEWVILLE

Omar Ayers, of Company E, O. N. G., returned to his command Friday morning, after a 36-hour furlough home.

A. C. Koeppe and wire and Dale McNabb went to Fort Wayne on Thursday to visit Mrs. Stella McNabb, who is a patient at the Lutheran hospital. Mrs Archie Cummins and children accompanied them to Harlan to visit relatives for a few days.

The new recruits of Hicksville were given a 24-hour furlough on Tuesday, owing to sore arms caused by vaccination, which made them pretty sick. Marvin Hively and Byron Miller felt the effects of it pretty keenly, but recovered somewhat by Thursday.

Lawrence Gaff met with a painful accident last Friday, when one of his legs was caught in farm machinery and badly torn.

Earl McDonald, of Butler, spent last week at the home of his grandparents, John Miller and wife.

We have'nt a saloon—oh, no!—nor a blind tiger; but we have a wide-open-eyed drinking place. Yes, a couple of them.

Rev. O. P. Givens, of Erie, Ind., who was expected to help conduct the Chautauqua, was not able to be here.

Rev. Edward Hively, wife and son, Orville, John Miller and wife, Mrs. J. H. Benner, Harry Ayers and wife and Mrs. John Gillingham attended the farewell to the soldier boys at Hicksville, Friday. Only the old boys (as they are called) drilled. The new recruits are suffering with sore arms. Dinner was served on the fair grounds. The program consisted of drilling, boxing and horse racing and music by Hart's girls band. All enjoyed doing this kindness for the boys who, no doubt, will soon have to take leave of their parents, sweet hearts, brothers, sisters and friends to camp in a strange country. We hope that every Christian heart will be lifted to God for their safe return to their homes.

Named as Administrator

Bert Wasson has received an appointment as administrator of the estate of the late Nancy Kennedy of Spencer township, after duly complying with the requirements of the law. The National Surety company of New York acts as surety for the sum of $600. Mrs. Kennedy died October 1, 1916, leaving a personal estate of $300 and real estate valued at $1,000

There are an unusually large number of heirs to the estate, seventeen in all as follows: Ann Prickett, sister, Butler, age 61; Jane Hull, sister, St. Joe, age 58; Tillie Sheldon, sister, Jonesburg, Pa., age 55; Elizabeth Chaney, sister, Auburn, age 73; Milton Chaney, brother, Watsonville, California, age 53; Wallace Wasson, nephew, St. Joe, age 41; Gary Wasson, nephew, Spencerville, age 44; Harry Wasson, nephew, Garrett, age 27; Callie Stoffer, nephew, Warner, Kansas, age 41; Mamie Stoffer, nephew, Seattle, Washington, age 37; Sam Wasson, nephew, Spencerville, age 37; Asa Wasson, nephew, Fort Wayne, age 30; Alfred Wasson, Spencerville, age 25; Mabel Killian, niece, Maysville, age 24; Edith Wasson, niece, Fort Wayne, age 18; Milton Wasson, nephew, Fort Wayne, age 13, and Bertha Wasson, niece, Fort Wayne, age 9.

To Subscribers:

We have not been bothering you about that subscription to The News; but, honest, now, if it is past due or nearly due, we need it and hope you will not forget us. Remember, the cost of everything we use has advanced; but the price of the paper remains the same. Hence, it is necessary for us to have the money as soon as it is due.

We are not complaining. We are only pointing out to our subscribers the necessity of prompt payment and urging them not to forget us.

FARM MARKET IDEA TO CUT THE H. C. L.

How H. E. Barnard Would Eliminate Transportation Charges of Food.

FARMERS SHOULD POST SIGNS

Indiana Guard Units Ready for the Southern Training Camp—Clubroom Offered to Troops by the Rotary Club.

Indianapolis.—H. E. Barnard, Indiana representative of Herbert C. Hoover, national food administrator, advocated the establishment of wayside markets at every Indiana farm, in order to evade the high cost of transporting food products from the farming communities to the cities and to eliminate, to a greater extent, the profits of middlemen.

Barnard pointed out that every automobile, owned in the cities and smaller towns, should be pressed into service as a means of bringing the produce that is raised throughout the state to the tables of Indianians.

Apples, potatoes, greenstuff, berries and other fruits, fresh eggs, chickens and smoked meats can be bought from the farmers through these wayside markets at every farmer's home. Barnard also advocates that each farmer place a small sign in a prominent place on the road near his home, directing the attention of passersby to the fact that produce may be bought. The centralized creameries of the state also have taken up the idea and are issuing instructions to the farmers, by means of their weekly bulletins, urging that these markets be established.

Because of personal investigation, in which he found tremendous boosts in prices of foodstuffs, "somewhere between the farmer and the consumer," Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist, some days ago suggested that markets of this sort be established throughout the state and that co-operative buying of such products be practiced by housewives to cut down the high cost of living.

Pledge Support to Wilson.

"Fire Prevention" was the subject of an address by Gov. James P. Goodrich before the convention of the Indiana Firemen's association at the chamber of commerce. The governor commended the fire prevention work which is already under way and said it should be extended. He praised the Indiana firemen and emphasized the importance of their work.

Resolutions were adopted pledging the support of the organization to President Woodrow Wilson in his war measures, recommending the retention of experienced firemen in all cities and towns without disturbance by changing administrations, advocating a firemen's pension law and recommending standard hose couplings.

The association decided to meet in Terre Haute next year. Officers were elected as follows: President, Carl E. Evinger, Terre Haute; vice president, Thomas Golden, Hammond; treasurer, Harry Fulmer, Indianapolis, and secretary, Frank H. Miller, Terre Haute. The directors are: Ira R. Garrison, Evansville;; Conrad Borger, Indianapolis; William Nill, Hammond; Robert Gaskill, Fort Wayne; George Rosenberger, Alexandria, and Charles Huston, Greenfield.

Clubroom for Soldiers.

Plans for the immediate establishment of a downtown club for the private soldiers at Fort Benjamin Harrison, to be known as the "Rotary Soldiers' Club" were completed by the members of the Indianapolis Rotary club at their weekly meeting.

The clubrooms will be fitted out by the members of the Rotary club and turned over to the soldiers at the fort to afford the enlisted men and all private soldiers a place of entertainment and recreation in Indianapolis. The plan, which was begun several weeks ago, embraces one of the biggest things which has been done for the troops at Fort Harrison since the camp became a mobilization center.

The establishment of the club has been approved by Gen. Edwin F. Glenn and other regular army officers. James E. Rogers, secretary of the war recreation social service bureau, in a short talk at the meeting, in which he congratulated the members for the splendid spirit of patriotic service, declared it to be "the most original and effective movement" which has been started by any organization in the country.

"The idea," he said, "is one which will be patterned after by all of the cities in the country. It is the biggest thing which has been attempted, and there is no other organization besides the Rotary club which could so splendidly accomplish this result."

Guardsmen Promoted.

Promotions made in the Indiana National Guard are: First Lieutenant Lawrence Rarick, assigned to Company L, Fourth infantry; Private Louis B. Hieler, Company L, Fourth infantry, appointed first lieutenant; Second Lieutenant Otto Lindgren, Company F, First Indiana infantry, appointed lieutenant and assigned to Third battalion Fourth infantry; Sergt. William Tagle, Company F, First Indiana infantry, appointed lieutenant and assigned to Company B, First infantry.

To Push Highway Improvement.

In response to an appeal by Gen. F. Glenn for better roads between Indianapolis and Fort Benjamin Harrison, the Marion county council of defense, at a meeting at the chamber of commerce, decided to exert its influence to encourage a more rapid improvement of the highways. John M. Judah, president of the council, was authorized to consult with the standing committee from the chamber of commerce, the board of trade and the Merchants' association, which recently made an investigation of the road situation, and to appoint a road committee from the council if that is deemed desirable.

Calls for War Energy.

General Glenn said he realized that projects for repairs of existing roads and the building of new roads are under way and that the county and city authorities were making efforts to better conditions, but he felt they had not yet taken up the task with the energy that war conditions called for. Leisurely procedure in this direction might be excusable in peace times, he said, but now that the nation is engaged in war the local authorities should be swept aside and the road work be pushed to completion without a moment's delay.

Coal Committee Reports Failure.

The special coal committee of the Indiana state council of defense has made its final report to the council, declaring it had failed in its efforts to bring about an agreement with the coal operators of Indiana for lower coal prices. The report, which was accepted by the council, follows:

"The special coal committee reports that effort, continued since June 20, to arrive at an understanding with Indiana operators for reduced prices of coal has failed; that in the committee's opinion, there is no prospect of success in further effort; and that the consumers of the state should be advised of these facts to the end that they be under no misapprehension in delaying longer to supply themselves while transportation facilities are better than they are likely to be later. William G. Irwin, chairman; Evans Woollen, E. M. Wilson, Charles Fox."

Suit Attacks Suffrage Law.

Suit to test the constitutionality of the law granting limited suffrage to women and that providing for the registration of women for the coming city elections throughout the state was filed in superior court before Judge John J. Rochford.

The complaint, which alleges that both laws are unconstitutional in that they conflict with Article 2, Section 2 of the state constitution, which fixes the qualifications of voters, was filed by William W. Knight, president of the Long-Knight Lumber company. It is not a friendly suit and was begun by Mr. Knight and others because of their belief as to the unconstitutionality of the two laws, according to announcement made by Charles E. Cox, one of the attorneys representing Mr. Knight. George H. Batchelor also appears for Mr. Knight. The complaint sets out that relief is asked for Mr. Knight and other taxpayers who will be damaged if the registration of women continues and they are permitted to vote.

Ready for Southern Camp.

Ten units of the Indiana National Guard on the recommendation of Harry B. Smith, adjutant general, and Col. E. A. Root, chief mustering officer, have been certified to the United States army authorities, as outfits which can be sent immediately to Camp Shelby at Hattiesburg, Miss., to assist in preparing it for the remainder of the troops to train there.

It is not definitely known when the war department will order these units to leave for the South, but it may be as soon as the units designated are formally mustered into the federal service.

Outfits in the List.

The units which have been certified to the central department by the state are:

Company F, First infantry, Gary, Lieut. Thomas P. Riley, commanding; Company B, Second infantry, Terre Haute, Capt. Gerhardt A. Monninger, commanding; Company F, Third infantry, South Bend, Capt. Clinton Rogers, commanding; Company B, Fourth infantry, Rushville, Capt. John H. Kiplinger, commanding; Battery E, field artillery, Indianapolis, Capt. Frank L. Kelley, commanding; Troop A, First cavalry squadron, Evansville, Capt. Orion Norcross, commanding; Battalion Headquarters company, First battalion engineers, Indianapolis, Maj. Willard F. Boyle, commanding; Company A, engineers battalion, Terre Haute, Capt. Richard P. Henry, commanding; Company C, engineers battalion, Indianapolis, Capt. Francis H. Miller, commanding; Field Hospital company No. 2, Frankfort, Maj. John W. Emhardt, commanding.

The war department will not ask for any hospital companies, but the field hospital company has been certified in addition to the other units and probably will be included in those which are to be sent in advance to the Southern mobilization camp.

Bares German Scheme.

The state council of defense charged that certain pro-kaiser influences are being exerted in Indiana to misrepresent the purpose of the United States Boys' Working Reserve. Reports have been circulated by Germans not in sympathy with this country that the boys' working reserve is not to supply help on the farm, but is a scheme to get the boys enlisted in the army.

"This is one of the most specious bits of treason that the Indiana authorities have uncovered up to the time," said George Ade.

GAME FISHING

by DIXIE CARROLL

Author of LAKE and STREAM GAME FISHING

WORMS AS BAIT.

My Dear Buck:

The original bait that has tickled the palate of all kinds of fish since the first open season in the Garden of Eden and caused more of him to grace the frying pan than any other lure, of the thousands in use, is the common old worm. Called by some, the angleworm, by others, the fishworm, and knighted as the greatest bait ever, by the happy, bare-legged, knee-pants angler of the Order of the Long Cane Pole.

As a still-fishing bait for all kinds of fish the worm stands at the head of the class and he can wiggle into the affections of the finny tribe when many other baits don't even get a glance. Whether it is the fascinating wiggle of the head and tail of the worm, which should be hooked through the body a couple of times with the ends free, or the delicious flavor of this choice bit of fish food that makes it so popular, is a question that can only be settled by the fish, but it is a sure enough fact that they take to worms like a duck to water.

Four of a Kind.

One big point in favor of the worm is that it can be found in good numbers almost anywhere. A few turns of earth with a spade gives you enough bait for an afternoon's fishing. Four species of worms are probably the most useful in fishing, the black-headed worm without the band or knot-like ring which is rather dark in color and the toughest and best hooker of the lot, found in garden soil. The ringed worm with a ring around the body a little above the middle, and a flatter looking worm which is found under old manure heaps and such places. This worm is softer and does not make as good bait as the black-headed worm. The marsh worm, which has a whitish ring, and is a pale blue in color and is found under stones and among decayed leaves and under rotted logs.

When worms are taken from the ground they are full of earth and until they are cleaned, do not make the best bait. A fish likes the pink color of the cleaned worm, and it is a simple matter to doctor them into first-class fish food. As soon as they are dug up out of their home grounds they should be washed well with water. Put them in a panful of water and stir them around with the finger, but don't crush them or shake roughly, then place them in an earthen crock or jar and put in plenty of moss. And here is the big point to remember in the "care of the worm," wring the moss thoroughly so that all water is eliminated. The moss must be kept dry in order to extract the moisture from the body of the worms, and thus toughen them for the hook.

The ringed worm can be cleaned in two or three days while the other three take at least a week to put them in clean pink shape. Every other day the worms should be examined and the sick looking brothers taken out, as well as the moss changed. Slip them a little food at the same time, slice of bread broken into small pieces, and a spoonful of milk or cream poured on the moss is plenty, and will keep 'em while getting ready for the hook. Sounds like a joke to wash and feed your pet worms, but if you never offered a clean worm to the fish, just give it a try-out and take it from me, old-timer, you are certainly due for a surprise at the results. While the conditioning game is going on, keep the worm crock in a cool place.

Small Ones Great Bait.

When digging worms don't overlook the small ones. It is a mistaken idea that only the big worms get the big fish, often the largest worm will fall a victim of the smallest fish. A small, clean, pink worm with a lively kick is more enticing to the big fellows than the big night crawler that you hunt with a lantern. When hooking the worm do not run the hook clear through the body, but simply hook it through the skin. About one-third way down the body, run the hook through the skin, then skip about a third of the body and run the hook through again, leaving about a quarter of the entire length of the worm wriggling loose at the barb of the hook. This keeps them lively and kicking and that attracts the big fellows, while a dead worm may get the smaller fish it don't appeal much to the kind you are generally after. When hooking a new worm always take off the small pieces of his predecessor.

When you have tried out everything else and the fish seem to be off the feed, slip a nice worm on the hook, and if that don't make them hungry you can feel certain that you have done your part in your effort to coax the big fins out of the water.

DIXIE.

STORE THE POTATO

ARRANGEMENTS FOR CONSERVING THE COUNTRY'S SUPPLY

Government Officials Tell of the Facilities That Have Been Provided—Complete Plan of Action Has Been Mapped Out.

Washington.—Means of conserving the national potato supply in the most effective manner have been devised by the food administration officials. They have issued the following statement:

Unusual facilities for financing storage are offered American potato growers as a result of war conditions. The federal reserve system is at their disposal, and farmers who store their 1917 potato crop in approved local warehouses may obtain, upon their storage receipts, 90-day loans from member banks of the reserve system at a rate not to exceed 6 per cent. Mr. Lou D. Sweet, potato expert with the food administration, was instrumental in bringing this matter to the reserve board's attention.

New England growers have started a movement to take advantage of this ruling to help them solve their marketing problem. The prospect which the growers of this group of states face is that of handling 45,000,000 bushels of potatoes—one-tenth of the entire United States crop—without causing an overstocked market and the resulting loss of all profit on the crop.

The growers communicated with local authorities in their respective states, who in turn laid the situation before the food administration. A conference between the growers, local authorities and experts from the food administration was held recently at Boston, Mass. A plan of action was mapped out at this meeting which includes the following:

1. Marketing of only one-third of the crop at harvest time; another third in 90 days, or placing in storage and later distributed as demand affords opportunity; the remaining third to be stored by the grower and marketed throughout the year.

2. All potatoes to be graded with care, taking out culls, cuts, cracks and any that are bruised. It was recommended that a wire screen grader be used—one and seven-eighths-inch mesh for oblong tubers and two-inch mesh for round ones. Graded stock then to be placed in good two-bushel sacks—one hundred and fifteen pounds to the sack—and the sacks sewed tightly so as to prevent shucking and bruising.

3. Increasing the load in each railroad car from the normal 30,000 pounds. That these cars can be unloaded within 24 to 36 hours of their arrival at destination.

4. That municipalities and other bodies provide storage for as large quantities as possible at the peak of the harvest.

"A storage house," said Lou D. Sweet, who attended this meeting "such as will conform to the requirements laid down by the Federal Reserve board, does not call for a specially constructed house. There are innumerable buildings, which, if properly cleaned, ventilation provided, and managed so as to maintain a temperature of about 35 degrees, will answer admirably for this purpose.

"This year the United States planted its potato crop from the poorest quality of seed that ever went into the ground, and naturally the harvest will be potatoes of poor quality. Strict grading, careful packing, common-sense storage, and careful shipping are necessary to insure just returns to the growers who have responded to the president's call for increased production of potatoes."

SHE HAD WAYWARD DAUGHTER

Neighbor Was Surprised When She Found Cause of Severe Rebuke Administered by Mother.

A lady living in a large apartment house relates the following:

"I had occasion one day to visit the apartment of a neighbor. Such grave and earnest tones of remonstrance reached my ears, as I approached my friend's room, that I hesitated about intruding. I found her winsome young daughter with her, and the mother had evidently been rebuking her, for the girl's face was flushed, and there were tears in her eyes.

"Come in," said my friend. "I have finished what I was saying to Jenny and I hope she will remember my wishes."

"Ah, these children—these children!" thought I to myself.

"I have just been telling her," continued my friend, "that she must not wear her evening gloves when she goes shopping in the morning. In the first place, it is not genteel; and in the second place, it is extravagant."

Her evening gloves! And yet, I assure you, her tone and expression, and the impression made on the child would have befitted a serious wrongdoing—one that had issues in time and eternity.

Buy Outright, Is War Plan.

Washington.—Secretary of Commerce Redfield announced that the conference representing all interested departments of the government has completed its study of war contracts.

Where conditions of manufacture are particularly involved the conference recommends a contract in which a specified sum is awarded as the profit on each article, instead of making the profit a percentage of the cost. This recommendation will do away with the tendency to increase costs to increase profits.

IN BED FOR WEEKS

Mr. Smith Was in a Bad Way, But Doan's Restored Him to the Best of Health.

Mr. Smith.

In April, 1916, Louis Smith, 90 New St., [illegible], N. J., said: "Words fail to describe the misery I endured from kidney complaint. In my work I have to do a lot of heavy lifting and this weakened my kidneys. At first I only suffered from a slight backache, but almost before I knew it, I was all bent over like a man a hundred years old.

"I began to grow worse as the days passed and finally I had to take to my bed where I remained for weeks. My head pained terribly and my back just throbbed. I was always dizzy and it seemed as if everything was whirling. Little black specks came before my eyes and I also suffered from painful and scanty passages of the kidney secretions. Everything seemed dark and dreary.

"Doan's Kidney Pills completely cured me and I am enjoying the best of health now."

"Sworn to before me,
E. M. Johnson, Justice Peace.

On March [illegible], 1917, Mr. Smith added: "I will never forget what Doan's have done for me. Whenever I catch cold on my kidneys, I can depend on Doan's to fix me up all right."

UNCLE JOE'S TRUE VERSION

Veteran Congressman Retells Green Corn Story Which He Declares Is Thirty Years Old.

"Uncle Joe," said a new member of the house to Representative Cannon of Illinois. "I heard a good story about you and green corn."

"Great guns, man, that story is thirty years old," said Mr. Cannon.

"Well, I am a new congressman and I fell for it."

"If you are going to tell it again," went on Mr. Cannon, "let me tell it to you right. I have seen more versions of it than there are silk threads in a corn tassel. It's true, all right.

"It happened at the old Willard hotel when it used to be run on the American plan, with three meals a day. I am a light eater, but I am powerfully fond of green corn. One day I had a neighbor on from Danville, who took dinner with me. I had three orders of green corn.

"'Joe,' says he to me, 'how much board do you pay at this tavern?' I told him. He looked at the stack of corncobs, ruminated a moment, and then remarked: 'Don't you think it would be cheaper for you to board at a livery stable?'"

Important News Events of the World Summarized

U.S.—Teutonic War News

The appointment of Col. Carl Reichman, U. S. A., to be brigadier general, was held up by the senate military affairs committee at Washington pending investigation of charges that he has expressed sympathies with Germany.

* * *

Two army divisions instead of one, comprising a total of at least 38,000 men, probably will make up the first contingent of the National Guard to go to France.

* * *

The allied governments will discuss jointly the peace proposals of Pope Benedict and a reply will be issued in due course, Lord Robert Cecil told the press at London. Whether the reply will be a joint note or, as suggested in some quarters, through the medium of the United States or by some other member, will be decided later.

* * *

The greatest review of American regular soldiers in years was witnessed at American headquarters in France when General Sibert viewed the contingent in a rainstorm. The general declared the soldiers' bearing was splendid.

* * *

The committee on public information at Washington on behalf of the war department issued an official denial that American troops have been engaged in action on the French front and that 200 have been taken to the base hospitals, wounded. The report was published in the London Daily News.

* * *

Nominations of more than 200 new major generals and brigadier generals, who will hold commands in the new army, were sent to the senate at Washington by President Wilson. They include all the National Guard officers. Col. W. J. Nicholson, in command at Fort Sheridan, Ill., is one of those appointed brigadier general.

* * *

Domestic

Orders for wholesale prosecution of I. W. W.'s in seven states comprise the answer of the United States government to I. W. W. agitators who have threatened a general strike in the far West on August 20.

* * *

Fire destroyed the dome building on the Illinois state fair grounds at Springfield, Ill., entailing a loss estimated at $400,000. The building was the historic woman's building of the Columbian exposition in Chicago and was moved to Springfield in 1894.

* * *

Governor Lowden issued an order to Attorney General Brundage at Springfield, Ill., to prepare the necessary legal papers for seizure of Illinois coal mines by the state.

* * *

Because a woman had sent a telegram to her husband, notifying him that she was coming to Chillicothe, O., to claim him as her husband, Mrs. James Nelson shot and killed her husband and then killed herself.

* * *

Industrial conscription for aliens who refuse to waive exemption and join the national army was advocated by John R. O'Rielly, chairman of local board 63, which has headquarters in the Carl Schurz high school in Chicago.

* * *

Middle and northwestern states are to take immediate and drastic steps to fill their coal bins and at prices shorn of exorbitant "war profits." Thirteen states, their representatives meeting in Chicago at the invitation of the Illinois state council of defense, unanimously urged immediate general action upon the president. But in the meantime all states propose to go ahead, make inquires, fix prices and otherwise control the situation.

* * *

"There are men walking the streets of this city who ought to be taken out at sunrise and shot," Elihu Root said at the reception given for the American mission to Russia by the Union League club at New York. "They are doing work for Germany under false pretenses and are lying about it. If we are competent for our liberty we will find that out and get them. Every one of us can help by telling the authorities all we know and hear."

* * *

Max H. Houser, one of the largest individual grain dealers in the world, announced at Portland, Ore., he would give all his profits in the future to the Red Cross. It is reported that he made $3,000,000 last year.

* * *

Two persons were killed and four others were seriously injured in a rear-end collision between two cars on the Chicago, Milwaukee and North Shore electric line at the Great Lakes Naval Training station. One man and a boy and one woman were killed.

* * *

Fred T. Wilson, "the hermit of Danberry," aged sixty-seven years, was sentenced in United States court at La Crosse, Wis., to one year and one day in the Fort Leavenworth prison for uttering theats against President Wilson.

Declaring that the "supreme test" for America has come, Governor Lowden of Springfield, Ill., in a proclamation to the people of Illinois, deplored war profiteering by those who are "growing drunk on profits," and said that the country must be put first or the nation would fail in the present struggle.

Washington

Since the war risk insurance bureau at Washington was authorized on June 26 to insure merchant crews, it has written, 5,446 policies, totaling $9,225,869. Premiums paid in have amounted to $97,246.

* * *

Issuance of $7,738,945,000 worth of 4 per cent federal bonds, subject only to income supertaxes, war profits and excess profits taxes, and designed to provide $4,000,000,000 for further allied loans and to retire the $3,000,000,000 nontaxable 3½ per cent issue, now authorized to cover loans to the allies, is contemplated in suggestions submitted by Secretary McAdoo to the house ways and means committee at Washington.

* * *

The automobile section of the war tax bill was adopted by the senate at Washington. It provides a graduated federal tax on automobile and motorcycle owners instead of the house levy of 5 per cent on manufacturers' sales. Between $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 in revenue would be secured by the senate's tax, against $68,000,000 under the house bill.

* * *

Whisky making in the United States dies at eleven o'clock Saturday evening, September 8. The food administration at Washington ruled that after that hour no foods, food materials or feeds shall be used in the production of distilled liquors for beverage purposes.

* * *

Authority for putting into effect Herbert C. Hoover's food control program, as applied to grain, was given in a proclamation issued at Washington by President Wilson. Predicated on the food and fuel act, the proclamation gives the food administration power to license the storage and distribution of wheat and rye and the manufacture, storage and distribution of all products derived therefrom.

* * *

Immediate authorization of new bond issues to provide for loans of three to four billion dollars to the allies, was decided upon by Senator Simmons, Representative Kitchin and Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo in conference at Washington.

* * *

Decisive steps to curb high coal prices are expected from President Wilson and the federal trade commission at Washington. Under government assurance that unlimited profits are not to be tolerated, working conditions in all industries are improving, the labor department reported.

HUGE APPLE CROP

This Year's Harvest Will Be Picked by Volunteer Laborers.

Government Food Administration Is Aided by Local Bodies in All Parts of the Country.

The great apple crop of 1917 will be harvested in most sections by volunteer pickers, because of the peculiar labor situation this year. Throughout the nation state councils of defense, commercial organizations, women's clubs and other public-spirited persons are organizing harvesting crews for the big job. These crews are for the most part composed of young men and women intelligent and interested, but quite unfamiliar with fruit picking.

Each grower should now get in touch with the chamber of commerce, or some other representative business organization in his nearest town, tell how many pickers he will need, when he will need them, for how long, and what arrangements he can make for housing or boarding them.

When his crew of volunteer pickers reports for duty he must open a little school for a day or two, and give them practical instruction in their new work. Many of them perhaps have never climbed into an apple tree, and even those who have may not understand that apple picking is a kind of work that requires as much delicacy as gathering eggs.

Let the grower tell his pickers how the skin of an apple, or any other kind of fruit or vegetable, is like the tin that protects canned goods. As the tin that incloses a can of tomatoes guards the sterilized contents from the air, and as even a slight pinhole in this tin would allow the air to enter and carry germs of decay, so the skin of an apple protects its flesh, which is perfectly sterile, and the least cut, even a dent made by a finger nail, allows germs to enter and start decay. A cut so tiny that it can only be detected under the microscope at picking time will, nevertheless, start a germ invasion which will show up later when the apple is packed and put into storage.

For this reason great care must be taken in picking fruit. The grower should show their pickers how to grasp an apple and give it the skillful twist that separates it from the tree. He must caution them against dropping the apples carelessly in the boxes and baskets, and see that they have picking baskets and field boxes which are free from splinters and nails.

This year's crop will have to be managed along somewhat different lines in many sections. With a crew of trained pickers and packers it is customary to grade and pack much of the fruit as fast as it comes from the trees. There will probably be a shortage of packers, and many growers will have to devote all their efforts to picking the crop and getting it into temporary storage first, and then packing it later.

More good apples are spoiled every year by carelessness between the time they are picked and the time they are packed than in any other way. Fall nights are cool, but fall days are apt to be warm. Apples are left in the orchard several days and alternately cool and heat with the changes in temperature until their quality deteriorates. The proper way to care for apples is to put them into common storage as soon as they come from the tree. Almost any good tight building will answer for the temporary storage needed between picking and packing.

When fruit leaves the tree it contains vegetable heat just as an animal has animal heat, and as the carcass of an animal will spoil after killing unless it is properly cooled, so fruit will spoil unless cooled. With a tight shed, into which fruit can be carried direct from the orchard, the grower can use the cool nights of autumn to take the heat out of his fruit. Doors and windows of the temporary storage shed should be opened at night to admit plentiful currents of cool air, and when the sun comes up and the outside air grows warm again this storage place should be closed to exclude the warm outer air as much as possible, and keep the fruit nicely cooled. If apples are handled in this simple and sensible way they will have prime keeping quality and the work of grading and packing can be postponed for several weeks.

There is a fairly large apple crop throughout the country this year. It amounts to about two bushels for every man, woman and child in the United States. From the consumers' standpoint it is important to have as much of this fruit as possible go to market in first class condition, so that it may help us conserve wheat, meat, fats and other staple foods for our allies. From the producers' standpoint it is just as important to harvest the crop in the best condition because the size of our apple crop this year is such that only the best fruit will bring good prices.

Road to Strength.

A kindly old gentleman was telling some lads the story of Samson. "He was strong," said the speaker in summing up, "became weak, and again regained his strength, which enabled him to destroy his enemies. Now, boys, if I had an enemy, what would you advise me to do?"

A little boy considered the secret of that great ancient's strength and his hand went up.

"Get a bottle of hair restorer," he exclaimed.

Hero of Ticonderoga

With one impulse the colonies sprung to arms; with one spirit they pledged themselves to each other "to be ready" for the extreme "event"; with one accord and heart the continent cried, "Liberty or Death."—George Bancroft.

The bloody encounter at Lexington in 1775 fired the blood of the patriots and filled them with burning desire to do some heroic deed in defense of the colonies. Word reached Col. Ethan Allen to raise the Green Mountain boys and if possible surprise and take the fortress of Ticonderoga. Eager for such exploit he rallied 230 of the valiant mountain boys and on the ninth day of May, 1775, succeeded in getting a few boats and transported 83 men across the lake, and sent the boats back for the rest of the men. But day now began to dawn and Colonel Allen realized that if the attempt against the fort were to succeed he and his daring expedition must act at once.

Nothing daunted by the fact that their force was so few, and making up in patriotic devotion what they lacked in numbers, Colonel Allen called for volunteers for the perilous venture. "I do not urge any to enter on this enterprise contrary to his will, inasmuch as it is a desperate attempt, which none but the bravest of men dare undertake," cried Colonel Allen. "You that will undertake voluntarily, poise your firelock." Every man poised his firelock.

He immediately formed them into line and at their head advanced on the gate of the fortress. The sentry snapped his fuse at the colonel and then retreated to the parade within the garrison. Allen and his men quickly followed and formed in the parade. The garrison was asleep—all but the sentries who did not fully sense what was transpiring. Allen and his men gave three huzzas, and one of the sentries made a pass at one of the men with a charged bayonet and slightly wounded him.

Allen was about to run him through with his sword but thought better of it and only slightly wounded him on the head whereon he dropped his gun and begged for quarter. This granted he showed Colonel Allen the officers' quarters whither the intrepid commander rushed and compelled the commander, Captain Delaplace, to come forth and deliver over the entire garrison on threat of putting the entire force to the sword.

"By what authority?" demanded Captain Delaplace.

"In the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress," thundered Allen, as he raised his sword over Delaplace's head. In the meantime the Green Mountain boys had not been idle but had beaten down the barracks' doors and had about a third of the garrison prisoners. With stuttered expostulation the commander forthwith submitted and the fort was completely in the hands of Colonel Allen, who in his own account of the exploit says:

"The sun seemed to rise that morning with a superior luster, and Ticonderoga and its dependencies smiled on its conquerors."

DYING FOR ONE'S COUNTRY

"Death Never Comes Too Soon, If Necessary in Defense of Our Country."—Story.

It was Nathan Hale who said, "I regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." And it is Horace that makes one of his heroes say: "It is sweet and glorious to die for one's country." There have been many and striking illustrations of this in our country's history. It is said that the untimely fate of Col. Owen Roberts, who fell at Stono, was cause of universal regret. He was an inflexible patriot, an excellent disciplinarian, and enthusiast in pursuit of military fame. His son, who was in the action, hearing of his misfortune, hastened to him. The expiring veteran perceiving in his countenance the liveliest sorrow, addressed him with great composure: "I rejoice, my boy, once again to see and to embrace you. Receive this sword, which has never been tarnished by dishonor, and let it not be inactive while the liberty of our country is endangered. Take my last adieu, accept my blessings, and return to your duty."

THE SWORD OF WASHINGTON

The sword of Washington. The staff of Franklin. Oh, sir, what associations are linked with these names! Washington—whose sword, as my friend has said, was never drawn but in the cause of his country, and never sheathed when wielded in his country's cause. Franklin—the philosopher of the thunderbolt, the printing press, and the plow share.—John Quincy Adams.

DELAYS ARE DANGEROUS; SWAT THE FLY TODAY!

NOW is the time to begin to swat the fly—right today. Don't wait until tomorrow. Perhaps you've noticed on mild afternoons when the sun is bright that one or two buzzed their deadly song about your ears. They're here. But there are only a few now. Maybe there was only one in your home. But did you swat it?

Get out the swatter that you used last year and kill the flies before they multiply. The fly is born in filth and lives in filth. It can't be blamed, then, because it carries a supply of bacteria constantly.

Physicians say every fly that escapes the swatter now means several million equally evasive germ carrying insects in a month or so. To eliminate the housefly effectively you must eliminate it early in the season, before it has time to hatch its eggs. Get your screens ready. Bar the fly from the house. But if it slips by you—swat it.

SWAT THE FLY!

One of the first guns of preparedness in the fly crusade is a swatter.

Have you your fly swatter ready? If you haven't one get one.

If you have one don't let that deadly fly get away!

Smash him now!

Swat the fly!

Just a Few Ifs.

If you kill the first fly of spring, the second one and a few others no more flies will bother your premises all summer.

If you screen the house; if you protect all foodstuffs, including baby's milk.

If you keep the lid on the garbage can.

If you can keep the back yard clean.

If you do a few other things occasionally that you know should be done, but just as often forgot.

If you do these things flies will not die of old age upon your premises, but rather "pine away" and "drop off" in their early youth of inanition. That is a polite term for starvation, but starvation is good enough for a fly.

Clean, screen, kill and starve 'em early.

Swat the fly!

Fly Guilty of Murder.

Dr. Crumbine of the Kansas state board of health discovered the murderous character of the fly in keeping a monthly record of infants who died from diarrheal diseases.

He found that deaths increased as flies multiplied.

In January, the season of no flies, deaths were only thirty-five, while during July and August, the season when flies swarm in greatest numbers and carry most filth and germs to the baby's bottle and the baby's lips, the deaths of little children soared to 176.

There is a call for such action NOW as will stop flies from breeding.

Will you heed that call now or wait until your own baby dies?

TEACH CHILDREN TO SWAT THE FLY.

GIVE your children the fly swatter and teach them to use it. Teach them to shun flies as you teach them to run from automobiles. The little tiny silent flies are more dangerous. They are killing a great many more children than the great big, noisy automobiles. Besides, teach your children to look for the flies, as one or another may stealthily sneak into your carefully screened house. Give a prize of a penny a dozen for all dead flies, and teach the children not to touch them, as they are dirty and may be carrying disease.

Paint Will Make Your Place Pleasing to Eye

PAINT makes store fronts more pleasing and entrances more inviting, just as the uniform makes the soldier seem twice a hero. A liberal use of paints, oils and varnish in the business world brings back the money taken from the purse for their purchase many times over. They are the emblems of business prosperity and growth, and these are magnets to all.

If the merchant is prosperous it is good wisdom that he should let the people know it, and then, by a rule as sure as the workings of mathematics, he will have more prosperity. And the merchant who is not doing quite so well would be equally wise to furbish up his place and make it put on the tidy, bright air so generally characteristic of the headquarters of successful enterprises.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

VOL. XXXI ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, AUGUST 30, 1917 NO. 35

Notice to Delinquents

We feel a notice is due our patrons at this time, which seems to us is excusable.

There is, for some unaccountable reason, a growing tendency among the people to allow their accounts to run from one to four and even five years unsettled. Any fair minded person knows the average business man cannot stand up under such practice, besides it is very poor business methods to pursue. THE NEWS does not consider a subscriber should be asked to pay in advance, but we do consider any account over one year is an imposition on us and a burden for us to carry. Therefore we must, in the very near future, drop every person'sname from our list who is over one year in arrears, and if not paid within a reasonable length of time, hand the account to a collector. We do not feel that is is necessary to go to the expense of notifying these persons individually, as they know whether they have paid within the past year. Many have had notices, some have given us promises while others have not paid us the courtesy of even mentioning it.

If you are one of those above mentioned, we will most heartily appreciate a settlement and renewal before any further request on our part is necessary.

Fuel Value of Wood

The fuel value of a cord (128 cu. ft.) of good beech, sugar or hickory wood equals that of a ton of soft coal. The average price of wood is about half that of coal. In other words we pay double the price for the luxury of burning coal.

That there is enough fuel wood in Indiana forests going to waste to run every heating and cooking stove in the state for a year is a fact not appreciated. In the woodlots of the state are dead and dying trees, and "weed trees" such as dogwood, water beech, ironwood, etc., which if removed would be a distinct advantage to the growth of the remaining trees. Woodlot owners should arrange to have these cut, and made into fuel wood.

Since labor is scarce, it is believed that woodlot owners be willing to give to the deserving poor and their neighbors the dead and dying trees, tops, etc., in their woods, if they would cut and haul them out without injury to other trees, and shut gates and fences after them.

Each winter municipal governments find that fuel is one of the commodities in greatest demand by the poor. Why not begin to prepare now for the demand which is sure to come? Why not establish a municipal wood pile? If solicited, many farmers when they go to town would donate a load of poles, etc., to the municipal wood pile. The farmer appreciates his advantage during these war times and would be glad to help the poorer classes by taking them wood in lengths which could be made into stove wood. By a little effort, concerted action might be had whereby many teams could be obtained, and all go at one time to a designated woodlot. By this arrangement, the woodlot owner could direct the cutting, and see that only marked trees were taken. Thus his woods would be cleaned of useless material, the other trees benefited, and the pasture in it improved.

Why not try a municipal wood pile?

Schools Begin Sept. 17

Concord township schools begin on Monday, Sept. 17. Trustee H. C. Hathaway has engaged the following corps of teachers:

High School.—
  Superintendent—F. L. Smith.
  Principal—Miss Ina Shordon.
  Assistant—Merritt Maxwell.
  Seventh and Eighth Grades—C. A. Woodcox.
  Intermediate—Miss Ella Brown.
  Primary—Miss Gladys Kain.
Hay School—Miss Lela Wallace.
Saylor School—Miss DeVeta Bayman.
Cheesetown—Miss Agnes Sechler.

In the high school, Merritt Maxwell, in addition to being assistant principal, will relieve C. A. Woodcox of part of the work in the seventh and eighth grades, as the latter teaches music and manual training in addition to his other duties.

DAYBREAK.

A wind came up out of the sea,
And said, "O mists, make room for me!"

It hailed the ships, and cried, "Sail on,
Ye mariners, the night is gone."

And hurried landward far away,
Crying, "Awake! it is the day."

It said unto the forest, "Shout!
Hang all your leafy banners out!"

It touched the wood-bird's folded wing,
And said, "O bird, awake and sing!"

And o'er the farms, "O chanticleer,
Your clarion blow; the day is near!"

It whispered to the fields of corn,
"Bow down, and hail the coming morn!"

It shouted through the belfry-tower,
"Awake, O bell! proclaim the hour."

It crossed the churchyard with a sigh,
And said, "Not yet! in quiet lie."

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Christian Meeting

The annual county meeting of the Church of Christ was held at Eckhart park, Auburn, last Sunday. Services were held in none of the churches of that denomination, all members that could do so going to the county seat. The attendance was not limited to DeKalb county, Hicksville and other outside places being represented. The event was an enjoyable one for those present, spiritually and socially.

The first service was Sunday school at 9:30 a. m. This was followed by a sermon by Elder Grant Speer, pastor of the Central Christian church, Toledo, one of the leading divines of Ohio. He also spoke at 2 p. m. and in the evening. The forenoon discourse was timely—an appeal to the patriotism of his hearers in the present national crisis. His text in itself gives an idea of the nature of his remarks. It is: "Here am I; send me" (Isa. vi, 8). The reverend gentleman emphasized the duty of sacrifice. He knows whereof he speaks, having given his only son to his country.

The following St. Joe people attended: Elder and Mrs. L. W. Spayd, Dr. and Mrs. B. S. Sheffer, Isaac Meese and wife, Mrs. Mary A. Scholes, Frank Scholes, Mrs. Samantha Kees, Mrs. Sam Kees, Henry Milliman, Frank Johnson and wife, Alva Perry and wife, Ray Herrick and family, Mrs. Addie Filley, Mrs. Belle Ridgway, Mrs. G. C. Curie, Will Hamilton and wife, Mrs. Howard Northrup, Walter Keesler. There may have been others, but the foregoing is as nearly correct as the NEWS was able to obtain it.

Oh, yes! mention of the day would not be complete without saying something about the basket dinner. There was no need to multiply the quantity, as in the case of the loaves and the fishes, and the quality was more varied and to the taste of latter day diners; but—my! oh, my!—the twelve baskets would have needed enlargement.

Alumni Meeting

All members of the alumni of the St. Joe high school are requested to meet at the home of Mrs. F. R. Bowman on Friday evening, Aug. 31, 1917. Important.

A stranger in St. Joe—particularly in the evening or on Sunday—would be bothered to tell whether the town is in Indiana or down in "ole Ca'liny." The "culled gem'mum" am pow'ful plenty.

Painting Store Front

Elsa Kinsey is giving his store front a surprise. He is brightening it up with a fresh coat of paint. The appearance of things is much improved thereby.

Dale Widney is on the sick list.

See those Single and Double Disc Rollers at Curie's.

Pearl Marks is home, arriving last week. His health is much improved.

Roasting Ears for canning or drying, for sale by Mrs. L. W. Yeiser.

Merritt Barney, Sol Barney and Jacob Sechler were at Auburn, Monday, on business.

Mrs. Ann Dilley and Mrs. Grace Dilley went to Elkhart, Tuesday, to attend the funeral of the former's grandchild.

Mrs. C. C. Bassett and son, Charley, spent Sunday with the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Brunson.

James Shirley and wife and Miss Mabel Kinsey and friend, of Fort Wayne, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Sanders.

Mrs. C. C. Bassett returned to her home Saturday evening, from Covington, where she spent a couple of months with her husband.

The Teachers Institute at Auburn this week is being well attended by teachers from this part of the county. Friday closes the session.

Mr. and Mrs. George Brown, of Danville, Ill., were guests the first of the week of George Swineford and wife also Mrs. Margaret Swineford.

C. R. Brunson, wife and daughter Beulah, of Chicago Junction, were over night guests of Mrs. C. C. Bassett, Monday night. They will also visit the former's parents north of town and other relatives.

The Misses Laura and Faith Brunson spent Sunday in the H. W. Krabill home. They are moving from Newville to Butler where Miss Laura will teach in the Butler schools the coming term and Miss Faith will attend high school.

Quite a number from this place attended the play, "The Other Man's Wife," at Huber opera house, Hicksville, last Friday evening. The play has a splendid moral lesson, one that should be instilled into the mind of every young person.

From an Old Friend.

Aug. 23, 1917

Dear Friends:—

Here I am once more to let you know I am still on the land of the living, and thankful for the blessings I enjoy. I am not strong in body, but strong in the Lord, he is so precious to me. We had awful hot weather for a while and the heat got away with me, just weak, not sick but can be around and wait on myself and I think that is a whole lot to be thankful for.

Well how are you all getting along busy as ever I expect. Well, so the world goes, but I do wish the war was over, I think it is awful to kill and rush people in that don't want to go. Life is sweet to every one and they don't want to lose it.

Well, I don't want to miss the mail man, enclosed is a dollar for the renewal of my paper.

Kindest regards toall,
Grandma Huffman.

INFORMS PUBLIC ON COAL CRISIS

Governor Goodrich Issues Statement Promising Fullest Co-operation With Wilson.

UNITED ACTION BY STATES

If Special Session Is Called Coal Bill Now Being Drafted Will Be Offered to Meet the Present Situation.

Indianapolis.—Gov. James P. Goodrich Friday issued a statement to the public, commenting on the fact that the Chicago interstate conference of councils of defense adopted resolutions which in general effect carried out the "Indiana idea" of regulating the coal problems of the country by federal action first. The governor's statement also pointed out that the bill now being prepared to handle the coal situation in Indiana—in case a special session of the Indiana legislature is called—provides for the fullest co-operation with the federal government. The principal points in the statement follow:

"The action of the special committee of the several state councils of defense meeting at Chicago Thursday was in line with the general idea which has prevailed here that the matter of fixing the price of coal is primarily a federal one and that action should be taken by the president first, if possible. Under the powers conferred upon him by the Lever law the president has this right, and we know that the members of the federal trade commission have been causing an exhaustive investigation to be made as to the cost of production in order to intelligently fix the price.

"The federal trade commission wired the meeting in Chicago, asking that no action be taken to complicate their contemplated action, and the members of the Indiana council of defense present at the conference endeavored to carry out the wishes of the federal government in that regard. The resolutions, as finally passed, embodied the Indiana idea that the federal government first act, if possible. They further provided that co-ordinating with the federal action there should be such state action as might be necessary, which is in line with the plan contemplated here, and in process of development.

"There will be nothing done in Indiana, of course, to complicate in any way the action of the federal government in the premises. It has been our idea that the right and power first rested there, and the efforts which we have made from the beginning and which were made by the members of the Indiana state council at Chicago, and their resolution passed at the meeting were with a view of first aiding the federal government in the matter, and then taking such supplemental action as might be necessary in the premises. The resolutions which were passed fully cover the situation, embody all our ideas and are in harmony with our plans and ideas here.

"The bill being prepared for consideration of the special session of the legislature, if called, provides for the fullest co-operation with the federal government."

Will Call Special Session.

Governor Goodrich authorized a statement that a special session of the legislature would be called at once.

The exact time depends on the speed in drawing up bills he wishes to be presented. The session probably will begin August 27 or 28. The governor reached his decision after conferences with Republicans and Democrats. It is hoped that the session will not last over two or three weeks. The limit is 45 days. According to the governor, both Republican and Democratic leaders have agreed that politics should be banned from the special session. They agreed that action should be taken to relieve the coal situation, to establish a state constabulary, to legalize the state council of defense and to give added powers of regulation over railroads to the public service commission. The prevailing opinion was that there should be some constitutional amendments taken up, but opinion was divided upon the question of submitting the question of a constitutional convention to the vote of the people next year. The governor does not believe this question will be brought up. The question of oil inspection will probably not come before the legislature. The Democratic leaders say it is for the courts to decide whether the Democratic or Republican appointees have a legal right to the jobs. The legislature will be asked for large appropriations, probably aggregating a half million dollars or more. The money will be asked for the state constabulary, council of defense, for state institutions and other extraordinary expenses. A constitutional amendment providing the budget system for the state likely will be introduced. An amendment to existing laws would give the public service commission drastic control over the railroads, as a measure of relief in the coal situation. The governor is expected to recommend a small excise tax to provide needed money.

Legalizing and defining the scope of the state council of defense and appropriating money for it and the excise tax will be the big questions.

Staff Appointments.

Six majors on Gen. Edwin F. Flenn's staff at Fort Benjamin Harrison were advanced to the rank of colonel by orders received from the war department at Washington, D. C. The orders designated the new colonels duties. The following are the new colonels: Col. Edwin Bell, Col. Lorain T. Richardson, Col. Thomas Darrah, Col. F. L. Knudson, Col. A. C. Nisson and Col. Robert W. Mearns. Colonel Bell and Colonel Richardson will go to Columbia, S. C. Capt. W. R. Gibbons, an instructor at the fort, has left.

Railroads Ask Increase.

The railroads completed the introduction of a mass of testimony before the public service commission of Indiana to show that they are entitled to an emergency increase of 15 per cent on freight rates, and also to a revision of class rates within the state to correspond with the class rate increase recently allowed by the interstate commerce commission for interstate shipments. Live stock and grain are not included in the proposed increases in freight rates and coal was the subject of a separate hearing by the commission when the railways asked the privilege of charging an increase of 15 cents a ton for coal during the present emergency.

Attorneys for the railroads requested that all the testimony presented in the coal case in relation to the increased cost of operation on account of the high price of coal and other materials used by the railroads and the precarious financial condition of many of the companies be made a part of the testimony in the present case. This was permitted by the commission.

Commission's Purpose.

Before hearing testimony and statements by protestants against the proposed increases in rates, W. J. Wood of the commission said the present inquiry was of such a wide scope that the commission would take this opportunity to accomplish the task of making a complete freight rate adjustment for Indiana. For this reason, he said, the inquiry should take the widest latitude, and all persons who desire to criticize or protest will have a chance to make their complaints.

E. C. Hervey of Indianapolis, representing the Hydraulic Pressed Brick company of Brazil and also the Indiana members of the American Face Brick association, and J. C. Campbell, a brick manufacturer of Brazil, asked for ten days in which to prepare for the commission statements showing the conditions of the brick business.

Council Free of Politics.

Expressing regret that a few Democratic newspapers have suggested that the work of the state council of defense was influenced by politics because Will H. Hays, a Republican leader, is chairman, Thomas Taggart, himself a member of the council, has written a letter to his friend, Dale J. Crittenberger, publisher of the Anderson Bulletin, in which he appeals to all Democratic newspapers of the state to give full indorsement to the councils' work. Mr. Taggart declares that Mr. Hays is unselfishly giving his time to the council and that he has been a loyal supporter of President Wilson and everything desired by the national administration. Mr. Taggart's letter, written from French Lick, appeared in the Anderson Bulletin and follows:

"I have observed lately that some of the Democratic papers of the state seem inclined to intimate that the work of the state council of defense might be influenced by politics, and that there was some impropriety in the fact that Will Hays is serving as chairman of that body while he still retains the office of chairman of the Republican state committee.

"I regret to note such an attitude, as, in my judgment, this is no time for us, or for any one, to make unfounded intimations in regard to the injection of politics into any governmental activities. As a matter of fact, I have watched the situation pretty closely, and, up to the present time, I have seen no indications of political by-play in the state council—and I am sure there will be none. Mr. Hays is unselfishly giving practically all his time and talents to this work, without compensation, and even paying his own expenses, and, so far as I have been able to observe, never misses an opportunity to co-operate with and urge the full support of the president and the national administration in the prosecution of the war.

"There is a great work ahead of the council of defense. It is slowly getting under way, and its success or failure depends entirely upon the measure of unbiased support it receives from the citizens of Indiana. The mere fact that Mr. Hays happens to be chairman of the Republican state committee has no bearing in the matter whatever. For, if those holding political positions were not allowed to do war work we would lose some of the best and most active men in the country, and many of those whom the president has put to work would be eliminated.

Indiana Unexcelled.

"No state in the Union can boast of a better, more loyal and more intelligent citizenship than can Indiana, and I hope that during these trying times, and the more trying times to come, that the citizens of Indiana will be a unit in upholding the hands of the state council of defense, who are doing such splendid work for the national administration by endeavoring to conserve the resources of the state and increase its output. I hope that every Democratic newspaper will do everything they can to aid in this great work.

"With kindest regards, I remain, yours very truly,

"T. TAGGART."

Reviews the Artillery.

Governor Goodrich reviewed the Indiana Field artillery at Fort Benjamin Harrison. The governor's presence turned the evening regimental review into something more than an ordinary parade and an unusual number of onlookers were present. Thursday was vaccination day for Batteries B, E and F. The soldiers received their first injection of paratyphoid serum. The other three batteries were treated a few days ago. Sore arms and an occasional sick soldier was the rule, but most of the men came through fine.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 2

THE SHEPHERD OF CAPTIVE ISRAEL.

LESSON TEXT—Ezekiel 34.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.—Psa. 23:1.

With the complete subversion of the kingdom of Judah, the national consciousness was largely crushed and the people were without heart for the common affairs of life. Ezekiel, though born in Jerusalem, prophesied in Babylon near the River Kebar. The object of his prophesying was to encourage the captives by placing before them God's promise of their return to their own land. His name signifies, "God will strengthen," which is very appropriate to the mission which in the providence of God he was called upon to fill.

I. Israel's Faithless Shepherds Denounced. (vv. 1-10). These false shepherds included the kings, princes, judges and priests. Ezekiel points out that the captivity was because of sin, but he shows that the greatest guilt obtains with reference to these leaders. They were placed in the position to care for and protect the sheep. The following indictments are brought against them:

1. They fed themselves instead of the flock (v. 2). They were essentially selfish. They ministered to themselves instead of the sheep. Too many today are filling public offices for the sake of private gain. Sometimes even ministers are found who are more concerned about themselves, their pleasures and profits, than they are about the souls of the people who support them.

2. They were cruel (v. 3). They were not only mere hirelings, guilty of looking after themselves, but they actually behaved like robbers, preying upon the flocks. All are guilty of this same sin who use their influence and power to the disadvantage of others. In the theocratic kingdom such behavior was peculiarly obnoxious, as the rulers and ministers were representatives of Jehovah himself. The minister and public officer today is acting in his capacity for God, not for himself, therefore he should make the cause of heaven his chief concern.

3. They neglected the diseased, wounded, wayward, and lost (vv. 4-6). As a result of their selfish cruelty the sheep were without food; therefore exposed to disease; had no bond of unity, were exposed to the ravages of wild beasts. God's flocks are in many places thus suffering and dying because they have not been fed. God's judgments are against such (vv. 7-10).

II. The Faithful Shepherd. (vv. 11-16). The Shepherd here is none other than Jesus Christ. The wonderful blessings here described will be realized by Israel in millenial times. This blessed condition will be ushered in by the second coming of Christ. How sincerely all should pray, "Thy kingdom come." When the true Shepherd comes:

1. He will seek his lost sheep (v. 11). Though they have gone astray through wilfulness on their part, and neglect on the part of faithless shepherds, Jesus will seek them out and save them. To save the lost was his peculiar mission (Luke 19:10).

2. He will rescue them from the power of their enemies (v. 12). God's sheep have real enemies and they have fallen into the enemies' hands, but the Faithful Shepherd is able to deliver them. "No one is able to pluck them out of his hands" (John 10:28, 29).

3. He will bring them back to their own land (v. 13). Poor, scattered Israel shall one day (may it be soon!) be brought back to their own land. This is the one unmistakable sign by which we may know the beginning of the end of this dispensation. Be assured that it is not wars, nor pestilences that mark the sign of the close of this age, but the movements of Israel.

4. He will feed them (vv. 14, 15). "I will feed my flock, and I will cause them to lie down, saith the Lord God. I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick; but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment."

5. He will seek that which was lost (v. 16). That which has been driven away he will seek and bring it back again.

6. He will heal them from weakness and suffering (v. 16). All the wounds which Israel has received these many centuries shall be healed.

III. The Golden Age (vv. 23-27). The vision of the world as it now is, is most disheartening. It is midnight darkness. In this blackness we wonder why God does not interpose. We wonder how he can be silent. While midnight is upon us we are hopeful, for we see the bow of God's promise of better things flung across the sky. This present order shall disappear before the new. In that new order:

1. Jesus Christ, David's Son, shall be king (vv. 23, 24). This new era of blessedness can only come into realization when God's Son shall establish his kingdom upon the earth.

PETER TRAFT CONFESSES HIS LOVE FOR LYDIA CRAVEN, AND MRS. MERRILEES SHOWS A MAGNIFICENT PEARL NECKLACE WHICH SHE PROMISES TO GIVE LYDIA

SYNOPSIS.—A well-bred young Englishwoman, nervous and suspicious, finds when she boards the steamer Alsatia, bound from Liverpool to New York, that her stateroom mate is Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, a fascinating, wealthy American widow of about sixty years. The girl introduces herself as Lucy Carteret and says she is going to America to meet her father. Lucy's behavior puzzles Mrs. Beggarstaff, who is vastly surprised to find the girl in possession of a magnificent necklace, stolen from a museum some time previously and passes the news on to her friend, Quoin, a private detective on board. Lucy, dressing in the dark in her stateroom, hears a mysterious conversation between two men just outside her window and recognizes one of them as Thaddeus Craven, her father, whom she hasn't seen for five years. She confesses to Mrs. Beggarstaff that she is in reality Lydia Craven. The girl discovers her father and young Mrs. Merrilees, a charming widow, engaged to be married. Mrs. Merrilees is bewildered for a moment because Craven had always posed as a bachelor, but she and Lydia like one another. Craven tells Lydia he secretly represents the British government in the United States.

CHAPTER VI.

—7—

"There, Peter," announced Mrs. Beggarstaff, "there goes a very happy girl!" Her amazing complacency would have suited a fairy godmother gloating over some signal beneficence.

Past the deck chair in which she was reclining, with Peter Traft at her side, arm in arm, Lydia Craven and Mrs. Merrilees were striding briskly aft. Rare color warmed the face of Craven's daughter, mirth danced in her eyes, a smile edged the pretty lips from which the breeze caught a snatch of laughter as musical as singing glass, and bore it to the ears of her two devoted admirers.

"Um-hm," Peter assented indistinctly between teeth gripping the mouthpiece of his pipe. Basking in the warmth of a late September sun, as lazily content as any cat, Peter watched the girls swing down the deck and disappear round the superstructure. Then he removed the pipe to observe, critically, "Business of taking all the credit to yourself—eh?"

"Why not?" the Dowager Dragon demanded with asperity. "Didn't I discover who she was and bring her and Tad together? That's why she's happy, if you must know—not because you've fallen head over heels in love with the girl and moon around after her like a stray puppy looking for a good home."

"Ouch!" said Peter pensively, and replaced the pipe.

With a grim sniff, the Dowager Dragon withdrew momentarily into deep thought. "Have you asked her to marry you yet?"

"Who—me?" Peter expostulated. "Nothing like that!"

"Why not?"

"Too much sense," Peter explained, rarely sententious.

"Whose—hers?"

"Even money you can't guess."

"Yours, of course!"

"There!" groaned Peter. "I might've known better than to bet against intuition."

"Why plain intuition, Peter? The phrase is rightfully 'feminine intuition.'"

"The weed intuition flourishes only in the well-known sex. Man, possessed of brain, reasons to a logical conclusion; woman—hm!—shuts her lovely eyes, sticks a pin through the card, and if the perforated horse wins, claims her choice was dictated by a mysterious faculty denied to man. The word itself is a sort of abracadabra, at mere mention of which fools faint and wise men climb trees."

Secretly charmed, Mrs. Beggarstaff wrinkled her nose unbecomingly. "For once you admit man is deficient."

A second glance showed him Lydia in the angle of the starboard rail, Quoin at her side.

"Sit down there," Craven insisted. "The steward'll be back in a minute. I want to talk to you about this wretched concert tonight. They've asked me to be master of ceremonies—awful bore!"

With a fixed, agreeable smile, Peter sat, drank whatever the steward brought him, automatically consumed Craven's cigarettes, and listened without the least interest to the other's plans. How could he be interested, with that fellow Quoin monopolizing Lydia? Not that he didn't like Quoin. In fact, Peter admired that man tremendously; so much the more reason to fear his influence!

And Lydia, leaning on the rail, a vision more radiant even than the day.

"Well?" Craven demanded with pardonable impatience.

Peter started and batted his eyes. "Eh?" he inquired stupidly.

"What do you think?"

"Ah—about what?"

"Good heavens!" Craven exploded a full, deep note of exasperation. "Here I sit yammering at you—"

"Sorry," said Peter. "Fact is—I know Mrs. Merrilees won't mind being let into my confidence on the ground floor—fact is, I'm in love with your daughter, Tad. And Quoin's talking to her. So, naturally, I'm sick with jealousy."

"It's like your cheek," observed Craven. "Have you mentioned the matter to Lydia?"

"Certainly not! She's having too good a time. Women won't listen to a gratuitous lover unless bored or actively unhappy."

"Then why bother me with your lovesick vapors?"

"Well, I wanted to see how rusty you'd cut up. Besides, Mrs. Beggarstaff has discovered my hideous secret, and is now busy—or about to be—distributing handbills."

"Can't you shut her up?"

"The law forbids cruel and inhuman punishments. Besides, I'm not sure I want her hushed. I'm not ashamed of the fact, and if I let the Beggarstaff alone, sooner or later she or someone will mention the matter to Lydia, and then—well, rouse a woman's curiosity, and half your battle's won."

Craven turned to inspect the pair at the rail. "She might do worse," he observed.

"Thanks!"

"Than Quoin, I mean."

"Curse it!" said Peter, flushing. "I'm in earnest, Tad."

"I believe you are," Mrs. Merrilees interjected with dispassionate scientific interest. "I really believe you are, Peter. Certainly you were never so intolerably stupid when in love with me."

Peter, by this time recovered, fixed her with a reproving glance. "Uttered in the presence of a third party," he said severely, "slander is actionable. Merely because I didn't like to show my distaste for your infatuated advances, you take up with an emergency ration like Tad here, and then get sore because I don't forbid the banns—peevish child!"

"Just for that," said the woman, "just for that, Peter, I'm going to heap coals of fire upon your ungrateful head—and heaven knows I hope they'll scorch and blister—"

"Marble?" Craven suggested with open incredulity.

"Be quiet, Tad, and run an errand for me, like a biddable child." Mrs. Merrilees loosed the drawstring of a lacework wristbag, took out a tiny pocketbook, and from this last extracted a slip of paper. "Take that to the purser and bring me what it calls for."

With assumed reluctance Craven heaved up from his place and rolled forward, while his fiancee cradled her chin in her hand and regarded Peter with a whimsical smile.

"Quit it!" he said crossly. "You haven't got anything on me, you know."

"How about the others?"

"Others? I never looked cross-eyed at a girl before this."

"Peter!"

"Well, hardly ever. And, anyway, from now on I'm going to wear a signboard here." He sketched the site upon his waistcoat:

Private. No Thoroughfare. This means you!

"It seems so funny—you!" Laughing quietly, the woman looked up to review Lydia with a long glance. "She's a dear girl," she observed.

"Promise never to call me 'mamma,' and I'll do my best for you."

"What chance have I got, with Quoin making the pace? He's a regular fellow—I'm only a drawing room entertainer."

"He's a strange man," Mrs. Merrilees mused. "If he hadn't taken up such an impossible profession—"

"Do you suppose he has a case in hand now; aboard this vessel, I mean?"

"Call him, and I'll ask."

Peter complied with the best grace imaginable. "Quoin! I say, Addison, come over here a minute. A beautiful lady wants to ask you something." In a lower tone he added, "You're the best little diplomat ever. I'll be grateful as long as I live." And rising with the sunniest of smiles, he drew up chairs for Lydia and Quoin.

"Yes, Mrs. Merrilees?" the detective inquired, taking the place at her side.

"Peter and I have been bickering about you," the lady fibbed brazenly. "Are you, or are you not, wasting your brilliant talents on my devoted trail?"

Quoin looked puzzled. "Something on your conscience?" he advanced tentatively. "You don't mean to try any smuggling this trip, I hope."

"I can't make up my mind. I'd love to. Are you interested?"

"Only in your interests. Be advised—don't!"

"Why?" Mrs. Merrilees pouted. "Why not, if, as Peter would say, I can get away with it?"

"If for no more moral reason," said the detective seriously, "because it can't be done. The customs people are laying for you."

"They'll be disappointed."

"Don't deceive yourself. Every man on the force knows it was your agent who secretly purchased that three-hundred thousand franc pearl-and-diamond collar at Cottier's in Paris."

"But I've quite made up my mind never to stoop to anything so truly low as smuggling."

Over this virtuous protestation Mrs. Merrilees pursed prim lips belied by dancing eyes; then broke down and joined in a general laugh as Craven reappeared with a small dispatch box of black metal.

"Mayn't I giggle too?" he inquired plaintively, looking from face to face as he delivered the box to its owner.

"Not worth repeating," his fiancee reported, fitting a key into the lock. "I was merely swearing I meant to be good—when every blessed drop of blood in me cries out against the sinful extravagance of paying duty on—this!"

Opening the dispatch box, she removed a handsome jewel case of grained morocco, unlocked this in turn, and disclosed that same necklace which Quoin had just named, watching with a smile of gratified vanity the effect on her four friends.

At length, "Sixty thousand dollars?" Quoin inquired listlessly.

"My dear man, I do believe you've seen the bill!"

Smiling, the detective shook his head.

"Worth half as much again," Mrs. Merrilees affirmed. "Cottier wanted ninety."

"They seem perfectly matched," Quoin pursued, knitting his brows; "but I'd like to look at them in a stronger light."

"Take them out into the sun, if you like."

Craven sat forward in nervous impatience. "Do be reasonable!" he expostulated. "It's sheer idiocy to have that thing up here at all, with God knows who spying! And there are some queer fish aboard—eh, Quoin?"

"Rather!" the detective agreed dryly.

"Please be advised!" Craven urged. "Lock that thing up again and let me take it back to the purser."

"Tad, you're tiresome!" Mrs. Merrilees began.

But Quoin interrupted. "Craven is right."

"Oh, well! If you will spoil everything, take all the fun out of my surprise."

"Surprise?" Peter echoed.

Mrs. Merrilees nodded emphatically. "Look well at them, my friends; for the minute I get them through the customs, to safe deposit they go and there remain." She paused deliberately, with a challenging smile.

"Why?" Peter demanded blankly. "Don't you ever mean to wear 'em, Betty?"

She shook her head. "They're not for me, Peter. If I dared smuggle, I should wear them, just to be sassy about it. But since I don't dare, I mean to keep them for a wedding present to my stepdaughter—if I ever have one." She closed the case with a snap.

Lydia sat back with a little gasp, her eyes blank with confusion. Quoin laughed an odd, brief laugh, and glanced askance at Craven. This last turned to his betrothed with a startled gesture and lips that gaped. Peter Traft alone betrayed no abnormal emotion. Grinning cheerfully, he watched the two women, absorbed in each other—Lydia finding breath enough for the protest, "But, Mrs. Merrilees, you mustn't!" the other confirming her intention with an emphatic nod and the statement, "But I've made up my mind, dear; so you may as well give me my head. Besides, you promised always to call me Betty."

Locking the metal box, she rose. "Come, Tad. I owe my appetite five more laps round the deck before luncheon. Peter, please take this back to the purser and get his receipt. If you're afraid, Lydia'll go along to protect you."

"What becomes of me?" Quoin demanded with mock truculence.

"You're to walk the other side of me," the lady ordered imperiously, "and help me make Tad behave."

Craven breathed heavily. "Whether I like it or not—" With a last reluctant glance at the treasure box, he rose and somewhat sulkily prepared to obey orders.

What do you think about this man Quoin? Is he strictly on the level—or do you suspect him of connection with the professional smugglers aboard?

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

HEADS WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD

There is a story in Washington to the effect that when Frank A. Scott, head of the government's new war industries board, applied for his first job as a boy in a freight office, the chief said he would hire him if he were only tall enough to reach the wheel of the letter press. "Couldn't I stand on a box?" asked the boy. The freight agent had not thought of that, but the idea appealed to him, and Scott got the job. He made such good use of its opportunities that in the course of time he became the expert on freight rates of the Cleveland chamber of commerce. He became various other things, too, in organizing and manufacturing, but this is not a biographical sketch of Scott. It is enough to say that his qualifications were sufficiently known and appreciated by the secretary of war and other members of the administration for them to summon him to Washington at the outset of the war to take the chairmanship of the general munitions board and the munitions standard board, which had been created as emergency agencies.

These boards served as the box for Scott to stand on when he reached the levers of an important part of the government's war machinery. But the box was not high enough, and the machinery itself developed serious defects in the course of early preparations for the war. Now it has been scrapped by the council of defense, at the suggestion of the president. The new war industries board has been created to take its place, with Scott still as leader, but with a much smaller and significantly modified personnel, with broader powers and more concentrated authority.

EXPLAINS WORK OF W. C. T. U. IN WAR

At the meeting of the presidents of national women's organizations called by the women's committee of the council of national defense in June to confer on woman's work in the war, one of the strongest and clearest accounts of activities was presented by Miss Anna A. Gordon, national president of the Women's Christian Temperance union.

"The National Women's Christian Temperance union, comprising nearly half a million women, already is rendering splendid war service," said Miss Gordon in a personal interview following her public talk. "Our order stands for peace, but when President Wilson decided that the time had come for this country to take up arms against oppression and crimes against humanity, we pledged ourselves to stand by him to the limit of our strength, and because of the perfect organization of the union there was no delay in outlining work. We believe it is our duty to suffering humanity to unite with the nation in defending the principles of Christian civilization.

CHIEF AID OF SECRETARY M'ADOO

"When it gets so hot I can't bear it," said a man who lives in Washington, "I just run over to Byron Newton's office, in the treasury building, and look at him for a while."

Mr. Newton is assistant secretary of the United States treasury, and how he acquired the knack of keeping so cool nobody knows.

"Maybe it's because I am in the vicinity of so much cold cash," said Mr. Newton when he was asked about it. Years ago Mr. Newton was a reporter for the New York Herald, and even in those days he had the knack of keeping cool when everyone else was sweltering. He is a large man, rather red of face and not the type one would expect to see oblivious to the heat.

When Secretary McAdoo is away Mr. Newton is acting secretary, and he acts so well that some of his friends say that if Mr. McAdoo ever goes back to running his trains under the Hudson river his assistant ought to be appointed to fill the vacancy. One of the biggest jobs ahead of Mr. Newton is the collecting and checking up of the huge war taxes which congress is levying.

"We've had trouble enough with the income tax," he said, "but it's only a starter to what the war taxes will be. We will have to maintain a field army of our own just auditing books, collecting and investigating."—New York Herald.

WE MUST FINISH THE WORK

"With the first installment of the Liberty Loan completed, immensely gratifying as is the result, we must remember that the financing of a great war is never completed until the war is finished; and we are going to finish this war to our satisfaction in order that America may not be finished. We must stay on the job and do it in true American fashion. We have proved ourselves on the first test; we must be prepared for the second, the third, and the fourth if need be.

"This war must be fought to a finish. It must be so fought because there is an irrepressible conflict between two irreconcilable principles and systems of organized society that never will be settled until it is fought to a finish. The world can no longer survive half democratic and half autocratic. One or the other must triumph. We are confronted today with an analogous situation to that which confronted this nation in 1861, when the immortal Lincoln said, 'This nation can no longer endure half slave and half free.' We had to fight that irreconcilable issue to a conclusion, and we fought it to a right conclusion. We vindicated freedom in America; we obliterated slavery from the free soil of this great nation. That is what we have got to do for the entire world—destroy despotism, which is another form of slavery, and make liberty supreme. In no other way can the world be made safe for democracy. It is a noble idea; it is the only kind of an ideal for which a great republic like ours, a republic of freemen, could or would fight."—William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury.

Governor Has Typhoid

Governor James P. Goodrich, who has been ill at an Indianapolis hospital for the last five days, was considerably improved Monday, according to the report of the attending physicians.

Physicians Monday definitely diagnosed Governor Goodrich's illness as typhoid fever. Absolute rest has been ordered. The typhoid is in a very mild form, the doctors said, and his chances for immediate recovery are regarded as very favorable.

Must Report Tuberculosis

An order has been sent out by Dr. J. N. Hurty, state health officer, to DeKalb county health officers and health officers all over Indiana, calling attention to the law recently passed by the legislature making it necessary for all physicians to report all cases of tuberculosis coming under their notice. They are to report them as being either in the first stages, medium or advanced, so that the state authorities will be in better position to offer aid in controlling cases as they are reported. The number of members of the family, employment, etc., are all required in the physician's report.

Dogs Kill Many Sheep

Money Paid Out of Dog Fund to Reimburse Owner Represents Only One Loss, the Killing of the Sheep Being an Economic Waste.

Money paid out because of the depredations of dogs among sheep, represents loss in more than one direction. The big loss is the economic waste in the death of the sheep. The county pays the farmer the full value of the sheep killed out of the dog fund.

In counties where there are no claims against this fund, the money is turned over to the school fund. Thus are many communities deprived of something that might have been a value as food, but this at the expense of the cause of public education.

The killing of 21 sheep, wounding of 25 others, most of which will die and the loss of three other sheep inaccounted for, has just been reported by Lee Replogle, near LaPorte.

LaPorte county, as a result of this raid must pay Mr. Replogle $300 and it has no recourse, for there is no proof of the ownership of the dog that was responsible for the wholesale slaughter in Mr. Replogle's flock.

The incident, following closely upon the efforts of the county agent of LaPorte county to arouse the farmers to the importance of their producing more sheep, has had a very discouraging effect. If it is followed by a determined effort to exterminate licensed dogs that are not turned in for taxation as having a property value, the county authorities feeling that the incident will not represent total loss

Other counties have had similar experience, emphasizing the importance of taking radical action for the purpose of relieving sheep raisers from the ever present menace, which, it is estimated, has exacted a toll of $100,000 per year, in Indiana.

LATE GARRETT WOMAN LEAVES ESTATE TO HER DAUGHTER.

The will of the late Mrs. Maria Cady of Garrett, has been filed for probate in the office of the clerk of the DeKalb circuit court. The first provision of the will is that all the just debts against the estate be paid as soon after her death as possible, then the remaining estate is to become the property of the daughter, Mrs. Ida E. Clark. The will also calls for the appointment of Mrs. Clark as executrix.

James N. Ritter and Elsie O. Rang both of Garrett, witnessed the will on September 2, 1910.

Fort Wayne's Y. M. C. A. building underwritten by a $150,000 bond issue in addition to the $341,000 subscribed by the public, will be built by the Indiana Engineering & Construction company of Fort Wayne at a cost of $225,200. The work is to be completed by September 15 of next year and the work on the building will start at once. The bonds have been underwritten by thirty or forty Fort Wayne business men and the finances will be furnished by Fort Wayne banks on a pro rata basis of the amount of their capital stock.

End of World Near at Hand

Wabash, Ind., Aug. 28—The Seventh Day Adventists of Indiana, at their annual camp meeting here, continue to discuss the fulfillment of bibical prophecies from their viewpoint. L. H. Christian of Chicago, president of the Lake Union conference, said:

"There is more prophecy fulfilled in a month now than there was in fifty years, some centuries ago. We need to study the prophecies of the Bible that relate to our time. Never have we faced such momentous issues as we face now. God has spoken of our time and of the great events that are now taking place. The prophecies are being fulfilled before our very eyes.

"The prophet Jeremiah predicted the present war as one of the last great events to occur before the second coming of Christ. He says, 'I am pained at my weary heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I can not hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.' See Jer. 4: 19-26. According to the Bible the whole world will be plunged into war and into a great final trouble."

Predicts a Tempest.

At this point Mr. Christian read a statement made by Mrs. E. G. White, twenty-seven years ago, in an appeal to the youth to prepare for that which was before them, and published in the official organ of the denomination, the Review and Herald, of February 17, 1890. The appeal follows:

"The tempest is coming and we must get ready for its fury, by having repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. The Lord will arise to shake terribly the earth. We shall see troubles on all sides. Thousands of ships will be hurled into the depths of the sea. Navies will go down, and we shall see human lives sacrificed by the millions. Fires will break out unexpectedly, and no human effort will be able to quench them. The palaces of earth will be swept away in the fury of the flames. Disasters by rail will become more frequent; collision, confusion and death without a moment's warning will occur on the great lines of travel. The end is near; probation is closing. O let us seek God while He may be found, and call upon Him while He is near."

Another Prediction.

Mr. Christian read another statement published by Mrs. White a number of years ago. It follows: "More and more, as the days go by, it is becoming apparent that God's judgments are in the world. In fire and flood, and earthquakes. He is warning the inhabitants of this earth of His near approach. The time is nearing when the greatest crisis in the history of the world will become, when every movement in the government of God will be watched with intense interest, and inexpressible apprehensions. In quick succession the judgments of God will follow one another—fire and flood and earthquake, with war, and bloodshed. . . .

"These predictions are being fulfilled in our day," said Elder Christiona. "Already 2,000 ships have been sunk in the war, millions have gone down in death, and the end is not yet."

EVANGELISTS WOULD STOP SOLDIERS SMOKING CIGARETTES.

The Interdenominational Association of Evangelists, with more than 1,000 of the leading evangelists and evangelistic workers at its annual meeting at Winona lake, Friday pledged support to President Wilson and the administration and outlined a vigorous campaign of war work.

"We urge a prosecution of the war with renewed vigor as the shortest path to just peace," reads an inspiring resolution which was passed.

A special committee was appointed with Milford H. Lyon of Winona, as chairman, to arrange for effective religious work at army cantonment camps.

The evangelists took a rap at the "pernicious tobacco trust" for its efforts to increase business by stimulating an appetite for cigarettes among the soldiers.

A drastic order issued by all railways in compliance with instructions from the government gives the movement of "lake" coal preference over all other kinds of freight. It appears there in a shortage at all the docks and other points of consumption in the north and northwest sections and the purpose of the drastic order governing the movement of the coal from the mines to the lakes is to get a big supply on hand at the chief points of consumption before the close of navigation. This order, if it is enforced a considerable length of time, will very materially affect the traffic and possibly demoralize business of certain kinds for awhile. The order to rush coal shipments becomes effective at once.

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh at an alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

Women Co. Agents

Plans have been made to expand immediately the co-operative extension work of the United States department of agriculture and the state agricultural colleges, by a large increase in the number of county agricultural agents and home demonstration agents. Women agents will be placed for the first time in the larger towns and cities.

More or less technical training in agriculture and home economics will be required for this service. The appointments are to be made on the recommendation of the director of extension work at the state college. Aproximately 1,400 men agents and 500 women agents are at present employed.

The plans formulated contemplate the extension of the men county agent work to all the rural counties of the union in which there is a need for the work and the placing of an additional agent in some of the larger counties already organized. They also contemplate a considerable increase in the number of women agents engaged in extension activities. The number to be employed will depend upon the number of trained men and women available. Proved ability in leadership as well as technical training will be required.

The use of city agents in the conduct of the extension work of the department is a new departure made desirable by the importance attached in the present food crisis of the world to the conservation and efficient utilization of foods. The city demonstration work will be carried on by women agents who will work in co-operation with the existing organizations of women.

The aim of the extension work is to carry directly to as many people as possible information in regard to proved methods of agricultural production and home economics. Economy in the purchase and use of food, and methods of food conservation by canning, drying, etc., will be emphasized. The men county agents are concerned chiefly with agricultural production while the women are employed in demonstration work in home economics.

With funds furnished in the food production bill the States Relations Service also will seek greatly to enlarge the enrollment of young people in the boys' and girls' clubs which are devoted to increasing agricultural production and conserving the food supply through canning, drying and other means.

The service also will work out problems in the efficient utilization of various foods and will aid institutions devoted to agricultural education to plan and conduct courses of instruction especially suited to the present emergency.

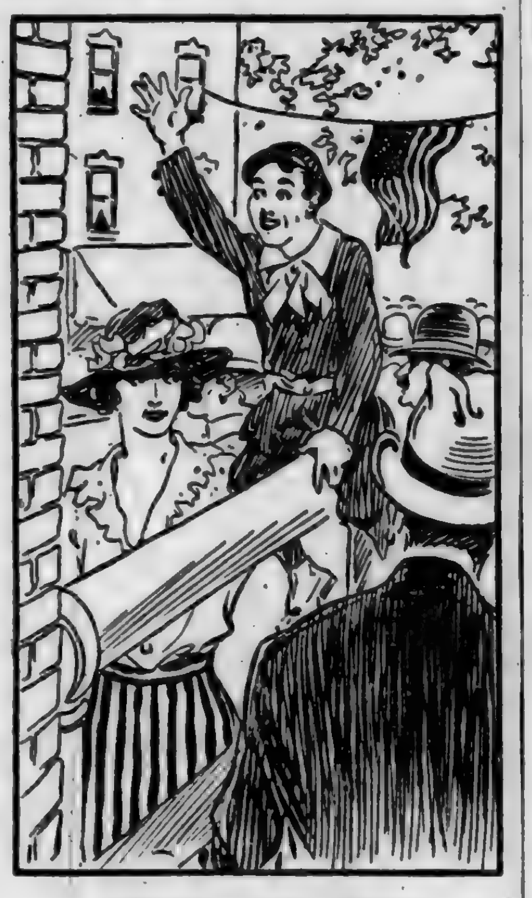
A LABOR DAY STORY

by Arthur Price

THE Labor day procession was coming down the street. The first man in it was six feet four inches tall, with a bearskin hat on his head that raised him to seven feet. He was the drum major of the band and was twirling his big silver-headed staff and throwing it into the air with fine jugglery. Behind him came the band. Then came the different unions marching in line, every man looking happy on this clear September day that he could lay aside his hammer or his trowel or whatsoever tool best represented his trade and step out to the inspiring strains of martial music.

Among those who lined the sidewalk, occupied the steps of the buildings or climbed the lamp-posts along the line of march was a certain Mrs. O'Toole, who had recently come over from Ireland. With her was her son Daniel, six years old. The mother was standing with the crowd on the curb, but Danny was perched with leg on each side of a horizontal piece of iron under the lamp, straining his eyes to catch the first glimpse of sunlight that would strike the brass horns of the band.

The drum major passed, the band passed, the grand marshal and his aids passed. Then came the carpenters' union, the plumbers' union and the masons' union.



"Which?" Cried Danny.

"Oh, Danny," cried Mrs. O'Toole, "there's your father!"

Now, Danny O'Toole had known ever since he was old enough to know anything that his father had left him and his mother in Ireland, when Danny was a baby, to come to America. He was to send money home and when he got enough together to send for his wife and boy he would do so. For awhile letters had come from him, then they had ceased. His wife had come to America to look for him.

"Which?" cried Danny.

"The man on the far side, him with the red head. Call him."

Danny, knowing only one way to attract his parent's attention, shouted "Redhead!" with all the power of his little lungs. The man heard him and, turning his head, saw a kid on a lamppost waving his hat at him. Then, lowering his eyes, he saw his wife looking in his direction. Leaving the ranks, he came across the street, elbowed his way through the crowd to his wife, and she fell into his arms.

Meanwhile, Danny, seeing that he was not getting his share on this family reunion, dropped down on his father with one leg on each shoulder. His father pulled him down into his arms.

"The child?" asked O'Toole.

"Yes. It's Danny."

Danny got a hug that made him cry out, and, drawing off as far as he could, he punched his hugger with his little fist.

"Don't you hurt me that way ag'in!" he said, fiercely.

"Oh, Danny," said Mrs. O'Toole, laughing through her tears, "your father's so glad to see you."

That ended the O'Toole family's interest in the Labor day procession. O'Toole went with his wife and boy to their rooms, where he explained his long silence. He had been suddenly taken ill and attacked with loss of memory. It had partially returned to him and he had written his wife, but she had already left Ireland for America.

That was a number of years ago. Since then Danny O'Toole has grown to be a stalwart young fellow, has learned his trade and can swing a sledgehammer with any man. And when Labor day processions march down the street between admiring crowds Danny is sure to be among them. And he takes a great interest in the day because it is the anniversary of his first meeting with his father in America and of his family reunion.

His Holiday

TODAY we pay a tribute to the power behind the throne—the man who sweats and delves and toils for everything we own. He plots our channels, paves our streets, he steers the ship of state, he holds within a giant's grasp great engineering feats. He walks out to catastrophes with steady, fearless eye, he looks on death a thousand times—he's not afraid to die He hears big speeches in his praise, he smiles (and well he may) he knows his power and what we keep in this, his holiday.

POVERTY RECOGNIZED AS SOCIAL DISEASE

Leaders of Thought Say Its Disappearance Will in Time Be Effected by Adoption of Wise Social Party.

Alfred W. Greeley in Pennsylvania Grit.

It is not to die, or even to die of hunger, that makes man wretched; many men have died; all men must die. . . . But it is to live miserable we know not why; to work sore and yet gain nothing; to be heat-worn, weary, yet isolated, unrelated, girt in with cold, universal laissez faire—Thomas Carlyle.

IT IS beginning to be recognized that the great bulk of the burden of poverty is as unnecessary and preventable as smallpox or tuberculosis. Just as tuberculosis is a physical disease, so poverty is a disease of the social organism. It is probably the greatest burden humanity staggers under and it exacts directly and indirectly its toll from all members of society. Why should there be hungry mouths when the proper cultivation of even one state of the Union would furnish sufficient food for our whole population? Why should millions shiver underclothed every winter when we are able to furnish textiles for the whole world? Why should there be grim periods of unemployment with vast natural resources yet untouched? These and similar questions are beginning to demand an answer that must be more than a smug, hypocritical shouldering of the responsibility upon Providence.

Poverty Never Essential.

The conquest of poverty is now an economic possibility. It is definitely within reach if we are willing to pay for it and formly desire its achievement. The campaign, many of its features now in development, is mainly one of social and economic betterments for the correction of social injustice, for the increase of the earning power of labor and capital, not one but both as a unit of efficient production; for the prolongation of human life through public sanitation and hygiene, together with preventive medicine in a war on preventable disease; for the salvage of the deficient and defective classes of society, and for the rectification of underpayment and the prevention of unemployment, understood as involuntary idleness of competent workmen. Every factor of human betterment is doing its part directly or indirectly, in this war upon poverty.

Social Surplus a Necessity.

The success of this battle with poverty is contingent upon the existence of a social surplus, the basis of all social well-being. That is, as a nation we must produce goods or services much in excess of our immediate needs of subsistence. And we are doing that today upon a scale never before known in the world. It has made us the richest nation with wealth estimated at something close to $250,000,000,000. It is an intolerable condition that when there is enough and more than enough to feed all that any should hunger, save, perhaps, the chronically criminal and the unemployable of various antisocial types.

Civilization has kept pace with increased economic production. "Starting from a rude social order wherein bare and uncertain existence was the most that man could wrest from nature, society has attained an incredible economic productivity by the development of intellectual force and manual dexterity, by the more efficient arrangement of its own powers, and most of all by the discovery and utilization of natural energies. The diffusion of comforts, the possibilities of luxuries, the rise of arts and letters, the spread of culture—in a word, the development of civilization is the consequence of increased economic production." And furthermore, we can place no limit to the future rate of increase in production clearly assignable.

The history of the United States illustrates the working of this principle which has ousted the gloomy, pessimistic prophecy of Malthus. From 1850 to 1900 the population increased 226 per cent, while the production of the eight great cereals increased 409 per cent. And what is true of our agricultural products is also true even to a greater extent of iron and steel, textiles and other manufactures. Our per capita wealth in 1850 was $307. It is now supposed to be about $1,800 or $2,000.

Workers' Condition Bettered.

Together with this great increase in national production and wealth, with the creation of a great unprecedented social surplus, has gone a wonderful betterment in the condition of the working classes. Wages have risen, expenditures have increased for nonphysical satisfaction; the deposits in savings banks have augmented; the per capita consumption of wheat, sugar and meat have grown; the death rate has declined, and, taken altogether, there has been a steady and unprecedented improvement in the condition of the workers.

But the creation of this huge social surplus has not removed the challenge of want; it has not destroyed the menace of poverty. It has only made a solution of a bitter problem possible. While there is no doubt that the intensity of poverty is less today than in the past, even in this country, yet the challenge of poverty and its consequent misery still stands wolfike at our threshold. In the words of Professor Hollander: "The root of the problem lies deeper. Poverty, like certain of its primary causes, is a phase of modern industry. The very forces which increase the national product and enlarge the social surplus, if left to themselves, breed conditions of want. . . . Far from diminishing with increased wealth production, the misery resulting from such causes is, in the face of social inaction, likely to augment and intensify. Society may grow richer, civilization may advance, and yet poverty continue to gnaw cancer-like at its vitals."

Our enormous national wealth with its unprecedented social surplus, our vast natural resources which we are conserving in time, our national ideals and aspirations for social, political and industrial justice, are the factors which, sooner or later, may give us the unique distinction of being the world's first nation to abolish poverty.

'DIFFERENT' IN ITS ROOM ARRANGEMENT

The Little Bungalow Described Here Just Right Size for Family of Two.

BRICK, STUCCO, WOOD WALLS

Interior Plan and Conveniences Will Delight Any Housewife and Have Especial Attraction for the Fall Bride.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The little bungalow shown in the accompanying perspective view and floor plan is interesting in that its arrangement is quite out of the ordinary. The exterior is finished in quite a simple manner, although its appearance is not lacking in any respect. The walls of the house are given the character of three materials. The foundation walls above grade are of face brick. Above this and carried up to the head trim of the windows, the walls are finished with narrow beveled siding. Under the gable ends the walls are finished up to the roof with timbered stucco. The perspective view gives some slight idea of the rustic appearance of the low pitch gable roof. The roof itself is unadorned—characterized by clean, sharp-cut outlines and careful balance. The appearance is dependent upon the correct selection of pitch and the general outline of the roof rather than upon elaborate ornamentation. There are two brackets under each gable end, these being appropriate to the timbered stucco wall surface: they constitute the only ornaments which are required to give the building the appearance-effect which the designer has deemed most appropriate for this particular structure.

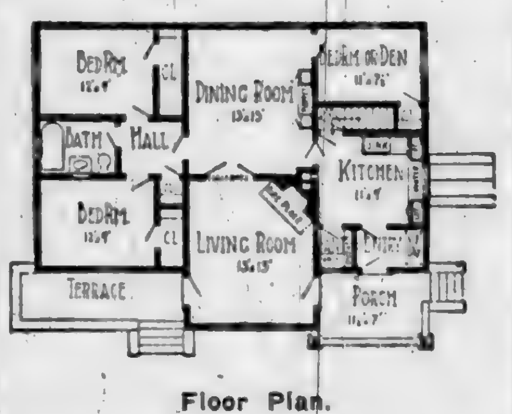
It will be noticed that the railing walls of the terrace are of face brick while those of the porch, on the other side of the house are of wood siding. While this construction does not take anything from the effectiveness of the design and is really included for the purpose of removing any trace of what some people call a "stiff" effect, meaning that there is too methodical adherence to the symmetrical, it might be criticized by some, in which case there is no reason why either the one or the other of the railings cannot be altered to conform with the other. If the change is desired, it would undoubtedly be made in the porch railing walls, which would be constructed of face brick with a white stone or concrete coping in order that conformity might exist between the foundation, terrace and porch walls. The terrace floor and steps are of concrete. The porch floor as shown in the illustrations is of wood flooring and the steps are concrete. If the porch walls were to be changed to brick, the porch floor would be better if built of concrete.

This house is 41 feet wide, not including the extension of the terrace beyond the wall of the house or the steps of the porch. The depth is 31 feet 6 inches from the front wall of the living room to the rear wall of the dining room. It could hardly be built on a lot having less than a 50-foot frontage, and is, therefore, unsuitable for extremely crowded locations, but this is true of almost any bungalow. The bungalow requires plenty of room or its appearance is destroyed. One of the particularly pleasant features of this house is the facility which it provides for lawn decoration. Across practically the entire front of the house the wall surface is unbroken near grade. The appearance of the house and the lawn would be very much beautified during the summer months by a carefully selected bed of flowers planted near the house along the front wall.

This house is one of the type which looks best when elevated slightly above the street grade, unless it can be built back quite a distance from the street sidewalk. The house, standing by itself, is somewhat lacking in height and is made so purposely so that it will have the best possible appearance when built on either a terraced or sloping lot. It is an advantage to build a house slightly above the surrounding ground if possible, especially when the ground is known to be normally water bearing, because of the better drainage which is possible.

Even better than the exterior qualities of this bungalow is the interior arrangement. In the real test of a home, the convenience of its interior, the ease with which it may be kept clean and the comfort which it provides are the vitally important factors. A house cannot be called a good investment if it is not satisfactory in regard to these things, no matter how beautiful its exterior may be.

The bungalow shown in the perspective view is built around the living room and the dining room. Since these rooms are ordinarily the most used and the most noticeable rooms in the house, it is logical that they should be treated with special attention. Here they are made equal in size and are placed one behind the other, with attractive French doors between. At the front of the living room there is a door on either side, one leading to the terrace and the other to the porch.

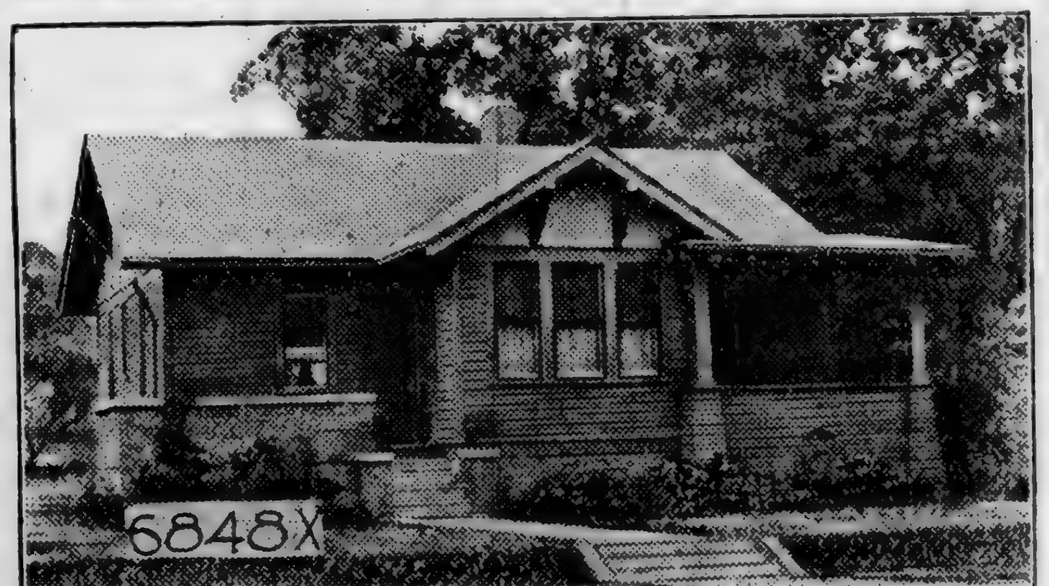


Floor Plan.

The fireplace is built into the corner of this room where it forms an attractive feature and permits the use of single chimney with two flues to serve the furnace, fireplace and kitchen range.

The kitchen has been given considerable attention. A counter is placed beneath the window and two cupboards are provided. The sink is handy to the counter. A little pantry adds to the convenience of the arrangement. There are shelves and a table in the pantry. An entry from the porch furnishes plenty of room for the refrigerator. The stairs leading to the basement are framed in just to the rear of the kitchen and a small room which may be used either as a bedroom or as a den occupies the rear corner of the house.

The principal bedrooms, two in number, are located on the other side of the central living and dining rooms, The rooms thus placed conform to the very best design practice in bedroom arrangement. It provides windows in two walls for each room and, by the use of the small hall connecting these rooms with the bath, makes them independent of one another without the loss of a foot of space. This hall is entered from the dining room near the French doors leading to the living room. This plan stands for space economy in every part. It provides convenience and comfort in full proportion to the cost.



HIGHER GRADE OF 'NONCOMS'

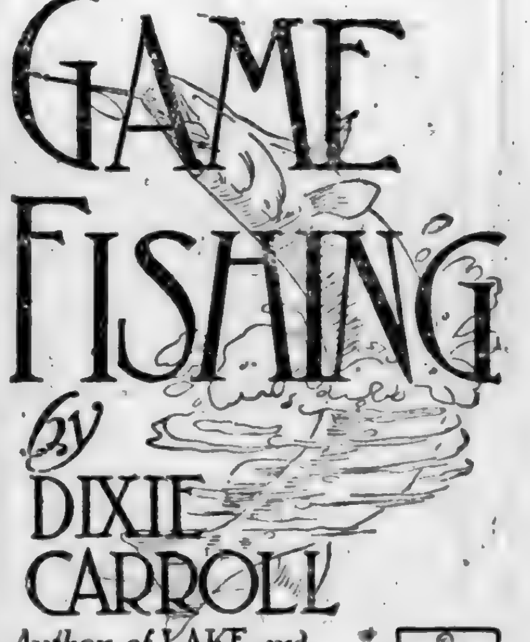
Good Material for Chevrons Is Seen in Men Drafted for the New National Army.

There is a growing feeling among the student officers at Plattsburg, a feeling already prevalent among their instructors, that in the main the quality of the draft is going to be remarkably high, Herbert Reed writes in the New York Independent. It is the thing the regular army has been waiting for all these years. And the reason is simple. It is felt that it will be the army's great opportunity to unearth the right sort of material for noncommissioned officers. It is no reflection on the "noncom" of the old regime, who, by the way, is to have his long deferred chance for promotion, to say that in the mass the army expects better material.

The new men will meet in many cases—probably in most cases—as entire strangers, and the battle for the "noncom" position will be on before the men get to know each other too well. The friendship of the old days, generally long founded by the time promotion came around, were too often a bar to discipline. The situation made it hard for the man pushed up and for his old side partners in the ranks. This accounts, of course, for the lonely life of the top sergeant, that most efficient king pin in our line troops. In the new army the top sergeant in many cases will be "there" long before he has made any deep friendships in the ranks, and the task all around will be easier.

This should be encouraging to that great body of disappointed young men who for one reason or another could not make the first training camps, and are too young for the second. If not drafted they can enlist directly with the knowledge that they will have their chance for a commission along with the brightest men of the regular draft.

GAME FISHING



by DIXIE CARROLL

FLY-CASTING FOR BASS.

My Dear Buck:

Going after the husky bass with the light fly rod is sure the right system of fishing, if you have a desire to cultivate the tingling nerves and the thumping pulse. Nothing in the game will give you more thrills than to have a two or three pound bass take the feathers and then try to shake 'em loose—that is, of course, if you are handling the working end of the rod. And if this old bass is a stream-raised youngster, he will give you more fight than any other fish, weight for weight.

Wading a stream and whipping the water in a semicircle as you go along is far more enjoyable than lake fly-casting, and at the same time a stream that can be waded makes about the best kind of bass water for the use of the fly. The shallow pools above and below riffles or rapids is a likely spot for the hungry bass as well as the eddies along the sides of rapids. Cast into the swirl of water as it passes around a bowlder and off the edge of the windfalls, logs and brush heaps, all of which locations are generally the loafing place of a fine old bass.

In lake fishing with the fly the bright, sunny day is not for you. The bass rise to the fly particularly on a day when the surface is broken by a slight breeze, and the best time for casting is in the early morning and late in the evening. From sunset to dark is the best time when the day has been bright—in fact, most any day. On the lake cast your fly inshore on the bars and shallows or ledges and off the edges of lily pads, rushes and weed beds, as well as alongside the half-submerged logs and windfalls along shore. The fly should be allowed to sink considerably and a slightly jerky crawl given to it when working in the line. This is done to fool the bass into believing the object of the fly-maker's art is a struggling insect trying to get out of the wet.

Better to Fish Downstream.

On the stream it is preferable to fish downstream, as the bass lie with the head upstream and with the current carrying your fly on its natural course, the bass have more chance to see it and thus become a possible candidate for the creel. Then again, it is far easier to wade downstream than it is going up.

For dark days and early evening use light-colored flies, and for the bright days the darker flies. Smaller flies of a subdued color tied on a No. 6 or 7 hook is right for low, clear water on a bright day, while for after-sunset and moonlight casting the gray, white and brown flies tied on a larger hook, a No. 2 or 4 size, are more likely to attract the fish than the smaller ones. For rough and turbid water the brightly colored feathers are best. In selecting your flies don't overlook the black, brown, gray and hackles; you will often find that the old reliable hackles will bring a rise after you have tried every other combination in your fly book.

Nearly every fellow who whips the light fly rod has his own particular selection of flies, and by these he swears like a pagan; however, for the beginner, besides the hackles the following selection will give a fairly varied assortment that will pass muster until he creels the first fish and the fly used at that time will no doubt be given the place of honor in his pet list. I have found these flies creel fillers: Queen of the Waters, Lord Baltimore, Montreal, Grizzly King, Coachman, Professor, Red Ibis, Seth Green, White Miller, King of the Water, Ferguson, McGinty, Emerson Hough, Silver Doctor and Parmanchee Belle.

One of the essentials in bassing with the fly is to keep out of sight of the fish as much as possible. The bass is every bit as scary as the trout, although once he sees you he will not dart away and disappear like the trout, but he will dash off a little distance and stop, facing you. However, don't waste time trying to make him take your fly, because he has a case of "nerves" and you can cast it right over his nose and he merely gives it a disinterested glance. On the small bass streams keep entirely out of sight and on the wider waters make a long cast, the finer the water the more caution and the longer the cast. On casting from the shore it is well to be screened by bushes or any natural formation. Wading is the best method, however, as the nearer you are to the water the less chance the fish have of seeing you, and even at that you should be as quiet as possible and make it a point to avoid quick or sudden moves.

Cast your flies as lightly as possible and avoid letting them land with a splash by slightly raising the tip of the rod right before they touch the water and let the current help you by allowing the flies to run with it.

WOMAN NOW IN PERFECT HEALTH

What Came From Reading a Pinkham Advertisement.

Paterson, N. J.—"I thank you for the Lydia E. Pinkham remedies as they have made me well and healthy. Sometime ago I felt so run down, had pains in my back and side, was very irregular, tired, nervous, had such bad dreams, did not feel like eating and had short breath. I read your advertisement in the newspapers and decided to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It worked from the first bottle, so I took a second and a third, also a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Purifier, and now I am just as well as any other woman. I advise every woman, single or married, who is troubled with any of the aforesaid ailments, to try your wonderful Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier and I am sure they will help her to get rid of her troubles as they did me."—Mrs. ELSIE J. Feed the Fighters! Win the War!!

Harvest the Crops—Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

LIKE AJAX AND ACHILLES

Individual Prowess in This War Counts for as Much as It Did in Days of Ancient Greece.

Individual prowess counts for as much as it did in the days of ancient Greece, Waldemar Kaempffert writes in McClure's. Names will stand out in the history of this war like those of Ajax and Achilles in the epic of Homer. Lieutenants Immelmann and Boelke on the German side haove brought down nine and ten adversaries in mortal combat. Their exploits are tinged with a chivalric glamour which seems anything but modern.

When Boelke landed to aid an enemy whom he had wounded he was greeted with the comment: "Since it is Immelmann who beat me, I am satisfied." When the German replied that it was "only Boelke," the interchange of compliments seemed like a parley between Hector and Ajax.

The analogy between Homer's battles and twentieth century aerial combats extends even to the vehicles used. What is a flying machine but the ancient war chariot soarding on wings? In many an encounter two-man machines still battle for supremacy—one man an observer, the other a pilot. The observer is the fighting hero of old, wielding a machine gun instead of a sword, the pilot his faithful charioteer.

Carry the analogy still further and consider how much is at stake when battleplane meets battleplane. The fate of an ancient army depended on a prince in his war chariot; the fate of an army corps now hangs on the information gleaned by a victorious flier.

Almost Correct.

Charles was an only child and always associating with his very learned parents he sometimes talked like a book.

"My father is a sociologist," he told Petey, who lived in an alley and had met plenty of sociologists but had never learned to classify them.

"A what?" asked Peter.

"A sociologist, and he is very much interested in studying the conditions of our mentally deficient."

Petey considered for a moment and then asked: "Is he in a bughouse?"

"No bowl is too big when it holds Post Toasties"

"I wonder who is ringing the doorbell. Is it some chump who merely wants to hang around the parlor, or is it a nice chappie who wants to take me for a ride in his automobile?"

"Take a sniff at the keyhole, girlie, and see if you can smell gasoline."

YES! MAGICALLY! CORNS LIFT OUT WITH FINGERS

You say to the drug store man, "Give me a small bottle of freezone." This will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

A few drops of this new ether compound applied directly upon a tender, aching corn relieves the soreness instantly, and soon the entire corn or callus, root and all, dries up and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This new way to rid one's feet of corns was introduced by a Cincinnati man, who says that freezone dries in a moment, and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without irritating the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to order a small bottle from his wholesale drug house for you.—adv.

Firm as a Rock.

"There," he said, pulling his shirtsleeves over his brawny arms and surveying the clothes post which had taken him the best part of the Saturday afternoon to fix in the garden; "that's as firm as a rock. Even the combined forces of the elements cannot bring it down."

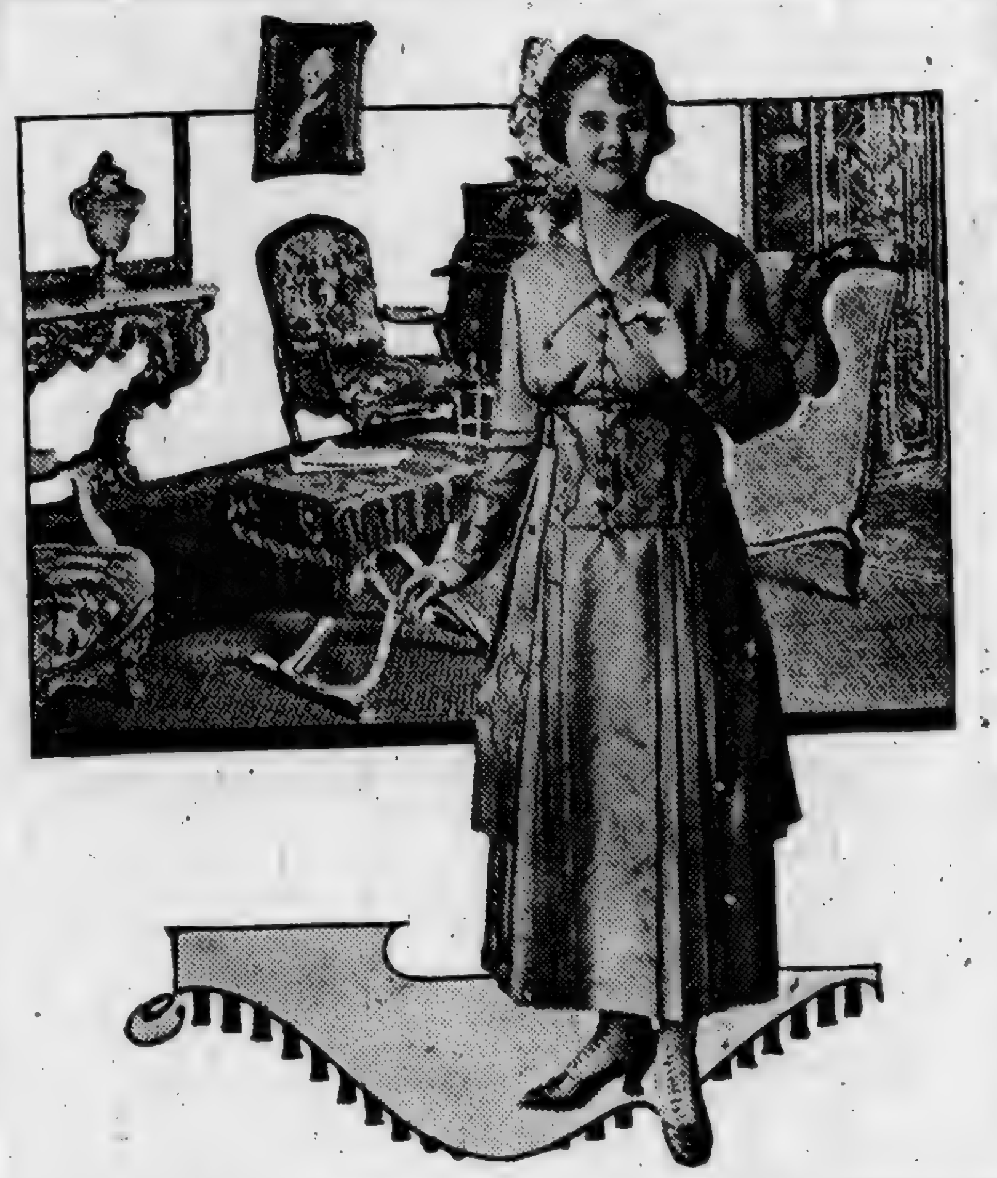
Later in the day he found the pole on the ground.

"Did you do this?" he roared, to his eight-year-old son.

"No, father," was the answer; "a sparrow perched on it. I saw it myself."

Of two evils it is best to choose neither.

Unusual in Design and Color



Satin is the new love of designers of afternoon gowns just now. They are not running after strange gods or sparing much attention to anything else. Few of the new fall models employ two kinds of silk, but there are many beautiful combinations of satin and wool. The tunic is here and makes plenty of opportunity for the introduction of two fabrics in one dress.

The gown shown above is less simple than the average in the new displays of afternoon models for fall. Its color is an unusual purplish brown, dark and rich. It makes a wonderful combination with deep blue, and this color in soutache braid is used for decorating it.

Like nearly all the new dresses it sticks rather close to the straight-line idea; the high waistline is a means to this end. The skirt is plaited on to a yoke with plaits at each side of a front panel and a tunic begins where the plaits end. Its fullness is also provided by plaits. It is tacked to the yoke and two silk-covered buttons at each side are on guard to see that it remains in place.

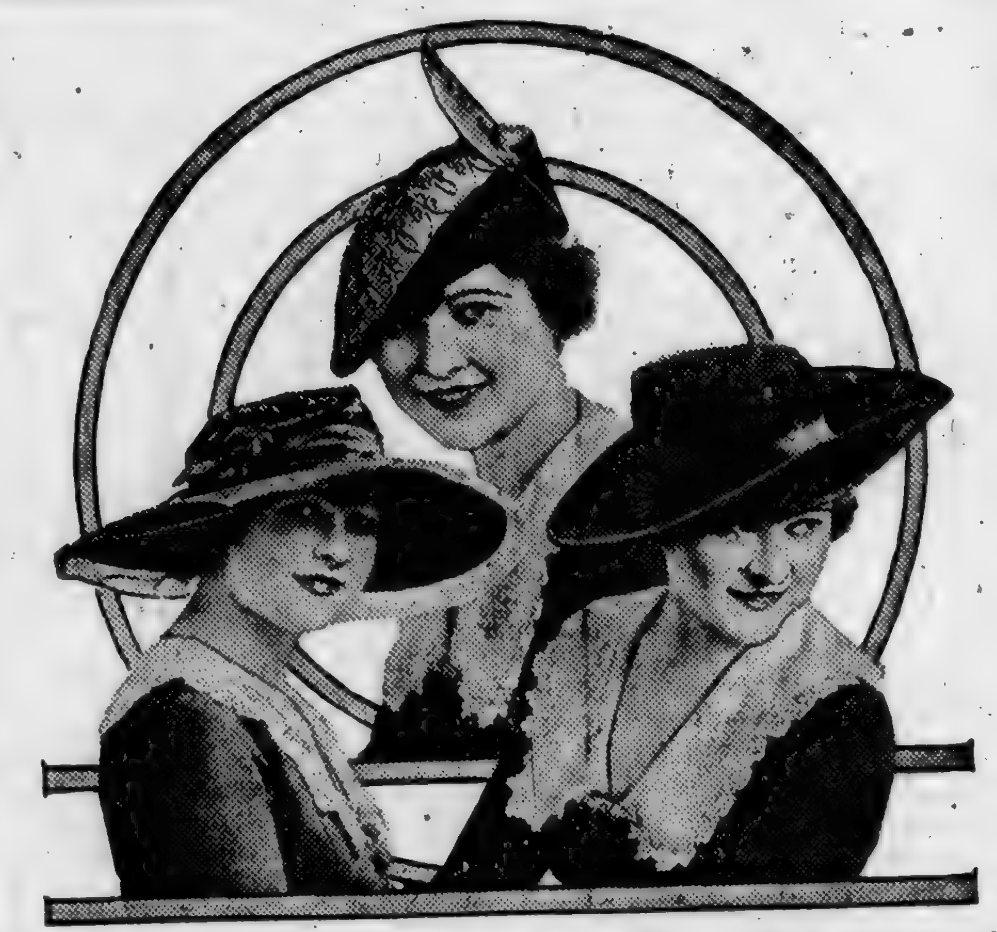
The bodice is plain with a row of buttons down the front. Pointed revers at each side are finished with pendant buttons and a small sailor collar is overlaid with a still smaller one in cream georgette.

Afternoon Gowns Appear Wider.

The afternoon models are generally somewhat wider in appearance. This effect is obtained by the use of flounces, panels and tunics over narrow foundations. Large girdles are often employed forming draped effects.

The materials in these afternoon gowns are veloutine spangles with tarnished metal, satin, voile, mousseline and velvet in shades of beige, sand, ochre yellow and gray, often combined with black.

Three Triumphs in Millinery



Sure of a joyous welcome wherever the trained eyes of fashionable women fall upon them; that is the happy future of these beautiful hats. The test of the successful hat is simple—it must flatter its wearer—she must look better with it on than without it.

The three hats pictured go even farther, for each has a decided character of its own to lend to the head it covers. At the left, a wide, graceful picture hat will provoke a sigh of longing in the heart of every girl. Its brim droops a little, making a fine shadow for the eyes and the narrow fall of georgette crepe about the brim edge is a trick of the milliner's that enhances every beauty—whether of eyes or complexion. The crown is soft and draped, and the hat is entirely black velvet.

The saucy hat at the center is made of blue taffeta, with a heavy braided pattern on it, and of black velvet. It is derived from the dashing hat worn by Colonel Fabry, the "Blue Devil of France"—called the Fabry tam. It is full of spirit, and chooses for trimming one of those interesting painted paddle quills. Of course it must be worn at a daring angle which assures it success with the younger set who aspire to looking a bit reckless and sophisticated.

The third hat is just a smart velvet shape for the street, trimmed with a flat feather band and a small fan of plaited ribbon. It is something of a tricorn and has all the vivacity and trimness of that undying favorite. It is a good hat for all-round wear, and should be considered by those who want a hat that will rob them of a few years.

Test Before Dyeing.

If all goods were pure there would be fewer dye troubles. Satin is often nothing but cotton with a silk face, silk is sometimes doctored to such a degree that there is little of the pure material in it, mercerized cotton masquerades as linen, and cotton is given the appearance of wool. Home dyers should know how to test materials in order to know the special kind of dye for the fabric. Always fray a few threads each way of your goods and apply a match. Cotton flames up and burns like a bit of punk without odor; wool just singes, does not flame and the odor from it is that peculiar to animal fibers; silk burns less freely than cotton. A piece of silk weighted heavily with chemicals if set on fire will have all the silk burnt off, and the piece of material will be left in its original shape, and this kind of so-called silk will come from the dyepot a limp rag.

Polka Dots Grow Larger.

Polka dots have developed into larger coin spots and are all the more effective for it in the country clothes. These coin spotted materials serve also a good decorative purpose for collars, cuffs and revers on the dark blue or biege serve and gaberdine dresses and suits, as well as for linings of the capes in the new three-piece street costumes.

A Hat of Velvet Ribbon.

A new hat is fashioned entirely of the narrowest width of velvet ribbon in a sort of gray blue. This is braided together and made into a soft high crown that crushes down all around and posed on a tiny cloche brim, with a band of the narrow ribbon about the crown base and many little ends of the ribbon forming an ornament at the front.

Naturally.

A vender of the new "barrel" skirt was extolling his wares in presence of a customer's husband. "No lady should be without one of these skirts," said the shopman. "Well, of course not," dryly responded the husband, who was something of a wag; "she should be within it."

No Vacation Trips in Germany.

The Prussian ministry of communications issued an urgent appeal to the public not to travel. The people are begged not to leave their homes unless for the most compelling reasons of health or recuperation. There will be neither holiday trains nor excursion rates this summer, though extra trains will now and then be run in case of special emergency. The public is reminded that, while food in the country is plentiful here and there, the only "certain" way of getting anything to eat is to stay at home.

Properly Protected Plates

The two most important elements in a battery are—the plates and the insulation that keeps the plates apart.

Willard Threaded Rubber Insulation properly protects the plates from contact with one another.

Electricity can't work through the rubber, the acid electrolyte doesn't corrode it. And thousands of tiny threads make possible the vitally essential movement of the electrolyte from plate to plate.

Spare Only 13 Acres

Government is Guaranteeiny a Price of $2 a Bushel for all Wheat Seeded This Year—Big Acreage in DeKalb County.

The call of the secretary of agriculture for increasing the wheat acreage of Indiana 25 per cent, means the sowing of 2,800,000 acres of wheat this fall. Although this seems large at first thought, it is not large when we make a short analysis.

There are in Indiana, 215,800 farms. If the above wheat acreage were equally distributed, there would be only 13.4 acres on each farm. The average farm contains 58 acres. If we discard 40 per cent. of the land as being unsuited to wheat production we could grow 3,000,000 acres and still only grow wheat on the same land every four years. Surely this is not too often.

Many farmers are now getting $75 an acre for their wheat crop. There are some, of course, who are not doing so well, but on the average, farmers of the state are making more money on the wheat crop than ever before. This is stimulating a great deal of interest and the guarantee of $2.00 per bushel which the government has placed on the crop to be seeded this fall is sufficient argument that the wheat is needed.

Many farmers who have usually grown a large acreage of oats will this year sow considerable wheat. Many farmers in Benton, Newton and White counties have made this decision. In these sections 60 bushels of oats to the acre is considered a good yield. At present prices such a crop would be worth about $34 an acre. This same land will produce 20 to 25 bushels of wheat to the acre. At $2 per bushel wheat is much more profitable than oats and for that reason a greatly increased acreage of wheat will be sown this fall.

By sowing some wheat instead of all oats, labor is better distributed at harvest time, as wheat is cut before oats. It is also easier to obtain a good stand of clover in wheat than in oats. These are points which the thinking farmers are carefully considering and will add much impetus to the increased wheat production movement.

Thieves Get $500

The McLaughlin & Son garage at Garrett, was entered early Friday morning, it was learned Saturday, and over $500 worth of Goodyear tires were stolen. As yet no clue as to who the thieves might have been has been found. The garage was closed at 12 o'clock Thursday night and it was when Dr. M. E. Klinger of Garrett, who keeps his automobile at the garage, went to get his machine early Friday morning to answer a call, that the robbery was discovered.

Dr. Klinger was unable to unlock the door with his key and he called Mr. McLaughlin, who after considerable effort gained entrance to the building. The men found that the lock had been sprung and that some one had been in the garage since the door had been locked.

It was found that the stock room had also been broken into and a number of large sized Goodyear tires stolen. Other cheap tires in the stock room were untouchd. The office was not disturbed and there was money in the safe which was untouched.

HEAVY LOADING BIG HELP TO B & O RAILROAD.

Heavier loading enabled the Baltimore and Ohio railroad to save the use of 6238 cars in the handling of less than carload freight in July, compared with the same month last year. At the same time the company handled 12,000 more tons of this class of freight in 4,000 less cars, according to the report of the transportation department which has just been compiled.

Efficiency of this sort is contributing largely to the ability of the railroads to meet the transportation requirements of the government in helping win the war while providing the service called for by the abnormal business needs of the country.

Last month the Baltimore and Ohio handled 1,393,660 cars in freight trains, 928,684 of which were loaded. While the loaded car movement is indicative of the general business activity, hot weather interferred somewhat. It is expected that the company will handle more than 1,000,000 loaded cars monthly during the fall.

How to Save Poultry Feed

Purdue University Specialists Say That Chickens when Past Pullet Year are not Profitable as Layers.

"The average poultry flock of Indiana needs culling," claims the Poultry Division of Purdue university. Travel over the state this summer has shown that a number of superannuated old hens still exist in too many flocks, eat expensive feed and don't lay enough eggs to pay the feed bill. They are like the boarder cow. It seems common practice now to cut down on the feed when it would be better to cull out undesirable stock and abundantly feed the good ones.

The pullet year is the most profitable part of the fowl's life. Only the exceptional hens can be kept through a second winter at a profit unless they have additional value as breeders. Hens on the farm now over two years old should be consumed at home or sold. If the farmer doubts his ability to distinguish a hen's age, he can put one hog ring on the right leg of each bird as she ends her pullet year. This is inexpensive and easy of identification.

If feed is scarce as well as expensive, then it will pay to sell all the young roosters that won't make money and all the stunted, undersized and slow growing pullets. Anything that will not lay or grow profitably should be sold, leaving their feed for poultry that is more profitable.

The females that have just finished their first year should be sold as soon as they quit laying, unless for some reason or other a few must be kept as next year's breeders. The Purdue experiment station has found that if October 1st be the date for culling, 95 per cent. of the birds that had been poor layers would be pretty well moulted and would show the yellow color in head and shanks.

The good layer would either not have started moulting or would be ragged, but in good vigorous condition with all her beak, shanks and skin color "laid out" and absent. The early moulter was the poor layer and will seldom get back into laying before the late moulter and then not until near Christmas time. The late moulter was the heavy layer and is the kind to use for breeding.

Cull the stock and save the feed, but cull the right ones.

Future Dates

ARRANGE DATES FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

Concord township will have their meeting September 2. Concord, with Jackson township had already arranged their dates before the county officers planned the time.

Wilmington township's date is September 9; Butler township, September 16; Fairfield and Stafford, September 23; Smithfield and Newville, September 30; Spencer and Keyser, October 7; Union, October 14; Grant, October 21, and Richland, October 28. Franklin and Troy townships dates have been left open for the present.

George Beugnot, county president, sent out the following appeal, with the above dates, Friday, to township officers: "If each township president or secretary will notify me of the place and the hour of their convention, I will try to be present, or have some other county officer there.

"Kindly leave room on your program for a short talk by the county officer who may be with you. No officer will be expected to take up much time. In arranging our programs let us remember to have live questions, vital to the upbuilding of the Sunday school, discussed."

LOCAL ITEMS IN BRIEF.

Mrs. Hannah Ulm and granddaughter, went to Springfield, O., today, to visit her children at that place.

Growing potatoes from nothing more than sprouts is the feat accomplished by Mrs. Leo Gaskill of Kendallville, a former resident of Auburn. Last spring Mrs. Gaskill took sprouts from potatoes and planted them. At the outset she had very little faith in getting results but finely small plants began to appear and from several of the hills of potatoes that developed she succeeded in digging eighteen tubers. The intensive drive for more food, when spuds were selling for $4 per bushel has hence brought about new methods of growing food products.

Profitable Convention

The Quarterly Sunday School Convention of Concord Township was held Sunday afternoon and evening at the Concord Church. The afternoon session was well attended and opened by singing, Growing Dearer Each Day. Rev. J. C. Coons leading in prayer, Mrs. Jane Hull of Concord, read the scripture lesson and prayer was offered by Earl Wyatt, county vice president. The township president J. P. Buckingham, who presided, reported that he had visited all of the schools in the township and found them all in good working order but not quite up to the standard and spoke of the few things which must be done to bring the schools up. We must have a 5% gain in attendance also a library of not less than ten books. Mrs. Amanda Spayd read a paper on "Our township conventions—what are they for and how can we receive the most good from them. She says a Sunday School convention is a community affair where we meet to talk over the best methods to employ in running the local Sunday Schools, just as the farmers hold their community gatherings to learn the best methods of planting and sowing. No money pays a larger dividend than that spent in moral uplift. John Knight led the discussion and brought questions for every one to think about. M. T. Bishop said no one can get any good from a convention who will not attend, as the formers meet to save crops the Sunday School workers meet to save souls. Joseph Haifley said officers should come and find out their needs. Mr. Buckingham said more should be present to help make out the programs. F. B. Leighty gave a splendid talk on "The Growing need of the Sunday School," saying the school should be run on practical lines and not so much on theory. There is too much of a separation between the church and Sunday School that the children are the same as told to go home when the benediction is pronounced at the closing of the school. Teachers training is very important, also that attractiveness is one of the needs of both Sunday School and church. B. S. Sheffer led the discussion which followed, telling briefly of the Sunday Schools of fifty years ago and also urged the need of teacher training. He said one of the growing needs was more room. We must have the feeling that our school is one of the best and that each individual is doing his best to make it so. One of the interesting features of the convention was the query box conducted by Earl Wyatt. A short business session was held. The collection taken was given to the Concord Auxiliary of the Red Cross, it amounting to $2.06. Song God be with you. Dismissed by the Rev. Coons. Several special numbers were sung by the Concord choir.

Evangelist's Son Killed

A dispatch to the Journal-Gazette from Warsaw, dated Aug. 31, is as follows: "Dwight Newlin, aged 14 years, son of Evangelist and Mrs. O. A. Newlin, of Winona Lake, was almost instantly killed shortly before noon on Friday when he was run over by a large touring car driven by Dr. James A. Gordon, pastor of the Winona Federated church. The Newlin boy was riding his bicycle and crossed the street as Dr. Gordon was backing from his garage. He was caught by the machine and thrown under the wheels, which passed over his body twice. Fred King and Charles B. Taylor, who witnessed the accident, assisted the injured boy to his feet and he walked to the sidewalk, saying that he was not hurt but that he could not get his breath. Shortly after being taken to his home, he passed away. Physicians were unable to find any fracture and internal injuries caused his death. The boy, who was an only child, an older brother having died some time ago, was a favorite at the park. He had a paper route and was making collections when the accident occurred. The parents and Dr. Gordon are prostrated with grief."

W. C. T. U. Meeting

The W. C. T. U. held a very interesting meeting at the home of Rev. and Mrs. L. W. Spayd on Friday afternoon. Fifteen members responded to the roll call. Five guests were present, of whom four gave their names as members. They were Mesdames Eva Sheffer, Belle Ridgway, Arminta Northrup and Sadie Reeder. The topic was "Franchise." Some leaflets were read and some very good talks given along this line. After the program, the election of officers was held, the following officers being elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Jennie Sechler; vice president, Mrs. Amanda Spayd; secretary, Mrs. Lora Leighty; treasurer, Mrs. Ada Bassett.

A contest for new members, which had been on since March, closed with this meeting. Twenty-one new members were gained thereby. The union had been divided into two bodies, one under the captaincy of Mrs. Amanda Spayd, the "yellow" side; and the other, the "white" side, under Mrs. Elizabeth Mumma. The latter won by three points. The new members are Belle Keesler, Alice Copp, Callie Ridgway, Maude Jenkins, Etta Webb, Cecile Pond, Minnie Ulm, Winnie Shook, Mattie Bowman, Belle Barney, Elnora Kinsey, Nellie Perry, Harriet Bills, Ina Wyatt, Eva Sheffer, Arminta Northrup, Bessie Tustison, Ella Patterson, Arline Koch, Sadie Reeder and Helen Webb. The St. Joe union now has seventy-five active and two honorary members.

Nurses Wanted

Owing to the fact that there are in the state many nurses who desire to become Red Cross nurses and are prevented from so doing because they have not taken the state examination and received a certificate from the State Board of Registration and Examination of Nurses, the State Council of Defense has recommended that a special examination be held by the State Board to provide for the emergency.

The State Board of Registration and Examination of Nurses will, therefore, hold a special examination, only for those nurses who desire to enter the war service before December 1st., at the State House in Indianapolis on the 12th and 13th of September. All those desiring to take this examination should communicate with Miss Edna Humphrey, Secretary of the Board at Crawfordsville, Indiana, before September 8th.

The Red Cross accepts only registered nurses for war service and it is absolutely necessary that those who intend to enter such service take the examination of the State Board.

Insulation

Every part of your electrical system must be made leak proof by insulation.

Inside your battery is the most important insulation of all—that which separates the positive from the negative plates, for this prevents the battery from "short circuiting," and thus putting the whole system out of commission.

In the Still Better Willard, the insulation is made of durable, acid-resisting rubber.

Thus Willard Threaded Rubber Insulation means a better insulated battery, a more durable, more efficient battery.

WOMEN'S CENSUS AIDS FOOD CAUSE

Few in State Show Lack Of Interest in Hoover Campaign Undertaking.

FUNNY RUMORS CIRCULATED

Governor Named Fred A. Sims, Former Secretary of State, to the State Board of Tax Commissioners, to Succeed Phil Zoercher.

Indianapolis.—Indiana women are being asked to do the very simple thing of signing a card pledging their support to Hoover's campaign for economies in the home, and, according to reports reaching the office of H. E. Barnard, the Hoover representative in Indiana, women in a few localities have resented the taking of this census.

A prominent woman engaged in the taking of the census in a southern Indiana county reported Wednesday that "a few women have been rude enough even to closing doors in faces of aids and in a certain German community set the dogs on them."

Many false rumors seem to have been spread among women in a few localities, one of the reports circulated by sinister influences being to the effect that this census is a scheme to seize canned fruit and other food. This is, of course, wholly untrue. The signing of the cards is wholly a voluntary act.

No Obligation Created.

No obligation goes with the signing except that women state their willingness to conserve the food supply, especially wheat. The principal reason for taking the census is to obtain names and addresses of persons to whom the Hoover literature may be sent.

"It is scarcely believable that there are women suspicious enough to believe such silly yarns," said Mr. Barnard. "Some women unfortunately are too self-centered to be willing to give any aid to the war, even to the extent of practicing economy, and there are some who have too much conceit to believe they can learn any more about household management. The big majority of women, of course, are signing the cards and are glad to co-operate with the government in every way. The whole country has confidence in Hoover."

Mischief in Some Counties.

A letter received by Mr. Barnard from a woman assisting in the patriotic work of enlisting the names of all housekeepers of the state tells of the mischief being circulated in some counties. It follows:

"I have had splendid help among the workers for the food pledge campaign, but the results are rather disappointing. While some have responded readily, others have shown suspicion and distrust, others have been rude even to closing doors in faces of aids and in a certain German community set the dogs on them. There seems to be some sinister influence at work, for many women have signed the cards and afterward withdrew their names. Many think it is a scheme for drafting them and taking them from their homes or for confiscating their stores."

Sims Named on Tax Board.

Fred A. Sims, former secretary of state, former chairman of the Republican state committee in Indiana and well-known as a member of the state board of tax commissioners for years, has been appointed a member of the state board of tax commissioners by Gov. James P. Goodrich, to succeed Phil Zoercher, Democrat, who was appointed to serve an unexpired term several months ago. The appointment of Mr. Sims will entitle him to service on the board for a period of four years from September 1.

It has been known for many months that Governor Goodrich intended to name Mr. Sims to the state tax board as soon as Mr. Sims could so arrange his business affairs that he could accept the position. The governor long has regarded Sims perhaps the highest practical authority on taxing matters in Indiana. His long record as a member of the tax board in former years was without criticism.

Goodrich Has Typhoid Fever.

Governor Goodrich is suffering from typhoid fever at the Methodist hospital. The nature of his illness makes it certain that he will be confined to the hospital for some time, though the attending physicians hope soon to allay the fever. No visitors are admitted to his room and request is made that no friends seek permission to see him. His physicians say that for a speedy recovery he needs absolute rest.

Patriotic Music Is Urged.

An appeal for patriotic music as a feature of every county fair in the state is urged in letters which have been sent out to the secretary of every fair association by Horace Ellis, chairman of the educational section of the state council of defense. The letter states that a concerted movement along this line "will tend to advance the work of the council in these stressful times." The plan of placing a piano in the grand stand and having a local singer to direct the crowd in singing patriotic songs is suggested.

Governor Commissions Judge.

Governor Goodrich Wednesday formally commissioned Wm. T. Gleason to be judge of the superior court of Vigo county, appointing him as the successor of Judge Fred W. Beal, who has resigned to take effect August 31.

Roadside Markets.

"The roadside market will benefit both producer and consumer," states Prof. C. G. Woodbury, chief in horticulture at Purdue university. "It will tend to increase the consumption of these healthful foods, at the same time reducing the price to the consumer. Much waste will thus be prevented, while the farmer will secure a reasonable profit for his labor. While thus benefiting every American, more staple foods will also be released for needy Europe.

"The simplest plan which will interest the public in roadside markets requires a bulletin board in front of the farm home. This bulletin may take the form of a blackboard or poster, on which should be neatly printed a list of the articles for sale. Sales will be increased by displaying a small basket of fruit or vegetables. Make the price as well as the product attractive."

No Special Session Now.

Indiana state officials, who have been digging into the coal situation for weeks, are satisfied that the prices fixed by President Wilson would materially benefit Indiana coal consumers. Governor Goodrich issued a statement through the public service commission expressing gratification at the action of the president. The governor said there would be no special session of the legislature at this time because of the president's action. He said that he would dismiss the question from his mind for a month, and that later economic questions may make a special session necessary. "Indiana, with the entire country, approves without reservation the step that has been taken by President Wilson in fixing war prices for coal," the statement said. "The price which he has fixed for the Indiana and other bituminous fields is a fair price. It will yield a reasonable profit to the operators. To the consumer it will reduce the prices which have been characterized as 'outrageous.' This step, taken by the president will make unnecessary, at least for the time being, the calling of a special session of the Indiana legislature. Conditions may arise which might necessitate a special session, but at least for a month that matter will be laid aside. Each community in the state can find out the freight rate on coal to it, and with the mine price, determine whether the retailer is asking a fair price," the governor said. He intimated that if any attempts at extortion are made he would call the legislature in session and take drastic steps to check abuses. He said: "We are ready for a special session any day."

Tells of Wheat Resource.

The call of the secretary of agriculture for increasing the wheat acreage of Indiana 25 per cent means the sowing of 2,000,000 acre of wheat this fall.

"Although this seems large at first thought, it is not large when we make a short analysis," says G. I. Christie of the agricultural extension department at Purdue. "There are, in Indiana, 215,800 farms. If the specified wheat acreage were equally distributed, there would be only 13.4 acres on each farm. The average farm has 98 acres. If we discard 40 per cent of the land as being unsuited to wheat production we could grow 3,000,000 acres and still only grow wheat on the same land once every four years. Surely this is not too often.

"Many farmers are now getting $75 an acre for their wheat crop. There an acre for their wheat crop. There are some, of course, who are not doing so well, but on the average, farmers of the state are making more money on the wheat crop than ever before. This is stimulating a great deal of interest and the guarantee of $2 a bushel which the government has placed on the crop to be seeded this fall is sufficient argument that the wheat is needed.

"Many farmers who have usually grown a large acreage of oats will this year sow much wheat. Many farmers in Benton, Newton and White counties have made this decision, as is shown by the many inquiries about seed wheat that are daily coming to J. C. Beavers, state leader of the wheat campaign. In these counties 60 bushels of oats to the acre is regarded a good yield. At present prices such a crop would be worth about $34 an acre. This same land will produce 20 and 25 bushels of wheat to the acre. At $2 a bushel wheat is much more profitable than oats, and for this reason a greatly increased acreage of wheat will be sown this fall.

"By sowing some wheat instead of all oats, labor is better distributed at harvest time, as wheat is cut before oats. It is also easier to obtain a good stand of clover in wheat than in oats. These are points which thinking farmers are carefully considering and will add much impetus to the increased wheat production movement."

License Fees Prorated.

The state board of accounts holds that the city controller has the right to prorate all city saloon license fees for the year 1918, when they become due. Under this opinion the saloonkeepers will not be forced to pay license for the full year, but for the three months of next year, prior to the enforcement of the state-wide prohibition law. The state-wide prohibition law, although providing for the prorating of the county liquor license fee, did not specifically specify about city fees.

WON'T YOU HELP DEFEAT KAISER?

Then Use More Apples This Fall So Meat and Wheat May Be Sent Abroad.

Federal Food Administration Plans to Aid Horticulturists Market Great Fruit Crop Among American People.

Word has gone forth that America must use all of her great apple crop this year in order to save wheat and meat for the support of our allies in war against Germany. Uncle Sam is taking keen interest in the fruit harvest of 1917, because it is vital to victory, and through the food administration is planning a vast "consumer campaign" that will create an unprecedented demand for apples for home use.

This year's apple crop calls for intelligent handling. The latest government reports indicate a crop of about 190,000,000 bushels. That is a little below normal. Good prices are assured for all honestly packed, first quality apples, and also for honestly packed, selected second grades, which government experts say can be put into storage. When the crop is big it does not pay to store second grades, but this year, despite the fact that we cannot ship our usual 2,000,000 barrels of apples abroad, because shipping space is precious, we should be able to get fair prices for all good apples at home.

Careless packing of poor quality fruit has always been one of the chief causes of market instability and unsatisfactory prices to the growers. This year the whole apple industry is co-operating to remove this market handicap. There has never been an apple year such as this one is going to be. Growers have never been able to get together and engage and finance a national educational campaign among consumers to increase apple consumption. This year the situation makes it necessary for the United States government, through the food administration, to conduct a consumer's campaign of publicity on behalf of the apple. This campaign will begin while the crop is being sent to market, and will probably continue until the last apple is eaten up late next spring. So the grower has three great incentives for grading, packing and storing this crop with especial care.

1. It is a good crop and calls for care.

2. The government will encourage apple eating and apple storage and will discourage speculation that raises the price abnormally.

3. We must eat up at home more than two million barrels of apples, which would ordinarily be exported.

To get the best of the crop to the market in prime condition it must be picked carefully at the time of maturity and promptly cooled in temporary storage, and then skillfully graded and packed. Second-grade fruit should not go into barrels or boxes. If it cannot be marketed in bulk in near-by consuming centers, then it should be worked up into byproducts along with the culls.

There has been a gratifying improvement in apple marketing the past two or three years. Western apples are boxed to strictly honest standards, by the great co-operative growers' organizations in Washington, Oregon, California, Idaho and Colorado. The eastern barrel apple has also been wonderfully improved in New York and other states. Because apples are honestly packed and give the best possible value for the money, there is an increase in the consumer demand. Retail merchants who were formerly almost afraid to buy apples in barrels, because they were not sure of getting marketable values for their money, are now buying freely and in confidence. This good work makes it possible for the government to go further and encourage the use of apples as a war-time food measure.

Because the bulk of the crop will be picked by volunteer workers this year, and put into common storage until the grower can find time to grade and pack, there will be an opportunity to give closer personal attention to the grading and packing than might be the case if the crop were handled as in peace times. For the grower who desires instructions in apple packing, the department of agriculture at Washington has information in bulletin form. These bulletins can be secured free by writing to the department. Growers will do well to obtain a few copies for their pickers and packers.

BIG CROPS IN WESTERN CANADA

Good Yields of Wheat, Splendid Production of Pork, Beef, Mutton and Wool.

The latest reports give an assurance of good grain crops throughout most of Western Canada, where the wheat, oats and barley are now being harvested, about ten days earlier than last year. Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are all "doing their bit" in a noble way towards furnishing food for the allies.

While the total yield of wheat will not be as heavy as in 1915, there are indications that it will be an average crop in most of the districts. A letter received at the St. Paul office of the Canadian Government, from a farmer near Delia, Alberta, says harvest in that district is one month earlier than last year. His wheat crop is estimated at 35 bushels per acre, while some of his neighbors will have more. The average in the district will be about 30 bushels per acre. Now, with the price of wheat in the neighborhood of $2 per bushel, it is safe to say that there will be very few farmers but will be able to bank from forty to fifty dollars per acre after paying all expenses of seeding, harvesting and threshing, as well as taxes. The price of land in this district is from $25 to $30 per acre. What may be said of this district will apply to almost any other in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. Many farmers have gone to Western Canada from the United States in the past three or four years, who having purchased lands, had the pleasure of completing the payments before they were due. They have made the money out of their crops during the past couple of years, and if they are as successful in the future as in the past they will have put themselves and their families beyond all possibility of lack of money for the rest of their lives. It is not only in wheat that the farmers of Western Canada are making money. Their hogs have brought them wealth, and hogs are easy to raise there—barley is plentiful and grass abundant, and the climate just the kind that hogs glory in. The price is good and likely to remain so for a long time.

A few days since a farmer from Daysland, Alberta, shipped a carload of hogs to the St. Paul market and got a higher price than was ever before paid on that market. Two million three hundred and seventy-seven thousand two hundred and fifty dollars was received at Winnipeg for Western hogs during the first six months of this year. 181,575 hogs were sold at an average price of $15 per cwt., and had an average weight of 200 pounds each. The raising of hogs is a profitable and continually growing industry of Western Canada, and this class of stock is raised as economically here as anywhere on the North American continent. There is practically no hog disease, and immense quantities of food can be produced cheaply.

It has been told for years that the grasses of Western Canada supply to both beef and milk producers the nutritive properties that go to the development of both branches. The stories that are now being published by dairymen and beef cattle men verify all the predictions that have ever been made regarding the country's importance in the raising of both beef and dairy cattle. The sheep industry is developing rapidly. At a sale at Calgary 151,453 pounds of wool were disposed of at sixty cents a pound. At a sale at Edmonton 60,000 pounds were sold at even better prices than those paid at Calgary. The total clip this season will probably approximate two million pounds. Many reports are to hand showing from six to eight pounds per fleece. 35 carloads were sent to the Toronto market alone.—Advertisement.

The Test.

"How shall I know whether or not I love a girl well enough to marry her?"

"Well, my boy, imagine her on a hot, sticky day, bending over a washtub, scrubbing your underclothes as your mother used to do. Picture her, as you enter, stopping her work and wiping the perspiration from her face with the corner of her apron. If you feel that you would still care to kiss her; that she'd still look as good to you as she does in her party togs, go right ahead and marry her. She's the girl."

SHEEP'S CLOTHING

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

LYDIA IS VASTLY AMUSED BY PETER TRAFT'S WHIMSICAL WAY OF MAKING LOVE, BUT SHE IS MORE SERIOUSLY IMPRESSED WITH THE PERSONALITY OF QUOIN WHO SEEMS TO HER THE TYPICAL YANKEE

SYNOPSIS.—A well-bred young Englishwoman, nervous and suspicious, finds when she boards the steamer Alsatia, bound from Liverpool to New York, that her stateroom mate is Mrs. Amelia Beggarstaff, a fascinating, wealthy American widow of about sixty years. The girl introduces herself as Lucy Carteret and says she is going to America to meet her father. Lucy's behavior puzzles Mrs. Beggarstaff, who is vastly surprised to find the girl in possession of a magnificent necklace, stolen from a museum some time previously and passes the news on to her friend, Quoin, a private detective on board. Lucy, dressing in the dark in her stateroom, hears a mysterious conversation between two men just outside her window and recognizes one of them as Thaddeus Craven, her father, whom she hasn't seen for five years. She confesses to Mrs. Beggarstaff that she is in reality Lydia Craven. The girl discovers her father and young Mrs. Merriless, a charming widow, engaged to be married. Mrs. Merriless is bewildered for a moment because Craven had always posed as a bachelor, but she and Lydia like one another. Craven tells Lydia he secretly represents the British government in the United States. Peter Traft falls in love with Lydia and Mrs. Merrilees displays a magnificent necklace which she says she's going to give Lydia for a wedding present.

CHAPTER VII.

—8—

Mrs. Beggarstaff was right, who herself admitted that she was always right: Lydia was a very happy girl. She had, indeed, never been so happy since those memorable days when Craven's rare, capricious, and always unexpected appearances in England had invariably signalized his amazing sprees of paternal indulgence—frolics from which, as from the nirvana of fairy tales, one emerged in childish demoralization to renew acquaintance with the hard and grimy facts of life as lived in Mrs. Grummle's Bloomsbury lodging house, or with the chilly routine of the Misses Stint's Select Academy for Daughters of Gentlemen.

She lived those days in delicious excitement. She would be a strange girl of twenty had her imagination not quickened to the romance inherent in the words secret agent. To think herself the object of stealthy surveillance, as daughter and confidante of a past master of devious diplomacy; to think she must ever keep her courage bright in the shadow of nameless dangers, be forever jealous of the great secret, comport herself always warily—in these persuasions lay delight as deep and abiding as that of a girl playing the mischief at her first bal masque.

Not infrequently she would catch Craven regarding her with his dark and quizzical smile; and then she would flush and smile spiritedly in return, thrilled to think he read her thoughts and understood.

One circumstance alone flawed the perfect jewel of her happiness—the second and final disappearance of her sardonyx cameo.

The first time Lydia had missed it it had turned up safe and sound before bedtime in its place on top of the chest of drawers. But the next day it vanished again and finally. And though for a time her hope ran high that the finder would return the trinket in view of the rather heavy reward posted by Craven, when nothing of the sort happened she felt forced to accept the hypothesis that the clasp had worked loose when she had been lounging beside the rail, delivering the brooch to the sea.

In her new relationship with her father Lydia found several friendships that, however young, promised permanence.

For one, Mrs. Beggarstaff had unquestionably taken a fancy to Lydia, which the girl was quick to divine and reciprocate with a frank and—if undemonstrative—real affection. And the Dowager Dragon was daily wasting much time in amiable bickering with Craven about his daughter's future, openly discountenancing his intention to make Lydia part of his menage; at least until there should be a second Mrs. Craven to keep his house in order—and its master, into the bargain.

"Though," she once amended acridly in the presence of Mrs. Merrilees, "as for that, to my taste, Betty's altogether too frivolous to make a proper duenna. Mark my words, Tad, just as soon as that pretty featherweight head finds out life with you is not one round of pleasure, she's going to cut loose and lead you a dance that won't leave a breath in your fat little body. And then what will become of the child?"

"Oh, blow your meddling!" Craven retorted with entire good humor. "You forget the 'child' is of age—or will be in another six months. She can take care of herself. If it turns out she can't, I give you permission to use your well-known arts of moral suasion and nag her until she's mad enough to hitch up as companion to a saw-toothed destroyer of reputations like yourself."

"She could do far worse," the Dowager Dragon sniffed; "and will—if I let you have your way."

"Which is just what is going to happen. Lydia and I understand each other, my home's the place for her, and there she goes, straight from the steamer."

When he had detached his fiancee and departed, the Dowager Dragon took up the thread of her discourse with Lydia.

"It's up to you, my dear," she announced. "I mean to say, it's for you to decide. I warn you you'll never be happy. Tad's not old enough to be a father. For that matter, he's not old enough to be a husband. He's heedless, irresponsible, as flighty as Betty Merrilees. He never has grown up, and he never will. He's Peter Pan, with all the innocence expurgated."

Here the Dowager Dragon paused and, receiving no response, regarded with suspicion the object of her solicitude. "What are you smiling at, pray?" she demanded in dudgeon. "Do you think I'm merely blustering for your amusement?"

"I beg your pardon," Lydia said meekly, hastening to erase a smile; the idea of the chief agent of Downing Street in America being heedless, irresponsible and flighty having proved too much for her sense of the ridiculous. "You made me think of something funny. But, please, Mrs. Beggarstaff, don't say any more. The thing is quite settled; and you don't know how stubborn he is—and I'm his daughter!"

The frown of the Dowager Dragon relaxed, and a crusty smile succeeded. "So be it! I sha'n't contend with you or Tad another minute. But when you see your mistake, remember, my home is always open to you. You're a cheerful snippet, and not a bit hard to look at, and I believe I could grow quite fond of you. Now promise you'll come, if ever you're in trouble. You owe me that consolation at least—if only for being graceful in defeat."

Lydia promising lightly, a placated Dowager Dragon consented to let the subject drop.

Then there was Mrs. Merrilees, who bade fair to prove the sister more than the stepmother, the girl friend more than either, who, once Craven had wheedled her out of her resentment of his putatively negative and innocent deception, seemed to find in Lydia just one more reason for being fond of Craven and viewing with confidence their life after marriage. Though vain and avid of admiration, she seemed incapable of any sort of mean emotion, and was as generous as the good sunlight. An adorable creature!

Peter Traft, the third of three new-found friends, was a riddle Lydia couldn't read, but found endlessly diverting. Publicly sentimental about Lydia, brazenly seeking every opportunity to seclude her with himself, once this was accomplished, he flouted sentiment, ridiculed the world (including himself), and kept her in a state of amusement that precluded discouragement of his eccentric wooing.

"I want you to know me as I really am," he informed her on one occasion. "If I should seem as sober-sided and solemn as your next adorer, you'd marry me in ignorance of my true character."

"But I haven't the slightest intention of marrying you, Mr. Traft."

"That's a fine line," he commented admiringly. "What you heroines of modern fiction would do without it heaven only knows! It's certain our novelists don't, or they'd invent something less stereotyped. But you mustn't forget it really means nothing in the first chapters. Along about page three hundred and twenty-one it's a signal either for the clench or for the bouncer."

"I do wish you'd talk sensibly in language I can understand."

"As for the language, if it cramps your style, Miss Craven, believe me, I'll slip the rollers under it and give it the gate! But as for talking sensibly—not I, not while sparring for wind and trying to figure how I stand with you. It wouldn't be fair to snare your affections with the impression that the architect of my dome used any building material more substantial than funny-bones."

"Do you mean me to understand you're incurably frivolous?"

"Rather!"

"Isn't it a pretty poor recommendation for a suitor to advance?"

"Do you think so?" He appeared to ponder this gravely. "But I can't see that. Think how deadly life would be with a man who took everything seriously—himself, for instance, and the candidate for president on the Prohibition ticket, and Lloyd George, and —ah—the Anti-Woman Suffrage movement. There's only one thing I'm ready to promise to take seriously. Now pretend you don't get me!"

"You are quite, quite hopeless!"

"Wrong again: I was never more hopeful. First thing you know you'll be lying awake nights wondering if I can possibly be as silly as I sound, and thinking what a pity 'tis if true; and when you come to that stage, it'll be all over but the rice and old shoes and Niagara Falls!"

"Certainly you must be an incurable optimist!"

"You think so? I say, that's an awfully good sign! You're thinking about me already!"

But of the four it was Quoin who most impressed Lydia's impressionable imagination. His seemed an individuality rarely simple and straightforward, to which latency and indirection must be altogether foreign. He was, Lydia understood, a criminal investigator of unusual attainments; yet he utterly lacked every idiosyncrasy of the "great" detective of fiction. He was a long, lank man, with a thin face of strong features. His wide, thin lips drooped quizzically at their corners. And his eyes were dark and, normally, deep with humorous expression. To Lydia's notion he was the Yankee type incarnate, but without that uncouthness she had been bred to expect.

* * * * * * *

Because the Alsatia, groping her blind way at half-speed through wrappings of fog ever more opaque, persisted in making night hideous with her unearthly whoop of warning, the concert all but fell flat. Only Craven's inexhaustible enthusiasm saved the function.

When it was over Lydia, announcing her intention of going to bed, delayed only to say good-night to Peter Traft on the upper companionway landing, near the doorway to the port side of the boat deck. One-half of this double door was open. Beyond it was nothingness—a flat wall of gray but feebly tinted with artificial light.

Then, descending to the promenade deck, she turned aft to her stateroom, and was about to enter when she heard her name called in Craven's voice, and—since she had left him only a few minutes before the center of an animated group in the music room—with pardonable surprise she discovered the man coming swiftly toward her from the after part of the ship.

"Just to say good-night!" he explained hastily, folding his daughter in the tenderest of embraces; and then in a rapid whisper, "Meet me on deck—this deck—to port—fifth stanchion aft from the door—in an hour. If anyone seems to be watching you, go back!" And again aloud, "Good-night, dear child, good-night!" he murmured fondly, releasing her, and hurried forward.

Almost without her knowledge the knob turned in Lydia's grasp; and when she found herself alone in that dark stateroom her hands trembled so with excitement that for a moment she fumbled in vain for the switch.

Watch for startling developments described in the next installment—something big coming!

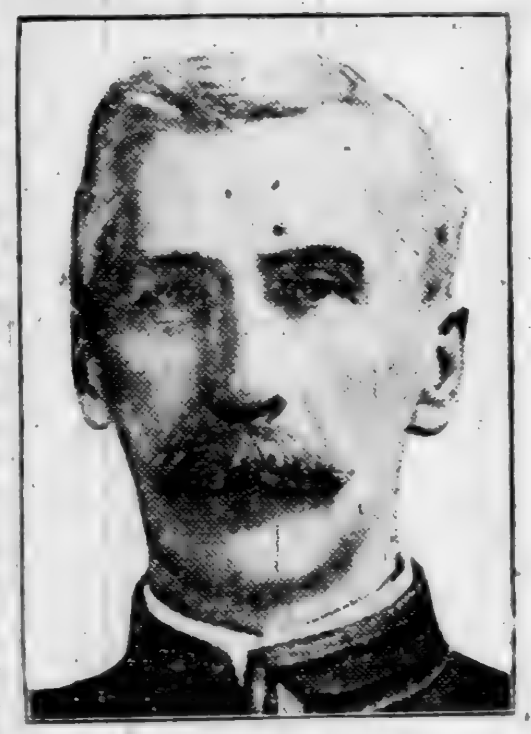
LEADER IN SPANISH POLITICS

Count Romanones is accounted by men who are in touch with the extraordinarily tangled Spanish politics as the most powerful individual in Spanish politics today. He is in his early fifties. He entered politics when he was thirty-two years old, and since then has been a member of seven governments. Time after time he has held office because even his political opponents conceded that he was the one man who could handle the embarrassing situation of the moment. His return to power is confidently predicted by his friends.

Romanones is not of great stature, but compactly built, and evidently a man of great physical strength. Although a member of one of Spain's greatest families, he is extraordinarily democratic in manner and candid in speech. His personal character was once outlined by the present king, in comparing Canalejas, then a power in politics; Dato, premier at present, and Romanones. "If the devil were to enter this room," said the king, "Canalejas would make a speech to him. Dato would offer him a cigarette and win his affections, and Romanones would try to run him through with his sword."

RANKS WITH FOREMOST AVIATORS



Maj. Henry H. Arnold is a pioneer in the aviation service and with Major Foulois and Major Milling is without a peer in America. He received his first instructions as a flyer at the Wright Brothers school in Dayton, O., in 1911. Upon being licensed as an aviator he was assigned with Lieutenant Milling to open the first army school for flying at College Park, Md. Several months later, with Milling, he was ordered to Fort Riley, where the two young officers worked out a system of target location and fire observation with the field artillery forces stationed there.

It was while on this detail that Arnold first demonstrated his remarkable ability and his capability of maintaining his head in an emergency. While making a flight of 1,200 feet in the air his motor went bad and with no inherent stability his machine started on a plunge for the earth. When within 100 feet of the ground and only a question of a few seconds interim between life and a horrible death, he righted his machine and made a safe landing for both himself and the machine.

During the same year he startled the aeronautic world by his remarkable work when he captured the Mackay trophy when it was first offered for reconnaisance work.

NAVY'S HIGHEST MEDICAL OFFICER

In an article in the New York Herald's Magazine of the War, Medical Director William G. Braisted tells of the elaborate precautions taken to safeguard the health of the men in the navy. He says:

"On board the hospital ships are medical officers who have specialized in different lines of work, so that no matter from what the patient suffers he is assured of the best medical and surgical care.

"The enlisted men of the Navy Hospital corps are a highly trained body selected from thousands who apply for admission. The course of training is very severe, and those who are physically unfit or temperamentally unsuited for the work invariably are weeded out during the process.

"In addition to the hospital ship the navy maintains 20 shore hospitals, which are among the finest and best-equipped in any service. The hospital staffs as well as the surgeons on board ship are specialists in the work in which they are engaged. They have chosen their work with a high purpose in view, and they are ready to give their lives if need be to save those who are under their care.

"The duty of the line officer is to destroy the enemy. The duty of the medical officer is to insure the physical fitness of the whole command, and, knowing the spirit which actuates the medical officer of the navy, I can do no more than say that as I have intrusted the health of my own son so would I advise others implicitly to intrust their sons to the care of the men who guard his health should he enlist in the navy."

WE'LL COME AT YOUR CALL OLD GLORY.

By Dr. George H. Brimhall, President Brigham Young University of Utah.

(Air, "I'll Go Where You Want Me to Go.")
Old Glory, wave on, o'er the land of the free,
The home of the fair and the brave;
The land where oppression from mountain to sea
Finds only a place for a grave;
The hands of a nation graps firmly the staff,
In triumph they bear thee along;
We join in the chorus of millions before us,
Still pledging our banner in song.

CHORUS.

We'll come at the call of thy colors, Old Flag;
We're ready for duty today;
We'll serve where you want us to serve, Old Flag;
We'll pay what you want us to pay.

Old Glory, float on, o'er the shop and the farm,
And wave at the mouth of the mine;
And flutter in front of our chairiots of fire,
And over our birds of the brine.
The coo of the babe, and the beat of the drum,
The voice of the nurse and the gun,
Shall swell the refrain, while we sing one again
The song that our fathers have sung.

Wave Glory, wave on, when the world shall be free,
And the peace dove has builded her nest,
When the war clouds no more shall darken the shore,
And the billows of strife are at rest;
When Goddess of Right and the Champion Might
Shall meet at the altar of love,
And under thy stars and thy symbolic bars,
We'll sing with the heavens above,

BRAINSTORM

Puff, brothers, puff—puff the brand
Advertised by S......, the Sunday school man.

—O—

A CERTAIN editor advocates temperance in one column of his paper and advertises cigarettes in another. This is much like the darkey who divided his prayer between "de Lawd" and "de debbil." When asked why he did so, he replied: "Golly! who knows whose han's yeh's gwine to git into fust."

—O—

AN EDITOR and Sunday school officer had to choose between fulfilling his obligation to a cigarette manufacturer or keeping his word to his patrons. He chose to do the former. He can atone for his action by counterfeiting more sanctity on Sunday and by adding fervency to his "The Lord bless you, children."

—O—

THE PRICE of everything the printer uses has advanced, in common with all other commodities; and yet the subscription price of this paper remains the same as it has been for years. The publisher desires to keep at its present rate, $1.00 per annum, and will do so, if possible; but this can not be done unless he have the support of his patrons, particularly those who are in arrears on their subscriptions. Such persons are kindly requested to give the matter immediate attention.

—O—

THE CIGARETTE may be correctly defined as the undertaker's best friend. It doesn't limit its efforts to killing, however: it first damns, and then destroys. It is strange, but nevertheless true, that pillars of the church can be seduced by a few dollars into recommending its use. The cigarette is esteemed by frequenters of pool rooms, and its use adds to the fragrance of the beer-scented, profanity-laden lips of questionable women. Should any of these desire to learn the names of the most popular and destructive brands, the advertising columns of a journal edited by a Sunday school officer will furnish the desired information.

—O—

SEE THE Hicksville News: "We are now thoroughly convinced that there is one honest editor in this country, as we received last week 4 cents as interest on a loan of 50 cents made something over a year ago to a mortal in distress who is now editing one of our exchanges. As the good brother has been able to save 4 cents in little over a year, the query naturally arises: at that rate, how old would he be when he had acquired the wealth of a millionaire?"

The query is easy—dead easy! Judging from Schaufelberger's editorial paroxysms over 50 cents, the writer will be about as old as the Hicksville editor is when he will have recovered sufficiently from the shock of his first experience to indulge for the second time in his life in the novelty of relieving a "mortal in distress"—about the age Schaufberger will be when he learns not to flirt with bad grammar when trying to be cute. In other words, Methuselah will cease to be the champion long-distance liver. By the way, shouldn't Schaufelberger apologize to himself for limiting the number of honest editors to one?

—O—

PRESIDENT WILSON should have the approval of every true American on the position he takes relative to the war in his reply to the pope's peace proposals. He compliments the head of the Catholic church upon the sincerity of his action and joins with the latter in a desire for peace, and then proceeds to give the only terms that America will agree to. The president says (in part): "The object of this war is to deliver the free peoples of the world from the menace and the actual power of a vast military establishment controlled by an irresponsible government, which having secretly planned to dominate the world, proceeded to carry the plan out without regard either to the sacred obligations of treaty or the long established practices and long cherished principles of international action and honor; which chose its own time for the war; delivered its blow fiercely and suddenly; stopped at no barrier either of law or mercy; swept a whole continent with the tide of blood—not the blood of soldiers only, but the blood of innocent women and children also and the helpless poor; and now stands balked but not defeated, the enemy of four-fifths of the world. * * Responsible statesmen must now everywhere see, if they never saw before, that no peace can rest securely upon political or economic restrictions meant to benefit some nations or cripple or embarrass others, upon vindictive action of any sort or any kind of revenge or deliberate injury. The American people have suffered intolerable wrongs at the hands of the imperial German government, but they desire no reprisal upon the German people, who have themselves suffered all things in this war, which they did not choose They believe that peace should rest upon the rights of peoples, not the rights of governments—the rights of peoples great or small, weak or powerful—their equal right to freedom and security and self government and to a participation upon equal terms in the economic opportunities of the world—the German people, of course, included, if they will accept equality and not domination. * * We can not take the word of the present rulers of Germany as a guarantee of anything that is to endure, unless explicitly supported by such conclusive evidence of the will and purpose of the German people themselves as the other peoples of the world would be justified in accepting. Without such guarantees, treaties of settlement, agreements for disarmament, covenants to bind up arbitration in the place of force, territorial adjustments, reconstitutions of small nations, if made with the German government, no man, no nation could now depend on. We must await some new evidences of the purposes of the great peoples of the central powers. God grant that it may be given soon and in a way to restore the confidence of all peoples everywhere in the faith of nations and the possibility of a covenanted peace."

HOUSEWIVES SHOULD NOT WASTE THE IRON IN FOOD.

In another of his articles on food conservation prepared for the United Press, Harry E. Barnard, Indiana food administrator, says.

"We do not live by fat and starch and protein alone, although these three factors are usually set down as the essentials to a complete food. There are other things that are just as necessary to proper nutrition. We must have iron in our food. Man of iron is more than a phrase. Iron is an important food constituent. We get it in most foods but chiefly from the vegetables in which it is present in quantity. Unfortunately our methods of preparing food waste the iron and the amount that is actually available for the system depends not so much upon the quantity present in the raw vegetable as upon the way it is prepared.

"The result of a series of investigations has recently been published in the Journal of Home Economics. They show that the average loss on boiling in the usual way, was for spinach, 43 per cent; for string beans 39 per cent; for navy beans, 38 per cent; for peas, 36 per cent, and for potatoes, 15 per cent. In conclusion they say the vegetables all lost a large percentage of their iron.

"The loss was least for potatoes with their relatively small amount of surface exposed to the water, and most for spinach with its large surface. Potatoes losing about a fifth of the total iron product, peas and beans between one-third and one-half, and spinach approximately one-half. These huge losses show clearly that the method of boiling vegetables in which the water is thrown away is highly wasteful of the important iron constituents.

"No good cook throws away the broth in which she has boiled a knuckle of beef. Some day cooks will stop wasting the rich water in which vegetables are prepared for serving."

GARDENERS ASKED TO GUARD AGAINST FROST DAMAGES.

Weather Bureau Specialists Tell How to Protect Garden Stuff Before and After the First Killing Temperatures.

Don't watch the moon for signs of the first frost; watch the weather bureau. And when the warning from the forecaster comes, as it usually will from 24 to 48 hours in advance, look to the protection of the garden produce which is not yet under cover.

There are a number of ways to forestall the surprise attacks of this Jack Frost person and representatives of the United States weather bureau, realizing that a good deal more produce will be subject to loss from frost this fall than ever before, has advised early preparedness on the part of farmers and gardeners.

First, the specialists suggest, protective coverings should be made ready. Vegetables can not scamper to cover, but the gardener can scamper covering to the vegetables and perhaps save a winter's supply in a short time if he is prepared. Old blankets, tarpaulins, sacks, straw, manure, paper and various other materials may be used for covering. The conditions favorable for the formation of early frosts in the fall are usually of short duration and consequently protective measures ordinarily will have to be employed only for a day or two. After the first fall frost there is generally a return to normal temperatures for a number of days, possibly for a week or more, during which time immature vegetables that have been protected will continue to grow or ripen.

When frost is imminent and protection is not possible or practicable, vegetables likely to be injured should be gathered and canned, dried, pickled, preserved or stored. Those that can not be saved from exposure to freezing should if possible, be gathered before thawing takes place, all vines should if possible, be gathered before thawing takes place. In the case of potatoes, especially sweet potatoes, all vines should be cut off at the surface of the ground after the occurrence of frost.

Tomatoes may be pulled up, plants and all, and hung tops downward in a dark place, preferably a cellar. When treated in this way the fruit will ripen nicely and slowly and will be available for table use for a long time after the plants have been removed from the soil.

Fruit that is very immature should be removed from the vines and may be used for pickling or in other ways. If facilities for hanging the vines are lacking, the tomatoes nearing full growth will ripen satisfactorily if wrapped in paper and stored in a dark place.

Many vegetables such as cabbage and turnips are not harmed by ordinary frost and need no special protection. In fact, such root vegetables as carrots, parsnips and salsify are improved by freezing and are customarily left in the ground until needed.

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

Mrs Hannah Walters and Edward Purdy and wife, of Antwerp, were entertained at supper on Monday by Mrs. Koch.

Warren Smith, east of town, passed the physical examination before the conscription board; but Herby Webb was rejected.

Charles Markle and wife, Dayton Webb and daughter and Stanley, and John Shutt, of Hicksville, were Sunday guests of Morton Shutt.

R. U. Bowser and wife, Fred Osborne and wife and Clarence Gloyd attended the funeral of their uncle, Jerome Gloyd, of Robinson chapel, Thursday.

Misses Edith and Bessie Squires, of Fort Wayne, visited their uncle, Harvey Beams and wife over Sunday; and Jesse Boyle, of Butler, and Miss Rilla Beams were guests at dinner.

Mrs. A. K. Mumma left on Tuesday morning for Springfield, Ohio, where she will attend the meeting of the board of Oesterlend orphan home, of which she is a member. She will be gone the rest of the week.

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh at an alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

Improve Church

The Lutherans have just completed an improvement to their church in the shape of a basement under the entire structure. It is of concrete throughout. There are a main room, which can be used for social functions, a kitchen, a cloak room and a fuel room. The work has been in course of construction since the first of the year, and cost about $1,300.

NEWVILLE

Mrs. Edward Hively and son Marvin, visited relatives at Columbia City on Saturday and Sunday Marvin is one of the Ohio militia boys, nearly all of whom had leave of absence on those two days.

J. S. Kain and family visited his son, Forrest, at Camp Perry last Wednesday. The regiment to whih he belongs left for New York a few hours later.

Henry Laub and wife had as guests last week their daughter, Mrs. Blanch Osborn, of Hicksville, and a sister and niece of Mrs. Laub.

Rev. Hively and wife, Samuel Wyatt and family and Loren Gaff and wife attended the Wyatt reunion at Auburn on Thursday.

Miss Lizzie Smith, of Wabash, is here visiting relatives and friends.

Archie Cummins and family attended a family reunion at Harlan on Thursday.

Mrs. Nella McDonald and sons, Levon and Earl, of Butler, were Wednesday and Thursday guests of John Miller and family. Mrs. Miller and Mrs. McDonald visited at the John Washler home, Thursday afternoon.

Communion services were held on Sunday at the U. B. church. Baptism by sprinkling was administered to Mr. Walters and wife.

Guy Smith was home from Fort Wayne over Sunday.

Mrs. George Simanton and son, George, were Friday and Saturday guests of her parents, Elmer Wyatt and wife.

Harry Fuller and son, Woodward, of Garrett, were Friday and Saturday guests of John Miller and family. A letter from his son, Harold, stated that he had been eight days aboard ship and would reach France by the time the letter was received.

William Miller and wife were home from the county infirmary the first of last week, caring for their garden.

Hugh Traxler worked in Garrett last week, returning home Friday.

Mr. Palmer, of South Chicago, is the guest of his son, Lewis Paler, and family.

Betz Family Reunion

The second annual reunion of the Betz family was held on Sunday at the home of Joel Betz of this place. Over fifty guests were present. After a basket dinner, a program was rendered and ice cream and cake were served. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, John T. Betz, of St. Joe; secretary-treasurer, Miss Nettie Helf, of Edgerton. The out-of-town guests were as follows: R. E. Betz and family, Walter Perkins and family and S. W. Betz and family, of Grabill; John T. Betz and wife, of St. Joe; O. E. Helf and family and A. A. Clay, of Edgerton; F. E. Lynn and family and Frank Betz, of Fort Wayne; G. W. Armstrong, Mr. Butson and wife, Harry Armstrong, E. J. Armstrong and Myrtle Depew, of Auburn; T. F. Reichelderfer and family and Mrs. Harry Adcock, of Payne, Ohio; Glen Betz and family, of Woodburn; Leonard Gaskill, of Garrett; John House and B. J. Bueff, of Detroit. Next year, George Horn and wife will entertain the reunion.

Save Next Spring's Seed

"Don't forget to save beans and peas out of your surplus for the planting next spring," is the advice which seed experts of the United States department of agriculture are sending to home gardeners and market gardeners in Indiana.

"Many market gardeners have beans or peas which they find it unprofitable to consume or to sell in the green state at the present time," declared a department expert Friday. "They want to use the ground for later planting and there is a temptation to plow under the whole crop. This, however, should not be done.

"It is better to save the crop, provided the stock is satisfactory, as it can be used for seed next year. The beans or peas in quantities beyond what is needed for seed can be used for food.

"It is not difficult to handle and cure the vines and pods of both beans and peas. After the seed has reached full size and before the vines and pods are ripe and dry, the vines should be cut with a scythe or sickle, or pulled by hand. They can be cured by merely spreading on the ground until well wilted.

"If the crop is large, the vines should be stacked on ground covered with rails or brush and tied against stakes driven in at intervals a few inches apart. After the beans and peas are dried they can be thrashed and the seed recovered.

"In the emergency campaign for the conservation of perishable fruits and vegetables, the department of agriculture is laying stress upon the necessity of providing for an adequate vegetable seed supply for the 1918 planting season."

THREATS MADE AGAINST COUNTY DRAFT OFFICIALS.

Several members of the exemption boards of Marion county have received threats recently for their refusal to grant exemptions to drafted men in certain instances, it became known Friday. The subject has been called to the attention of George N. Murdock, special representative of the Department of Justice and he has communicated with government officials at Washington to ask to what extent prosecution can be made in such cases.

Members said Friday they had paid little attention to such threats, and some said they had heard nothing of them. None who had received threats was inclined to take them seriously. So far as could be learned no threatening letters have been received, but the threats have been made to persons other than board members.

Private John Carroll, of Mishawaka, Indiana, and now with the Canadian infantry "somewhere in France," has been awarded the Victoria cross for gallantry in action, according to word received at Mishawaka in a letter to his sisters. Private Carroll is believed to be the first American to have won this coveted emblem. A clipping from the London Daily Mirror tells the story:

"During an attack immediately after the barrage lifted, Private John Carroll rushed the enemy's trench and bayonetted four of the enemy.

"He then noticed a comrade in difficulties and at once proceeded to his assistance and killed one of the enemy. He continued working ahead with great determination until he came across a machine gun and a team of four men.

"Single-handed he attacked the entire team, killing three of the men and capturing the gun."

Young Carroll is the son of John Carroll, an Englishman now living in Detroit, Michigan. Previous to June, 1916, the lad was employed at the Mishawaka woolen mills. A circus came to town which Carroll joined as a trap drummer. When next heard of he had joined a military band at Calgary, Alta., and shortly after left for the fighting front.

Private Carroll is 25 years old.

Obituary

George B. Gloyd died at his home in this place on Saturday evening, aged 59 years, 3 months and 10 days, after an illness of nine weeks. Death was due to a complication of diseases. Deceased was born and reared on the old Gloyd homestead in Perry township, Allen county; but nine years ago, he, with R. U. Bowser, embarked in the hardware business at this place. Later, they bought the Erick grocery. Several years ago, they sold out. Deceased was a member of the M. E. church, and was active in Sunday school work.

Mr. Gloyd is survived by his devoted wife, five children (Mrs. Isidore Badica, near Fort Wayne; Mrs. Fred Osborne, of this place; Clarence, Ralph and Geary, at home), five grandchildren, one brother (Edward Gloyd, of Kendallville), two sisters (Mrs. Mary Hyndman, of Oklahoma, and Mrs. Perry Fitch, of New Era. One brother Jerome Gloyd, preceded him in death, dying only last week.

Funeral services were held at the house at 1. m. on Tuesday and at Huntertown at 2 p. m., conducted by Rev. Dixon, of Etna Green, assisted by Revs. Mumma and Emmons, of this place.

To Undergo an Operation

Miss Mary Comesky entertained the following company on Sunday: W. L. Russell and wife, of South Bend; John Moudy and wife and Charles Moudy and family, of Robinson chapel; J. E. Lochner, wife and son, Ralph, of Mount Olive; Misses Bessie and Edith Squires, of Fort Wayne; Mrs. Louie Beam, Mrs. Mabel Erick and Mrs. Myrtle Beams and children. Miss Comesky left on Tuesday for the Lutheran hospital, Fort Wayne, where she underwent an operation for the removal of goitre.

LOCAL ITEMS.

F. M. Thornton and family and guests, Mr. and Mrs Fred DeMussey and son Stanley, of Elkhart, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ora Baker.

Judge Dan M. Link appointed Rev. W. H. Chase of Auburn, as probation officer for DeKalb county Saturday afternoon. This appointment gives Rev. Chase jurisdiction in matters relating to juvenile delinquents, neglected and dependent children, truants, adoption and all cases where the custody and legal punishment of children is in question.

Battles Which Made the World

BLENHEIM

The Dazzling Strategy of Marlborough, Which Baffled the Scheme of Louis XIV, but Almost Fell Before the Bravery of the Irish.

By CAPT. ROLAND F. ANDREWS

(Copyright, 1917, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Each really great battle in history has been one in which the forces of liberty and democracy ranged themselves on one side against the forces of absolutism on the other. Such was the battle of Blenheim, fought on a hot August day in 1704 and won by the genius of John Churchill, first duke of Marlborough, of whom it has been said that he never fought a battle he did not win and never besieged a city he did not take. By victory at Blenheim he smashed the power of the grand Monarque, Louis XIV, he who boasted "There are no longer any Pyrenees," who had extended tremendously the French possessions and whose intention was to include all Europe in his kingdom. But for Blenheim all Europe might have suffered for centuries under the effects of French conquests resembling those of Alexander for extent and those of the Romans for durability.

Against Louis, who had the assistance of the elector of Bavaria, were leagued England, Holland and Austria. Generalissimo of the allied forces was Marlborough, a man who had on one occasion betrayed his king and his country, who owed his first advancement in court favor to the fact that his sister was the mistress of the duke of York, who laid the foundations for his great fortune by being the paid lover of one of the favorites of Charles II, whose defects in character were so base and sordid that they can be obscured not even by his virtues, but who as a soldier was almost supreme in military genius. He won Blenheim by a march which for brilliancy of plan and execution is rivaled only by that of the Consul Nero to the Mataurus.

For the first two years of the war of the allies against France, Marlborough commanded in Flanders, taking various enemy towns but accomplishing nothing of decisive importance; indeed, the advantage rested rather with Louis, for the elector of Bavaria took the strong fortress of Ulm, thereby opening communication with the French armies of the upper Rhine and seriously menacing the integrity of Austria. Thereupon Louis decided to act on the defensive in Flanders, while Marshal Villeroy kept busily at work with a big force in the Moselle region. Marshal Tallard marched through the Black forest to join the elector, the French army in Italy advanced and all combined to take Vienna and dictate terms to the emperor in his own capital.

This inspired Marlborough with the audacious plan of himself advancing clear to the Danube and there fighting it out. The more timid and the more conservative opposed, since such a campaign might leave Flanders exposed, but Marlborough—and he must have had a hard time of it with his often stubborn foreign allies—overcame all opposition. On the nineteenth of May, calming as well as he could the agitated fears of the abandoned Dutch, he put his army in motion, thereafter proceeding with a speed and an elusive certainty which utterly bewildered Villeroy. That worthy, marching hither and thither, could not imagine where the English general meant to strike his blow. Tallard, previously ordered to join the elector, became convinced that Marlborough aimed at Alsace and hence kept back his 45,000 men that France might be protected in that quarter. When at last the real intention of Marlborough was disclosed it was so late that the effort could not be rendered abortive.

Crossing the Danube, Marlborough swarmed into Bavaria and in a series of actions made himself master of the elector's dominion. Tallard, meanwhile, woke up and pressing forward managed to effect a junction with his friends. Marlborough recrossed the Danube, combined his forces with those of Prince Eugene and took up position near Blenheim.

The troops of Marlborough and Eugene numbered 56,000, with 52 cannon. Opposed to them were the armies of the French marshals and the elector, 60,000 strong and 61 pieces of artillery. It was absolutely necessary that Marlborough should attack before Villeroy should become aroused and advancing through Franconia give to the Gallo-Bavarian allies overwhelming force.

With the Danube securing their right flank and the high ground of the Gold Berg and Eich Berg their left, it was only in the front that the Gallo-Bavarian allies could be attacked. Tallard was in chief command. He weakened his center in evident reliance upon the swampy ground before it. This was at the hamlet of Oberglau, where lay 14 battalions of infantry, including the celebrated Irish brigade.

A fog which covered the ground early on the morning of August 13 obscured the advance to Tallard until the oncoming British left wing was close upon him. Then he opened a terrific cannonade. Lord Cutts, with a strong brigade of infantry, hurled himself against Blenheim town, only to suffer repulse, while Marlborough was crossing the little river, Nebel. Here the duke was in serious trouble, for his squadrons of cavalry became mired in the swamp while the French artillery played upon them mercilessly. It was only by resolutely advancing fresh men that Marlborough got himself out of his predicament. Eventually he formed his whole left wing in splendid strategic position, only to be placed on the very edge of disaster at the center where the prince of Holstein Beck, with 11 Hanoverian battalions was charged and utterly routed by the fiercely cheering Irish brigade. Breaking through the lines the Irish were close to achieving victory akin to that they afterward gained at Fontenoy. But their ardor carried them too far. Marlborough sent them reeling back with furious cavalry charges, while three hastily summoned battalions raked them as they retreated.

Meanwhile Eugene, on the right wing, was so hard pressed that only the steadiness of his Prussian regiments and his own personal exertions saved him. However, he held on, while Marlborough with a Hannibal-like reliance upon cavalry prepared the finishing stroke elsewhere. At five in the afternoon he massed 8,000 horsemen and artillery and sent them against 10,000 French cavalrymen whose line was interlaced with infantrymen. For a time the issue hung in the balance, for the British squadron wavered before the hot French fire, but the artillery supports came into action most manfully, the French fusillade slackened and Marlborough instantly ordering a charge along the whole line the French cavalry lost their heads, fired in the air and dashed off the field, leaving nine infantry battalions to be ridden over by the overwhelming mass of British horsemen.

This won the battle. Resistance continued, the French making a desperate effort to cut themselves out. Marshal Marsin and the elector did get away from Eugene, but the 24 battalions and 12 squadrons at Blenheim were forced to surrender. Of the great French army there remained, according to Voltaire, only 20,000 uncaptured effectives. Twelve thousand were dead. Fourteen thousand were prisoners. The victors lost 5,000 dead and 8,000 wounded. Ulm, Landau, Treves and Traerbach surrendered. With Blenheim ended the proud visions of Louis for universal domination.

TO BE IMMUNE FROM COLDS

Only Safeguard, Apparently, Is Continued Exposure to Elements, Declares London Writer.

If you want to avoid all likelihood of catching cold in future, you had better turn explorer and trot off to the arctic regions. There sneezes are unknown, and a cough would probably scare a polar bear out of its life, says a writer in London Tit-Bits.

Although the clothes of explorers in those regions are often saturated with perspiration, and are a mass of ice when they retire for the night, and despite the fact that they often have to sleep out in the open in their sleeping bags, and that this is their only means of thawing themselves, their health does not suffer in the least.

Then there is the classical and somewhat mythical instance of the St. Kilda cold. On the rock islands, lying some forty miles beyond the western Hebrides, there are about one hundred inhabitants, access to whom is practically impossible during eight months out of the twelve, owing to the stormy seas. Oddly enough, however, whenever a steamer touches at this island, all the inhabitants, including the very infants—so runs the legend—are seized with violent sneezing fits, which develop into colds.

Exposure is not the direct cause of colds. The only safeguard is continued exposure.

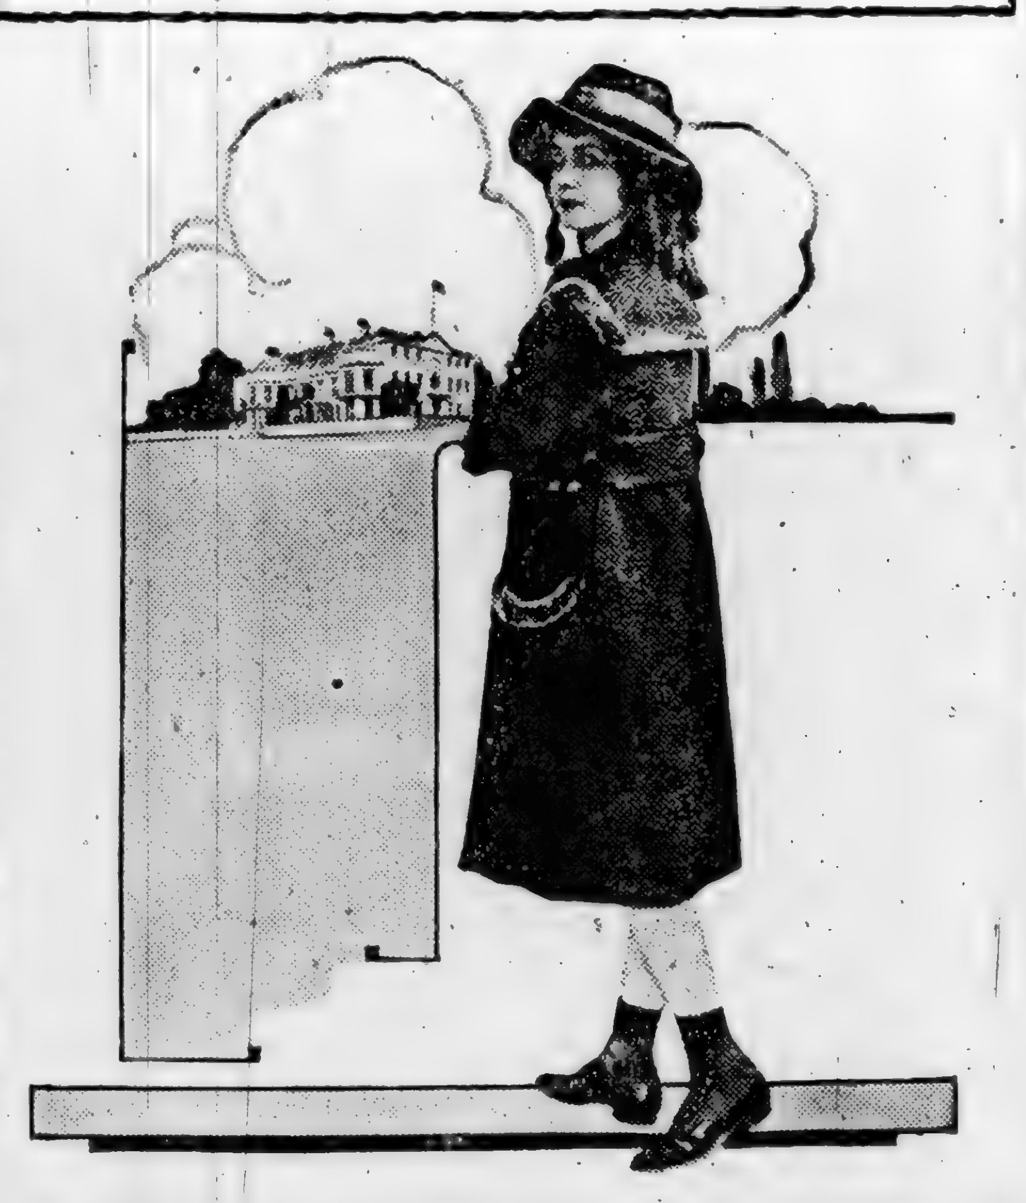
Vastness of China.

A large part of the great Chinese empire has never been surveyed or even explored. As a result, all sorts of varying estimates as to the size of China have been given. An estimate can merely be an approximation representing the last guess. This last guess is estimated to be about 4,000,000 square miles for China's area—about 500,000 miles larger than the total area of our United States. While one of the 18 provinces of China is several thousand square miles smaller than our own state of Texas, yet within the border of this Chinese province there have been dwelling 20 times as many Chinese inhabitants as there are Americans who dwell without our great state of Texas.

Guiana.

Guiana is the name applied to all that country in South America bounded by the Atlantic ocean, the Amazon river and its branches, and the Orinoco river and its branches. The western districts belong to Venezuela, the southern and eastern districts to Brazil. The three European colonies, the British, Dutch and French Guianas, extend from the seacoast to the frontiers of those republics. Settlements were made in Guian in the sixteenth century by explorers from England, France and the Netherlands, though later there were troubles between the three countries and the colonies changed hands several times.

Novelty Fabrics in Girls' Coats



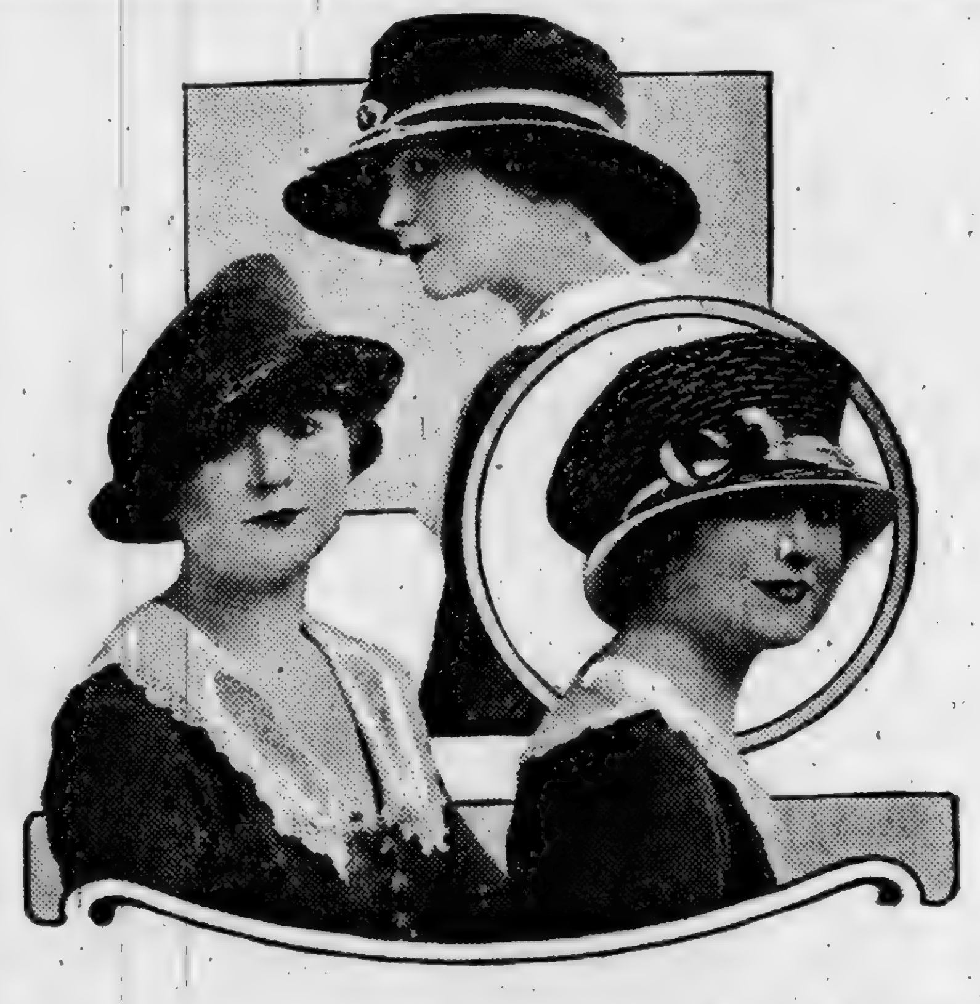
Pile fabrics in dependable quality are winning a place for themselves that will make them a staple feature of all coat displays, and this is noticeable in new showings of coats for girls. It is one indication of an increasing demand for good quality in materials of all kind. Pile and fur fabrics are rich looking and warm and not excelled for durability by any other kinds of cloth.

Narrow fur bands or bands of fur fabrics figure prominently in the trimmings of coats for children. Styles are more simple than ever, with coats almost plain and cut long enough to cover the dress entirely. Small cape collars on many of them provide additional warmth and can be fastened up close about the throat.

Where lighter weight coats are needed wool brocades with "boucle" or loop surface, and wool or silk matelasse, are available and make beautiful coats for little girls. The coat in the picture, of a regulation coat material, is a popular type in the fall display. It is plain, with belt across the back, fastened to the coat with one large button at each side. The collar is bordered with a narrow band of fur fabrics and the coat buttoned at the front.

Bolivia cloth and wool velours are fully established in coat styles for fall, and there are numbers of novelty wool materials that add variety to the showings. It is the business of coat fabrics to look soft and warm—to suggest comfort. Cloths and styles and trimmings all work together to give this impression in the new winter coats.

Dress Rehearsals of the Modes



In the heart of summer, when August inclines us to forget that there is such a season as winter, the curtain rises on millinery styles for fall. Milliners and merchants journey to the great fashion centers to view the dress rehearsals of the modes and to become acquainted with the headwear they are destined to sell when leaves and snow are falling. Their patrons will not welcome these winter things as rapturously as they do those that acknowledge that winter millinery is entitled to be called superb.

There are no radical changes in styles so far as size and shapes are concerned. We are not to be introduced to things so novel that we will have to be educated up to them. The same reserve is apparent in millinery that characterizes dresses and suits. Colors are quiet and rich, materials are excellent and styles refined.

Velvet is destined to dominate the winter season unless the unexpected happens and three fine exponents of the new modes, shown above, are all made of it. An aristocrat in millinery has a bulky crown, sponsored by a world-famed French house. It is of black velvet with brim-facing of white crepe with long stitches of heavy white silk, threaded about the crown. A collar of narrow white ribbon, with wired bow at the front, shows trimming reduced to simplest form.

A design, equally smart and simple, appears in a small tire-brimmed hat, of platinum gray velvet, with brim bound with a soft band of feathers. This model has proven wonderfully becoming to older women. The remaining hat is a familiar and graceful shape with drooping brim presenting an unexpected cut out portion at the front.

Economical Remnants for Negligee.

If you are in need of dainty negligee garments, be on the lookout for remnants of suitable sorts for making them. Very often at this time of year it is possible to find short lengths of lovely crepes or voiles or lightweight silks that can be made into decidedly attractive negligees.

Of course, the price of these remnants is less than that of the same material bought by the yard, and if you look about you can always find the color and fabric that are suited to your needs.

When looking for a remnant it is much better not to start on your shopping trip with a definite idea as to color, but rather have a firm memory of such colors as you have found becoming and an open mind as to the colors you will choose.

Oriental Silks.

There are evening gowns of rare Oriental silks lavishly trimmed with embroidery that in the long ago adorned the state robes of a mandarin or a prince of Japan.

Afternoon frocks of chiffon cloth in rich dark colors are ornamented with borders of embroidery or the material itself is embroidered in colored silks intermingled with gold or silver threads in a design copied from ancient Chinese porcelains or silks.

Skirts Are Practical.

The leading dressmakers are trying to advocate a longer skirt, but they have not made any great success, and it is not expected that this style will develop, as it is not practical, and the average separate skirt comes under the head of a practical garment.

ON FISHING THE DRY-FLY.

My Dear Buck:

Without a doubt, old scout, learning to cast the dry or floating fly is the post-graduate study in the fine art of fishing and there is more real enjoyment in coaxing the wise old trout into the creel by this method than any other angle of the sport. All the knowledge you have gained through study of the habits of the trout in your wet fly-casting stand you well as a beginner at this end of the game.

Most of our trout fishing is on streams in the woods or wilderness where the waters alternate between rapids and smooth spots, waterfall and deep pool, shallows or riffles, and one could follow a stream all day without lamping a trout on the rise for food, and if he were fishing in the orthodox English way, bacon fried to a crisp would about make up his evening meal, which accounts for the fact that we have changed the dope a bit and fish the dry-fly more as a floating fly without the added effort of tossing the feathers into the mouth of the waiting trout and tickling him to death.

On a very civilized stream that has been fished to a fare-you-well by all manner of fishermen, where the trout have wised up to tricks of the game, the dry-fly will get a rise when the wet-fly would merely cause a wink of the weather eye.

In casting the dry-fly the fisherman works upstream, casting slightly across the current, so that the floating fly will ride down with the current, and a very essential detail is to cast lightly and accurate, while it is not necessary to cast as long a line as in wet-fly casting. The whole game is to have the fly float down as naturally as possible, and it requires considerable skill in the handling of the rod and the reeling in of slack to keep the fly from being pulled under the water by the weight of a slack line or through some other rough work of the caster.

Horizontal Cast the Best.

Wherever possible, the horizontal cast should be used in preference to the overhead cast, as the fly is more likely to land right side up with the wings cocked, although more accuracy and distance are obtained by the overhead, which is not as essential in dry-fly casting as to have the fly ride the water in a natural manner. As a general thing the fly lights on the water on its side when the overhead cast is used, and although a trout will rise to a floating fly in this position, the chances are greater for a rise when the fly lies on the water in the position naturally taken by a live insect with its wings fluttering above the water in its effort to rise from the surface.

In casting a smooth stretch of water there is little if any drag of the line, and the fly will float in an upright position if cast skillfully

The early season when the water is high and discolored by flooded conditions the trout are bottom or mid-water feeding, and at this time the dry-fly is of little use on the streams. As soon as the air warms up a bit and the insect life has developed on the streams and the water clears with the temperature rising steadily, the floating fly is a sure winner. From the middle of May to the end of the season the conditions grow more favorable to the dry-fly, and on low, clear water at the tail end of the season it is by far the most effective lure.

On any water that is not broken by rapids or riffles, the dry-fly can be used to advantage, and even on waters that are swift and rapid it will be found effective.

One of the main points in casting the dry-fly is to study the currents, as one of the greatest little old jinks to the successful use of the dry-fly is the drag caused by the fly falling on water moving at a speed different from that of the water on which the line falls. Select your casting position where the fly and line will light on water of the same speed, so that the fly will not be drowned by the drag of the line. Another point that will make your dry-fly work better at the start is to avoid raising the tip of the rod as the fly falls on the water, and this is a small point that the wet-fly fisherman has a tendency to overlook through habit acquired in casting the wet feathers. To raise the rod at this time will pull the dry fly under water. At the same time the beginner should never strip in the line until the fly has started downstream with the current. If you find it necessary to cast on waters of different speed to the current, cast a slack line, and if the fly lights on water moving slower than that on which the line rests there will be no drag on the fly until the slack line has floated downstream. Make a study of the stream and the trout and use all your skill and you will find much pleasure in floating the dry-fly.

SMALL BOY HAD NOTICED

That He Knew Man in Khaki as Marine Did Credit to His Powers of Observation.

A group of youngsters was playing on Riverside drive, says the New York Times. A military man, dressed in khaki and accompanied by a young lady, approached the group. The boys stopped their playing and, with nudges and gesticulation, were evidently trying to identify the man in khaki.

As the young lady and her escort drew nearer, one youngster with an air of superior knowledge informed his companions: "He's a United States marine."

Overhearing the remark, the young lady questioned the small boy: "How do you know he is a marine?"

"Why, lady," exclaimed the youngster, "he wears an ornament on his hat showing an eagle, globe and anchor, but doesn't wear any hat cord."

The colored hat cords, yellow, blue and red, help many civilians to recognize at once a cavalryman, an infantryman or artilleryman. However, the United States marine dressed in khaki is still an enigma to many persons who lack the powers of observation displayed by the small boy on Riverside drive.

YES! LIFT A CORN OFF WITHOUT PAIN!

Cincinnati man tells how to dry up a corn or callus so it lifts off with fingers.

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn or callus, stops soreness at once and soon the corn or hardened callus loosens so it can be lifted off, root and all, without pain.

A small bottle of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but will positively take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to irritate the surrounding skin.

If your druggist hasn't any freezone tell him to get a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Matter-of-Fact Lovemaking.

For downright prose Doctor Johnson's offer of hand and heart to his second wife would be very hard to beat.

"My dear woman," said Johnson, "I am a hardworking man and withal something of a philosopher. I am, as you know, very poor. I have always been respectable myself, but I grieve to tell you that one of my uncles was hanged."

"I have less money than you, doctor," demurely answered the lady, "but I shall try to be philosophical, too. None of my relatives has even been hanged, but I have several who ought to be."

"Providence and philosophy have evidently mated us, my good woman," said the doctor as he pressed a chaste salute upon the lady's brow.—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

Humor of Kultur.

"Here's a fruit tree, still standing. Why haven't you cut it down?" thundered the Teuton commander in France.

The young officer saluted stiffly and explained:

"We saved this tree to hang a pair of old peasants on. As it's their tree, we thought the joke too good to miss."

The universal opinion seems to be that economy should begin at somebody else's home.

PAINS SHARP AND STABBING

Woman Thought She Would Die. Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ogdensburg, Wis.—"I suffered from female troubles which caused piercing pains like a knife through my back and side. I finally lost all my strength so I had to go to bed. The doctor advised an operation but I would not listen to it. I thought of what I had read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and tried it. The first bottle brought great relief and six bottles have entirely cured me. All women who have female trouble of any kind should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." —Mrs. ETTA DORION, Ogdensburg, Wis.

Physicians undoubtedly did their best, battled with this case steadily and could do no more, but often the most scientific treatment is surpassed by the medicinal properties of the good old fashioned roots and herbs contained in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complication exists it pays to write the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special free advice.

SOLD TWO FOR FIVE CENTS

Salesman Quick to Turn Action of Irascible to His Advantage, and Won Out.

The quick wit of a traveling salesman, who has since become a well-known proprietor, was severely tested one day. He sent his card by the office boy to the manager of a large concern, whose inner office was separated from the waiting-room by a ground glass partition. When the boy handed his card to the manager the salesman saw him impatiently tear it in half and throw it in the waste basket; the boy came out and told the caller that he could not see the chief. The salesman told the boy to go back and get him his card; the boy brought out 5 cents, with the message that his card was torn up. Then the salesman took out another card and sent the boy back, saying: "Tell your boss I sell two cards for 5 cents."

He got his interview and sold a large bill of goods.

Getting Old Too Fast?

Late in life the body shows signs of wear and often the kidneys weaken first. The back is lame, bent and achy, and the kidney action distressing. This makes people feel older than they are. Don't wait for dropsy, gravel, hardening of the arteries or Bright's disease. Use a mild kidney stimulant. Try Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands of elderly folks recommend them.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. Louis Melcher, 608 E. North St., Crown Point, Ind., says: "Heavy lifting weakened my kidneys and my back grew so lame I could hardly get around. My kidneys acted irregularly and dizzy and nervous spells came on. My sight often blurred, too. I got so bad, I thought I would die. Soon after I used Doan's Kidney Pills, I improved and continued use completely cured me."

WHY BUNGALOW IS SO POPULAR

Pacific Coast Architects Have Developed This Type of Dwelling.

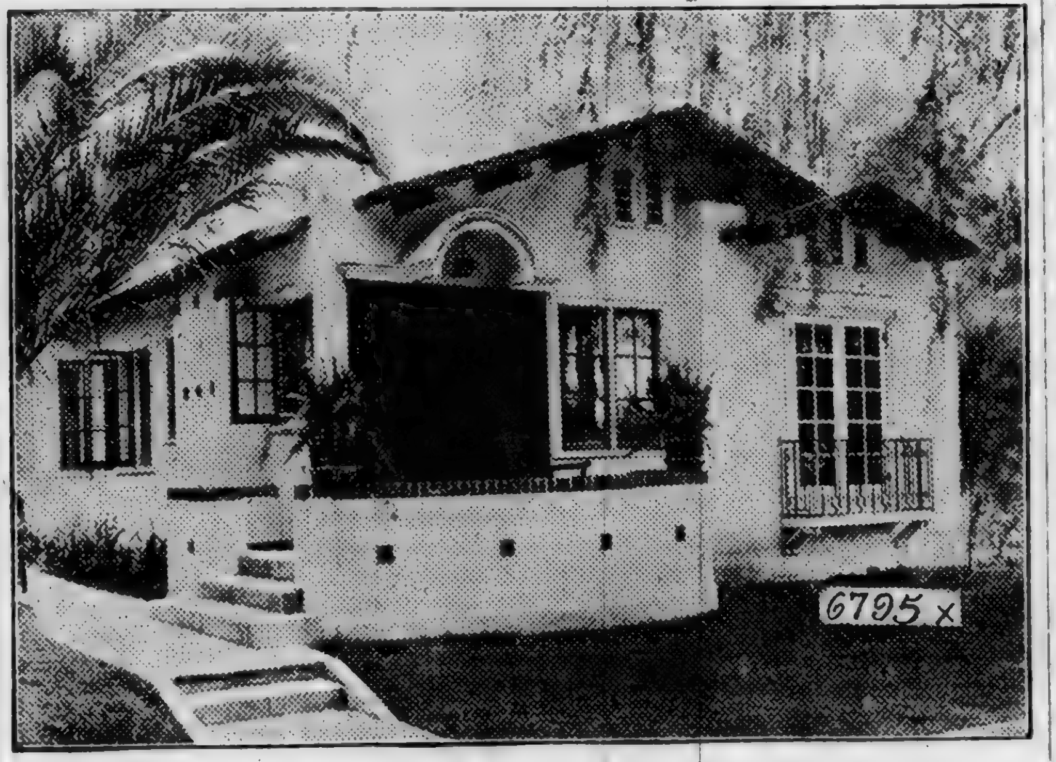
THE MOST ADAPTABLE STYLE

Use of Poor Material and Toleration of Cheap Workmanship Is Bad Economy—Charming Model Described Here.

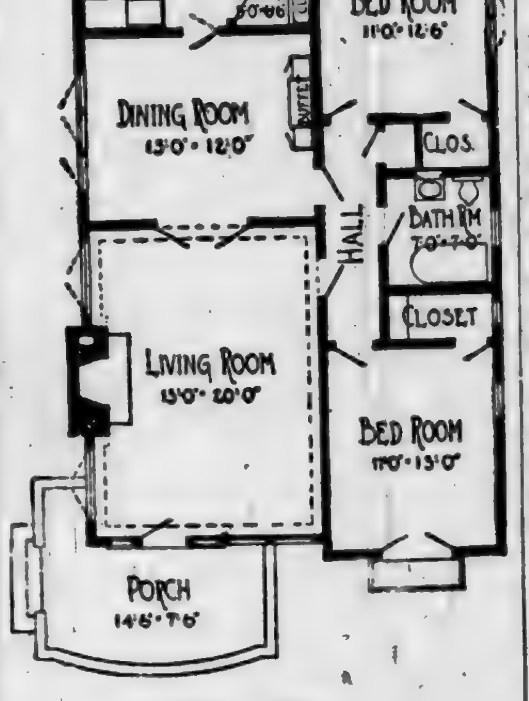
By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

The work of architects and builders on the western coast of this country in establishing the bungalow type of residence as a distinct style of architecture, is having its effect in the general adoption of this style, with various modifications, in practically every part of the country. It is a most adaptable style; in fact, the application of the style has been extended over such a wide range of buildings that the meaning of the word, "bungalow," has almost been lost. That is, the meaning which has been given it by adoption of the word to designate the style of building found in its original type in California particularly. The "dictionary meaning" of the word could hardly apply to the home of a modern American, unless, perhaps, it might be his summer home along the bank of a river, on the shores of a lake or in the woods. The "dictionary bungalow" is decidedly a hot climate building.



The modern American bungalow may be and usually is constructed with as much care and contains as high a grade of materials as would be used in the largest residences. The use of poor materials and the toleration of poor workmanship is false economy in this smaller building just as it is in any other building. A warning might be extended to those who have selected the bungalow style but do not have a great deal of money to invest in their home: Do not be misled by the belief that it is necessary to load down the bungalow with elaborate ornamentation in order to obtain an attractive home. The Western bungalow is often quite elaborate in its decorative treatment and is, therefore, far from the low-price class when the amount of useful space provided in its interior is considered. The illustration shows a bungalow of the Western type which we might say strikes an average as far as the structural decoration is concerned.



Floor Plan.

It is far more important to hold closely to high-grade construction than it is to spend money in decoration, if a limitation is available capital exists. Of course, there is value in appearance both from the personal satisfaction which it gives the owner and also from the effect which it has on the salability of the property. A certain amount is necessary in any style of residence. However, the kind of ornamentation which is called for may be expensive or otherwise, and the man of limited means should guard against the selection of a house which requires an excess expenditure for this purpose. Most bungalows may be sufficiently decorated by the use of exposed rafter ends and perhaps false purlin ends or purlin brackets on the roof. These things do not represent an objectionable increase in cost and they are very effective. Artistic casement windows may be used to produce a most effective appearance without excess cost. If the material which he selects for the walls of his house is brick, he should not use special bonds Let the wall decoration consist of a soldier course of brick entirely around the house at grade or such a course above the windows. Avoid decoration which requires excess labor and is likely to incur a loss of materials due to cutting the building units into irregular shapes or sizes. The architect or the contractor who is familiar with the design of residences is fully acquainted with the matter of inexpensive yet effective house decoration and he knows how to design the house so that this sort of decoration is all that is needed to round out the appearance of the house into what is artistically pleasing.

Coming again to a consideration of the bungalow which is illustrated here and which we have selected as representing the average of the Western type in the matter of decoration, consider, first, the exterior design of this residence. The walls of this attractive bungalow are made of pure white stucco which can be placed on either wood or metal lath. This method of construction is becoming more popular all the time and it has many good features that will recommend it to the home builder.

The front of the house is particularly ornate because of a happy combination of details including the attractive entrance, the casement windows, the French doors, louvre ventilators and roof lines. The porch is built with no roof and is made very inviting by the broad door, flanked by windows. The projecting roof with its false purlin ends is typical of bungalow construction and is thoroughly in keeping with this particular design. The dark finish of the roof and front door provide a pleasing contrast with the white walls of the building. The effect is carried out by the dark finish of the window sash and the face brick coping used on the porch rail. The small brick panels set in the wall surface furnish a novel means of relieving the monotony of unbroken wall surfaces. Another unusual decorative feature is the balcony with its ornamental iron railing in front of the French doors.

The floor plan shows a room arrangement that is very pleasing—the living room especially is just the sort of a room that one would expect to find in a home with such an artistic exterior. This room is entered directly from the front porch and its large size presents a pleasing aspect. It is 20 by 15 feet and a large fireplace is located in the center of the outside wall with double casement windows on each side. This room is connected to the dining room by double French doors.

The dining room is well lighted by three casement windows. Opposite these is a built-in buffet that will add to the usefulness and convenience of this room. The kitchen is almost a model for a house of this size. It is small and compact and is arranged to cut the work that must be done to a minimum. The pantry contains the refrigerator which is of the type which can be iced from the rear entry, a small door being built into the pantry wall for this purpose. The bedroom arrangement, having the bath placed on the hall connecting the two bedrooms is excellent. The entire arrangement is simple but its convenience could hardly be improved upon.

Drastic Remedy.

She was a fair-haired lady, an actress by profession, and dainty withal. Her headgear consisted of a bowl-like foundation, from which protruded plumes mounted on slender wires. She sauntered into a theater, and took her seat to witness the great play, "Ashamed of Her Brother."

There was a touch on her hat. Loftily and haughtily she turned.

"Does my hat annoy you?" she asked.

"Not at all," replied the person behind her.

"The footlight favorite thought for a time. She feared she had been ungracious, and, like Dick Whittington, she turned again.

"Perhaps the plumes interfere with your view?" she suggested more amiably.

"Oh, no, thank you," replied the self-possessed young woman; "I've bent 'em back."

PROHIBITION AND COAL.

Under the above caption a recent number of The Outlook in a "special correspondence" article directs attention to the coal situation. With new factories springing up everywhere to meet war demands, says the author, Lewis T. Theiss, "nothing but a hugely increased output of coal can prevent prices from reaching a ruinous figure." Among the things which stand in the way of increasing the output are, he points out, the draft, the impossibility of employing a greater number of coal miners because of the falling off in immigration, and obvious difficulties in "speeding up" the organized mine workers. "Under these conditions," continues Mr. Theiss, "it is interesting to note the effect of prohibition on the output of coal in regions that have gone dry." He reminds us that when, at the time of the trouble between the Colorado Fuel and Iron company and its employees, the saloons were closed, the average production of coal per man per day was greatly increased.

A comparison made by the White Oak Coal company of West Virginia, covering the three months prior to June 30, 1914, the date the dry law went into effect, and the three months following, shows an increase during July, September and October of 32,198.35 tons. These figures are furnished by Mr. W. B. Reed, chief accountant, who adds: "It is safe to assume that the same rate of increase would be carried out throughout the entire year, and if that be the case, the result would show an increased production per annum, due to the absence of liquor in the field, of 128,793 tons." And this is the increase of a single company.

Mr. J. D. A. Morrow of the Pittsburg Coal Producers' association is quoted as stating to the interstate commerce commission that the production of coal in the Pittsburgh district alone would be increased 5,000,000 tons if strong drink were eliminated.

"In fact," says Mr. Theiss in conclusion, "all testimony on the subject, from factory, mine and shop, tells the same story—take away drink and the efficiency of the workingman increases amazingly. The simplest, the surest, the only certain way of increasing coal production at this time is by prohibiting drink. . . . If we want cheaper coal during the war we must take, as a war measure, the one and only step that will surely increase coal production."

FOOTSTEPS OF FATHER.

The story is told of a saloonkeeper who went home one afternoon and found his wife away from home and his three boys in the back yard, where they had a bench, some bottles and tumblers and were playing "saloon." The youngest, who was behind the bar, had a towel tied around his waist and appeared to be setting up the drinks pretty freely. The father was dismayed at the nature of the children's play, a feeling that turned to the deepest alarm as he realized that actual beer was being dispensed over the make-believe bar, and that his boys were staggering, while a neighbor lad lay drunk under a tree. When the mother returned she found the boys in bed and her husband sobbing like a child. That night the saloon was closed, and its former keeper entered another line of business.

WAR BEER-INSPIRED?

Speaking of the use of beer by the students of Germany, Professor Sinz of the University of Bonn says: "The flooding of the stomach and brain with beer, so prevalent among our students, I regard as a national evil, whether considered from the hygienic, economic or intellectual point of view."

Speaking of its moral effects, Dr. A. Forel of the University of Zurich says: "Among the academic youth of Germany the drinking of beer has truly killed the ideals and the ethics, and has produced an incredible vulgarity." And Dr. Edward Hartman: "Although of all nations Germany has the greatest capacity for culture, the general culture of its higher classes is undergoing frightful retrogression, because of the beer consumption of its students."

BARLEY CROP INCREASES.

More barley is being produced in Washington since the prohibition law became effective than before, according to the annual report of R. D. Jarboe, state grain inspector. He states that the receipts of barley from July 1 to November 1, 1916, were 3,075,719 bushels as against 2,730,525 for the same period of 1915. This in spite of the fact that the demand for the grain for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor has been cut off in all Northwestern states.

Feed the Fighters! Win the War!!

Harvest the Crops — Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

"The crack troops of the kaiser—some call them cracked troops now—are hiding in caverns forty feet under ground. The man who now thinks German militarism a wonderful thing is as badly doped as Cal Clay of Nola Chucky.

"Cal was escorting some ladies from Nola Chucky to Paint Rock, and as they passed a planter's the planter was playing with a powerful searchlight he had just put on his water tower, and he happened to turn it down the road, where it streamed into the eyes of Cal and his two girls.

"'Here comes one o' dem powerful racin' cyahs, to jedge by dat 'ere headlight,' said Cal. 'We'll just hustle to de side o' de road fo' safety till she's parst, ladies.'

"So they hustled up against the hedge, and the planter, after playing the light along the road for about a minute, suddenly turned it off.

"Cal gave a grunt of astonishment.

Wrong Way to Succeed

Experts of Purdue University say Local Farmers Can Compete With Commercial Orchardists with but Little Extra Work.

Why does the Indiana market pay the producer $1.25 to $2.00 a bushel for one grade of apples and only fifty to seventy-five cents per bushel for another? The answer is that the consumer discriminates against unsprayed and ungraded apples. The buying public knows that a bushel of well graded, properly sprayed apples at $1.25 to $2.00 is the more economical purchase. Such a purchase gives satisfaction because the fruit tastes better, keeps longer, and there is no waste.

A study of market demands and prices will pay the grower by dividends. The farmer who must accept the market price for ungraded apples year after year will never make a success of fruit growing. What he offers for sale is not desired by the retailer or the consumer. If placed on the market it reduces the total volume of fruit business transacted, and thus the farmer is instrumental in putting himself out of business.

Indiana is encouraging home markets for home products. In order to develop a demand for home grown fruit, the average small grower must improve his grading. No Indiana fruit is to be allowed to waste this year. The farmer with a surplus of fruit will make a special effort to find a nearby market for it. That which for some reason or other the producer is unable to haul to town will be bought by the passing motorist.

When seeking to sell his produce to retailers or consumers in a neighboring town, the farmer will find that in most cases he must compete with fruit grown and packed by commercial orchardists. This is especially true when selling to retailers.

Retailers in many towns are opposed to handling the usual kind of home grown fruit which is brought in. Grocers who have acquired and held a good trade by building up a reputation for first-class quality in all their produce, know from experience that the ordinary ungraded fruit from farm orchards hurts their business. They must have good, sound, well graded fruit from progressive farmers in order to satisfy their customers' demands.

Good Grading Necessary.

If the farmer desires to have his apples or other fruit compete successfully with that bought by the retailer on the general market, he must grade it carefully. When good, sound, well graded fruit is brought to the stores by the farmer, some grocers are known to pay a good price for it and even to feature it as being home grown.

The producer who has neglected to spray will learn a lesson on the value of spraying when he attempts to grade. He will find that the percentage of strictly high grade specimens in his crop is very low. Even the unsprayed crop may be helped considerably by grading out those fruits which are bruised, rotted, or have been badly damaged by insects or disease. One or two rotted apples may prevent the sale of an entire basket.

Well graded fruit of the highest quality should be sound, well colored, free from insect or disease injury and neither blemished nor bruised. The best grades are also uniform in size and color. When well graded home grown fruit appears on the market it is always in great demand. The grower who markets a high class product of this kind gets a good price and is seldom caught with a surplus on hand.

Mrs. H. L. Dunkle and daughter Rhea, went to Fort Wayne, Thursday to visit relatives until Sunday when Mr. Dunkle motored for them. The former's sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Weigmann and little grandson accompanied them home for a few days visit.

The Leaders Class of the M. P. Sunday School were royally entertained Monday night at the home of Mrs. Bessie Gamble, northwest of town, Chas. Koch taking the ladies out to the Gamble home. After the business session a fine lunch of sandwiches, pickles, cake, fruit and coffee were served cafeteria style.

She Loses Her Home

Mrs Lydia Sowle, of Rising Sun, Ohio, formerly of near Spencerville, met with a grave disaster on Wednesday evening of last week, when her home was almost completely destroyed by fire.

Mrs. Sowle was formerly Miss Lydia Knisely, sister of Joseph Knisely, who lives 1 mile west of town.

The lady was kindling a fire in the kitchen stove, which was a combination coal and iron burner. She placed the kindling in the coal burner and was pouring on some oil, which ignited, causing an explosion She threw the oil can, and narrowly escaped being badly burned. By the time help arrived, the entire kitchen was in flames. The fire spread throughout the entire house, destroying nearly all the contents, the only piece of furniture saved being a sewing machine. She lost all her clothing but a very few articles.

Mrs. Sowle purchased her home in Rising Sun soon after leaving Spencerville, three years ago, and had recently done considerable interior decorating. The loss to the building and contents amounted to several hundred dollars. No insurance.

Notice to Farmers

The time of the fall fair, fathered by the DeKalb County Agricultural association is drawing near; and if Spencer, Newville and Concord townships are to make a creditable display, it is time they should get busy. In order that their efforts may be centralized, a meeting will be held at the St. Joe school house on Thursday evening of this week at 7:30 o'clock. All members of the various farm clubs and all other farmers are urged to be present. President Nugen, of the fall fair, will be present.

Walter Family Reunion

For the past twelve years it has been the custom of the members of the Walter family to met together and spend one day in a social way. This year they met at Robison park on Thursday, Aug. 30. Daniel Mullen and wife were host and hostess for the occasion, and they did their share to make it a success.

Quite a number of the members were not present for various good reasons. Nevertheless, there were present about sixty, who enjoyed the bounteous dinner served at noon time. In the afternoon, a short business session was held, and officers were elected for the ensuing year. They are as follows: President, George Walter; secretary, Miss Fern Walter; treasurer, Mrs. John Haifly. At this time, it was decided that George Behms and wife be host and hostess next year, and the place will be named later on.

Then the members were favored with a short address by the president; and at his request all bowed their heads to pay respect to a departed brother, Mr. John Davis, who died within the past year. At the close of the meeting, several groups of pictures were taken. Before going home, the attendants scattered, some to visit and some to view the attractions of the park.

What Did Ann Get?

Girls and boys, school begins next week, and then you will be busy with your school books. To prepare you for school work—particularly arithmetic—the NEWS will give you a problem to solve. Get busy and quicken up your wits and get them in good working order for what is coming. Here is the problem:

An estate of $3,500 is to be divided among eight heirs—four boys and four girls; Mary is to receive $200 more than any one of the others; Martha is to receive $70 less than any of her brothers, Jane $20 more than Martha and Ann $30 less than Jane; the four brothers each receive the same amount: how much does Ann get?

This problem is for the kids, not for grown-ups; and any one solving it is requested to bring his work to the NEWS office and it will be printed. Remember, girls and boys, no help. If you do get help, it won't be safe for you to bring your work to this office and let "Dick" know that it isn't all your own, for he declares that he will kick out-doors all such kids. Who'll bring the first correct answer?

Here, Boys and Girls!

School supplies are here, and they are nice, good tablets, smooth paper, inks, good lead pencils (two for 5c and the genuine Mongol pencil for 5c) We handle school books to get the tablet and pencil trade. We are entitled to it when we bother with the books. So please remember that school books are CASH. Get mad if you don't like it. They are cash everywhere.

URGE DAIRYMEN TO HOLD HERDS

Defense Council Hears Plea Regarding the High Prices of Feed.

INDUSTRY IS THREATENED

Indiana Branch of Women's Peace Party Quits National Organization Because Its Connection With the People's Council.

Indianapolis.—The dairy, food and coal situations were considered by the State Council of Defense, when statistics and communications were presented by various members and committee heads showing that in these three departments of work immediate steps must be taken to remedy existing conditions.

A resolution presented by the Rev. A. B. Storms, member of the council, expressing the sympathy of the council for Gov. James P. Goodrich in his present illness, and hope for his speedy recovery, was unanimously adopted.

In discussing the milk situation, A. E. Reynolds reported that he had been visited by a committee representing the dairymen of his home city, Crawfordsville, who informed him that they had been operating at a loss, and many of them were quitting business because they cannot afford to fill their silos and feed their stock. They assert they are facing financial ruin unless they receive proper indorsement in the raising of milk prices to the consumer.

H. E. Barnard said that the dairy question was very serious. He said, however, that it is being given consideration by the authorities, including a special dairy committee of the committee on food production and conservation, and that it is likely the state council will be asked to make an appeal to the farmer to keep his dairy cattle in the same way that the farmer has been appealed to to increase production by increasing the acreage.

Reorganizes Committee.

The committee appointed recently to consider a reorganization of the council's activity with reference to food, recommended the discontinuance of the committees on food supply and conservation under J. L. Keach, Mr. Barnard and G. I. Christie as chairmen, and the substitution in their places of a committee on food to be composed of W. H. Hays, chairman; Mr. Barnard, Mr. Christie, Charles W. Fairbanks, Charles Fox, Mr. Keach and Frank Stockton. The committee's report was ratified and inaugurated as proposed.

Will J. Freeman reported the coal car supply was inadequate and threatened serious trouble. He said that Judge Lovett, the new federal transportation director, was sending coal cars to the northwest in such numbers as to threaten a hardship on Indiana consumers. He said there was an "assumed shortage" in the northwest, with no actual figures on which to base the claim.

Quits Women's Peace Party.

Because it was found that some of the dominating women in the women's peace party were connected with the People's Council of America for Democracy and Peace, which tried to hold a meeting in several places and finally "got by" in Chicago, the Indiana branch of the Women's Peace Party today resigned its membership in the national organization.

Mrs. Helen Freeman Bennett, chairman of the Indiana branch, sent the following telegram to Mrs. Anna G. Karsten of Chicago, national secretary of the party:

"Standing for the peace of the world as strongly as ever, yet out of accord with recent developments in the ranks of the Women's Peace Party, the Indiana branch, by action of its executive committee, hereby resigns its membership in the national organization."

The executive committee of the Indiana branch is composed of Mrs. Bennett, chairman; Mrs. Isaac Born, Mrs. J. F. Barnhill, Mrs. E. G. Richey, Mrs. M. F. Ault, Mrs. E. C. Rumpler, Mrs. W. P. Myer, Mrs. S. E. Perkins and Mrs. George C. Hitt.

"We are not willing to be connected with any organization in which leading women members are mixed up with the kind of movement that showed itself in Chicago yesterday," Mrs. Bennett said.

"For about two years, or ever since the Women's Peace Party was organized, the Indiana branch has been active in the organization. The Indiana and Massachusetts branches have worked along identical lines much of the time. Both branches strongly opposed the fight that was made at Washington against the passage of the army draft law, and they have worked together in other ways.

Will Fight Food Destruction.

An investigation, conducted by the members of the state council of defense, has established that a published report that fruit is being permitted to drop from the trees and rot on the ground, and cabbage is allowed to rot on the stalk, near Shelbyville, was unfounded. The state council is anxious that such waste be reported in every case, but it warns the consumers of the state than many such stories are started perhaps with no more foundation in fact than the one above referred to.

Test Aerial Lighthouse.

Tests were made under the direction of Carl G. Fisher, chairman of the airplane mapping committee of the national advisory committee on aeronautics, of a lamp that may be used in aerial lighthouse service on national aerial military routes. The lights are to be used on the first division of the aerial route between Dayton and Indianapolis, and will serve to guide aviators on night flights.

The tests were made of a 250-watt lamp, erected on a tower at the Beech Grove shops of the Big Four railroad. The lamp was put up by men of the Sanborn Electric company, one climbing a tall pole to adjust it. Mr. Fisher and associate observers were stationed in the fire tower of the Merchants bank building.

Shortly after eight o'clock the tests were made, and it was clearly shown that a red lamp of that power easily could be seen for ten or more miles. The man up the pole at Beech Grove carried with him a telephone line. The telephone was in connection with the fire tower on the Merchants bank building. On order of Mr. Fisher the man up the pole at Beech grove flashed the red lamp, and it was so easily discernible that all those who witnessed the move expressed surprise.

Heavy Smoke Hovered.

A rain was falling and a heavy smoke hovered over the railroad yards lying between the point of observation and the lamp. As the different tests of the glow of the lamp were made it was interesting to see how quickly the man on the pole responded to orders from the point of observation, miles away. At one time Mr. Fisher said to the man in charge of the lamp:

"Wave your hat back and forth in front of the lamp, Charlie."

Almost instantly Charlie's hat could be seen swinging back and forth in front of the big red globe.

The tests convinced Mr. Fisher that the best plan for marking the night routes of the aviators was the use of red globes.

"The use of white lights in conjunction with the red would be confusing," he said. "There are so many white lights in the towns and cities that they might confuse the fliers. Interurban cars and automobiles show such a brilliant white that, from a great altitude, the flier might be deceived. I believe the red lights are the thing."

The lamp it is proposed to use at intervals of every ten miles on the aviation course is a 500-watt lamp, twice the power of the one recently used, attached to a swivel that will make it discernible at every angle.

At Great Distance.

Mr. Fisher proposes soon to make another test at greater distance. The Fort Benjamin Harrison water tower and the Greenfield courthouse tower will be tried at an early date, the observers using the Indianapolis fire tower as a base. If electric current can be supplied a red globe may be placed in the hills between Indianapolis and Martinsville. This would give a range of at least 20 miles of clear vision.

Night flights already have begun at the Rantoul (Ill.) aviation field, and from 15 to 20 machines are in the air at Wright field, Dayton, almost every day. It will not be long until flights between Dayton and Rantoul, via Indianapolis, will begin. Thomas A. Wynne, who is displaying patriotic interest in the project as an assistant to Mr. Fisher, is visiting towns and cities between here and Rantoul to interest them in providing red glow lights for the aviators.

Big Demand for Coal Cars.

Demands for coal cars are heavier this year at this time than they were the same period during 1916, and railroads are supplying a big percentage of the demands, according to figures presented to the public service commission by representatives of various railroads in the state at a meeting held here. Figures show the railroads are meeting demands as follows: Pennsylvania, 54 per cent; Big Four, 71.7 per cent; Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern, 85.3 per cent; the Monon, Chicago, Indiana railway & Eastern and the Evansville & Indianapolis lines are supply 100 per cent. In 1916 during this same period the Big Four was asked for 714 cars and supplied 480. This year it has been asked for 821 cars and has supplied 589. The Pennsylvania in 1916 was asked for 1,916 cars and supplied 1,070. This year it has been asked for 2,172 cars and has supplied 1,072. The public service commission decided that water companies of the state will be entitled to priority in coal shipments. The gas companies will be next and then the light and power companies will be entitled to coal shipments. Coal operators will meet at Terre Haute and will decide what companies are to furnish the state with 200,000 tons of coal for its various institutions. It is expected that the amount will be proportioned among the different companies and that shipments will be made as short as possible. The insane hospitals of the state will be first supplied and other institutions will be cared for only after these institutions have all the coal they want.

Governor Much Better.

The condition of Governor Goodrich, ill at the Methodist hospital with typhoid fever, is materially improved, according to reports from the attending physicians received at the governor's office. The high fever, which has held the governor in its grip almost continually throughout his illness, apparently was breaking somewhat, his temperature being much lower in the morning hours than formerly has been the case. It was announced that it would be at least a week, however, before his fever is back to normal.

Indiana Brevities

Lafayette.—Bertha Dobbels, thirty-five years old of Attica, died in a hospital here.

Valparaiso.—Mrs. Hilda Hill, eighty-four years old, is dead at her home in Jackson township, where she had resided eighty years.

Greensburg.—Isaac Sefton, eighty years old, a retired farmer, is dead here.

Lawrenceburg.—The Bauer Cooperage company on September 17 will pay all of its employees a bonus of 10 per cent on their wages, dating from August 10.

Osgood.—Survivors of the Eighty-third Indiana regiment held their annual reunion here Tuesday and Wednesday, September 4 and 5.

Shelbyville.—The executive board of the Shelby County Red Cross will start a campaign on September 8 for establishing branch chapters at every town and hamlet in the county.

Shelbyville.—Mrs. H. H. Walker, directing the food conservation campaign for Shelby county under plans laid down by Food Director Hoover, is naming a large number of chairmen for every section of the county.

Greensburg.—Dr. Carl G. Winter of Indianapolis, recently elected worthy president of the Order of Eagles, will be the guest of honor at a big meeting to be held by the local aerie September 21. At that time many surrounding aeries will be represented and a large class of candidates will be initiated.

Rockport.—Walter Arnold, a high school boy of Grandview, was seriously injured when a heavy three-ton truck loaded with 100 bushels of wheat, crushed him against a warehouse platform. It is thought he is injured internally.

Sullivan.—Sullivan suffragists entertained Miss Jeannette Rankin, representative in the congress from Montana, who spoke at the Merom Chautauqua. A dinner was given in her honor.

Evansville.—Neal Kerney, coroner, has completed his investigation of the death of Andrew Cross, white, a teamster, who died a few days ago of injuries received in an alleged colored gambling house here. The coroner found that Cross died of injuries received in a fall down a flight of stairs.

Marion.—Dr. S. P. Hatton of Charleston, W. Va., has been elected president of the Marion Normal institute. Doctor Hatton was graduated at the University of Missouri and received an advanced degree from George Washington university. He has been connected with colleges in Maryland and West Virginia.

Bedford.—Roy Stroud, age fourteen, son of Robert Stroud, was killed while hunting. When he failed to return home at night, a searching party was formed and his body was found dangling in the forks of a tree, which he had climbed to dislodge a squirrel. His gun was discharged and the load passed through his heart.

Bicknell.—The four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Potts was bitten several days ago by a dog which was thought to be mad. The dog was killed and the head was sent to the state board of health. It was found the dog had rabies and the child was taken to Indianapolis for the pasteur treatment.

Jeffersonville.—Peter Kehoe, age forty, of New Albany, is in jail in Jeffersonville, where he will have a preliminary hearing soon before Benson R. Veasey, justice of the peace, on a charge of first degree murder, arising out of the death of Madison Dugan, who was assaulted August 12 on a ferry steamer, and subsequently drowned. Kehoe was brought here from Louisville.

Evansville.—The Voice is the name of a new weekly Socialist paper edited by Frank S. LaMonte.

Indianapolis.—John E. Spaan, state senator, was instantly killed when his auto was struck by an interurban car.

Aurora.—A farmers' fair will be held here October 6.

Greencastle.—Albert E. Albaugh has quit as rural mail carrier after a service of 12 years.

Anderson.—The city council has increased the tax rate from 95 cents to $1.04.

Tipton.—James Cloud, seventy-five, the first man to carry mail on a rural route out of Tipton, has resigned.

South Bend.—Following an epidemic of sickness here the health board has ordered the water to be boiled.

Madison.—Local dairymen have advanced the price of mik from 8 to 12 cents a quart.

Greensburg.—Eighteen acres of wheat on the Robert Dunnell farm, near Springhill avereged 37 bushels to the acre.

Rochester.—The city tax levy has been raised from 99 cents to $1.05.

Veedersburg.—The One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Indiana Volunteer infantry held its reunion here and elected John C. Templeton of Thorntown president.

Fort Wayne.—Jay Brown, deputy auditor for Allen county, has resigned.

Huntington.—The Wabash and Erie roads are employing girls in clerical work to take the places of drafted men.

Shelbyville.—Larue Burgess, fourteen, won the first prize for the best Poland China pig under seven months shown at the Shelby county fair.

Lafayette.—Wade H. Bolt has suspended the Otterbein Sun to enlist in the Marine Corps band.

Terre Haute.—The Indiana State Normal school here is to erect a new $150,000 auditorium

THE FOOD QUESTION.

The paragraphs here given are from portions of an open letter to Premier Lloyd-George, written by Mr. Arthur Mee, leader in the "Strength of Britain" movement. The subject matter is pertinent to any warring nation which permits the sale, manufacture, importation or exportation of intoxicants:

"It is only the food question that trembles in the balance," says our minister of agriculture. "Once we decide that in our favor peace will be nearer." Then what infamous treachery is it that turns this vital scale against us? We want 9,000,000 loaves a day, and brewers destroy 450,000 of them. If waste is a crime, who is the criminal here?

"You stopped the import of rum because we have enough to last for years, but a ship that might have brought in 500,000 loaves has just brought in 150,000 gallons of rum for 1920.

"A ship from a great wheat country has lately arrived with space crammed with brewers' vats.

"Bread costs life, you tell us; but you have allowed the brewers to import, at the risk of life, grain for 25,000 loaves every day since you came into power to destroy it for beer, and export the beer at the risk of life.

"It is not safe to imperil the health of our poor, while brewers grow rich by destroying bread. It is not safe to let poor people wait in queues for sugar while cartloads pour into brewers' destructors. You think it is not safe to deal with drink; but is it safe to fool with food?

"You talk of the workman, but have you asked him to give up his beer that we may have more to eat? You have not. You asked for his son and he gave him, and he will give you his beer if you ask. Our workmen are not Germans that they should drink us into famine, but they go on because they think you will say the word, as you have always done, when the vital moment comes."

BIG WAR PROBLEM.

"I have found in my forty-two years' experience with young men in the army camps that booze is responsible for 95 per cent of all the trouble they get into." Thus spake Col. W. J. Nicholson, commandant at Fort Sheridan, Ill. "When a young fellow with $15 in his pocket comes into a city for the first time he thinks he has to blow it in to be a man. And when he gets three or four drinks his whole viewpoint changes. My business is training men for the United States army, and in all the time I have been engaged in this work I have known of very few cases where liquor did not play an important part in causing the misdeeds for which men are disciplined. A soldier who gets drunk is only 40 per cent efficient and men of that type are not the ones this country is looking for to defend it."

FOR SOCIAL SAFETY.

It is, as I conceive it, the duty of health departments to teach, teach, teach, persuade, demonstrate, exhibit, exhort, prove that alcohol as a beverage or in patent medicines is a menace to personal and community health, is a common source of sickness and death, is blocking the path of preventive medicine and is a menace to the physical and social development of the nation.—Dr. Haven Emerson, New York City Health Commissioner.

The recent claims that lecithin, or "nerve fat," has been discovered in beer is interesting, if true. If it has—despite all the painstaking negative analyses of many generations of chemists—it is quite safe to estimate that the total amount contained in four carloads of beer might approximate the quantity concealed about the person of one vigorous fresh egg, which would give it a nutritional value almost as high as that of the hole in a doughnut. —Dr. Edwin F. Bowers.

THINK IT OVER.

W. D. Haywood, general secretary-treasurer of the I. W. W. in an interview in the Chicago Tribune said that the strikers in the lumber camps in the states of Washington, Idaho, Montana and Oregon and in British Columbia had made a record that he wanted the people to think about.

We quote him:

"We have about the righest, most uncouth crowd in the world in these lumber camps—that is what our enemies say about us, anyway. But I want to call your attention to the records: Not a single case of drunkenness has been reported from the I. W. W. strike zones among the lumberjacks in our movement. Think that over."

Washington, Idaho, Montana, Oregon and British Columbia are all dry.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Constitutional prohibition for the nation far from conferring upon the federal government new powers will take from the federal government power which it now has—the power to tax liquor. And it strengthens the police powers of the states to deal with internal affairs by adding to them the active support of the federal government. From being the nullifier of state laws, the federal government will become their supporter and a positive assistant in their enforcement.—Daniel Poling.

SHEEP'S CLOTHING

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

AUTHOR of "THE LONE WOLF," "THE BRASS BOWL," ETC.

COPYRIGHT BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

CALLED UPON SUDDENLY TO AID HER FATHER IN HIS SECRET SERVICE WORK, LYDIA IS ATTACKED IN THE DARK BY STRANGERS BUT IS RESCUED.

Synopsis—Lydia Craven, traveling under the name of Lucy Carteret, runs away from her home in England to go to Thaddeus Craven, her father, in New York, whom she hasn't seen for five years. Three days out on board the steamer Alsatia, she runs plump into her father making love to Mrs. Merrilees, a young widow, engaged to marry him. There is some embarrassment, for Craven was known as a bachelor in America, but explanations clear the air of doubts. Craven tells Lydia he is a secret service agent of England in New York. The last installment told that Craven had asked Lydia to meet him outside her stateroom at midnight.

—9—

She had begged to be permitted to help him, and Craven promised to command her services, if ever need should arise; but his tone in promising had been mellow with an indulgence deprecating the implication that Downing Street's secret ambassador could ever need the aid of woman's hands and wits in his occult and momentous affairs.

Yet already that time had come! She was half wild with delight.

After some minutes the quiet of the ship was made musical with the mellow and deliberate sounding of eight bells, midnight. She had still half an hour to wait—an almost insufferably protracted vigil, with every faculty tense in apprehension of the premature return of her Dowager Dragon.

But tonight nothing happened to change this custom; and the stroke of one bell of the midnight watch found Lydia, unhindered, leaving her door, a long cloak effectually disguising her light dinner gown.

Cautiously, with swift glances making sure that the alleyway was empty all down its darkened length, she stole forward, slipped quickly through the port doorway into the welcome blankness which closed round her like a magic garment of invisibility. At intervals electric bulbs incased in hemispheres of clouded glass blotted the obscurity overhead, but lent little aid to the girl's straining vision. And, now that most of the passengers were abed, every port she passed was dark.

At the fifth stanchion, midway between two of the overhead lights, she found no one waiting; and, since she had encountered no one on the way, she groped on to the sixth, found it deserted, and, returning, settled down to wait.

Suddenly Craven stood before her—the effect as mysterious as his business: with no warning of any sort, he was there!

Without speaking, Lydia stretched forth a hand to his. He suffered her caress without apparent emotion, and, peering anxiously into his face, she saw it set in a mold of care and vigilance—even now, when they were utterly alone!

When he spoke it was in a preoccupied tone. "Hope I haven't kept you waiting."

"Only a moment."

He shook his head wearily. "I was detained." For several seconds he seemed deep in thought. Then his words came swiftly, "I'm suspected—watched! Did anyone see you?"

She thrilled deliciously. "I think not. I've been here some time, quite undisturbed."

"Good. But they nearly got me!"

"Who?"

He smiled faintly. "The other side."

Lydia's grasp tightened on his plump fingers. "You—you're not in danger?"

"Don't be alarmed. They'd never dare attempt anything aboard this vessel. But I've stolen a march on them—and something else, something more valuable." Straining a dramatic pause to the snapping point, he eased it with a word, "Evidence!"

At this the foghorn whooped like a demon of derision. Until it was quiet again Craven stood moveless, chin on bosom, eyes blank with abstraction.

"Yes," he affirmed, "dev'lish good evidence! Look here, I'll have to tell you something. We've been sold out—I mean there's a traitor in our corps."

"But can't you do something?"

"Rather!" Craven laughed shortly. "In fact, I have done something already. He won't go far; for his word—a squealer's word—won't have much weight with the other side, lacking proofs, and I've got the evidence to discredit him," he paused again, touched his breast lightly but effectively, "here!"

Again interrupted by the foghorn, he started and frowned irritably, seeming to detect something sardonic in its accent.

"Well—that's all. You understand now. The point is, I'm known to have—ah—stolen this evidence. But don't worry. This is where you come in." From his coat pocket Craven produced a small, oblong box of inlaid wood, highly polished. "I've managed to pack the evidence in this, one of those Chinese puzzle boxes. If you don't know the combination, it needs an ax to open it. Put it away somewhere—your trunk till we land—but take it ashore in your handbag. A tip from the other side, you know, and the customs inspectors'll turn my luggage inside out; but you're, perfectly safe, you see, coming in as an alien. They'll pass you on your declaration."

The girl slipped the box—it was about large enough to hold a deck of cards—into the lining pocket of her cloak. "I'll keep it safe," she said quietly.

"Dear child! It's so good to have you to count on!" Craven patted her cheek affectionately. "Nothing like one's own flesh and blood! I thought I could trust that man; he was my only aide this trip." He sighed profoundly, and shook a doleful head. "Well—good-night again. I'll go aft again; you forward. We mustn't be seen confabulating out here at this hour."

He stepped back two paces and vanished like a shape of dream.

For a moment or two the girl lingered, listening keenly; but, hearing nothing, not even Craven's retreating footsteps, she finally took heart and moved quietly forward beside the rail.

But she had put barely eight paces behind her when she checked smartly, with an inarticulate gasp, just short of one whose burly figure, motionless, barred her path. And then, as she stepped back and turned in toward the superstructure, thinking in her panic to escape by a sudden dash for the companionway, some whim of chance caused the tenant of the nearest stateroom to turn on the lights, and two square windows leaped refulgent out of the gloom, the nearer silhouetting the head and shoulders of another man into whose embrace, as well, she had been on the point of throwing herself.

Simultaneously strong hands fell upon her shoulders from behind, she was whirled about into the hollow of a powerful arm, and an incipient scream was smothered on her lips by the impact of a heavy palm.

CHAPTER VIII.

Later she recalled that one of the foghorn's agonized squalls had seemed like a signal for the attack. It was reverberating in her ears, like the shriek of a damned soul, all the while she was struggling in that brutal embrace. It was still yammering even when she was released.

Throughout her consciousness was faithfully registering nightmare impressions—of the second man closing in to aid her first assailant; of a savage tearing of her cloak; of cynical accents breathed hatefully in her ear, "Easy now! Take it easy, little one, if you don't want to get hurt! Steady—so!" of someone swearing fretfully; of a third voice rapping out an oath of rage; of sounds like the crack of a pistol shot, the thud of a heavy fall, a grunt of pain, a vile expression from him who held her—

And then she was free—and the foghorn still screeching!

She staggered back to the rail, her brain reeling, no true coherence in her consciousness—only the struggle between instinctive desire to scream and the knowledge that for some reason she mustn't.

Then a friendly voice saluted faculties just beginning to comprehend that chance had sent a rescue. "You, Miss Craven? You?" Quoin was bending solicitously over her as she clung trembling to the rail.

Words come with difficulty from a throat parched with fright. "Oh!" she cried, one hand to her bosom. "Mr. Quoin!"

"You're quite safe now. But are you hurt, Miss Craven?"

"I'm all right, I think. Oh, thank you, Mr. Quoin!"

"There! I've done nothing—just happened along at the right time—thank God! But the first thing is to get you out of this confounded fog!"

"No—please—one moment—"

The girl was searching frantically for the lining pocket in her cloak.

And then at last she found it, and it was empty.

She turned a vacant stare to Quoin's puzzled regard. A sense of suffocation oppressed her, and his voice sounded from a far distance:

"What's the matter? You're sure you're not hurt? Can I do anything?"

"I've been robbed!" she managed to articulate piteously.

"Then," he urged, "let me see you to your stateroom. Afterward I'll find the captain—"

"No, no! Oh, please, no! Don't tell anybody."

He stared. "Let me get this straight." he said after a moment. "You've been subjected to a dastardly attack, and robbed, and don't want me to lodge a complaint with the officers?"

"Yes, yes!" she nodded. "Yes, that's it—don't tell anybody. Promise me that—please promise!"

"If that's your wish," he said coolly, "I've no right to oppose it."

"I'm sorry," she faltered; "but it's something I can't explain. If I'd only myself to think of—" She checked in consternation at that slip.

"I see," Quoin said gently. "It's another's secret—not all your own?"

She was silent.

"But," he persisted, "you've been robbed of something valuable—whether yours or another's. Do you mean to let it go without effort to regain it?"

"Oh, no—something must be done!" She worked her hands together in helpless torment.

"Then you don't mean to let the matter drop? But can you accomplish anything unaided? I don't want to seem intrusive, but I'm really a bit experienced in such matters, you know. And of the many who have trusted me, none has ever regretted it."

"Oh, I know, I know, Mr. Quoin! But what can I tell you? That I don't know what it is I've lost?"

His brows lifted at this. "Is that possible, Miss Craven?"

"It's the truth," she protested. "It—something was given me to take care of, something—I don't know what—in a little wooden Chinese puzzle box, and that has been stolen from me."

Quoin nodded. "These men who attacked you—do you know them?"

"I haven't the slightest suspicion who they were."

There was honesty in her accents; Quoin believed her. "I think—possibly—I can find them for you, with your permission."

"You saw them?"

"No. But among our fellow passengers are two card sharps, one of whom at least is quite capable of more felonious work. I know both," he smiled gravely, "in a business way."

"But surely you couldn't have recognized either—"

"No. The fog was too thick. But I marked one of the brutes for future identification."

"Marked?"

"The sign of my fist on his face—a heavy blow, so heavy it bruised my own knuckles. Give me permission to do what I can, and I'll look up the quarters of my acquaintances, the card sharps, make them let me in—I know a way to coerce 'em—and see if either wears my brand. If so, you'll have the puzzle within fifteen minutes—and no questions asked!"

"You are very kind," the girl murmured in confusion.

Doesn't the suspicion grow in your mind that Quoin is using his reputation as a detective for some secret, illegal purpose? Do you fathom his game?

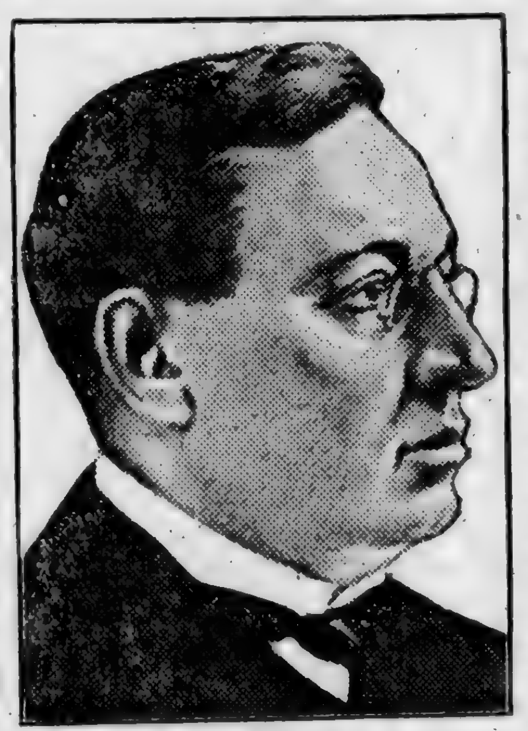
(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Wrote a Famous Song.

Annie M'Vicar Grant is a name that will always be honored by Scotchmen, as that of the author of "The Blue Bells of Scotland." She was born in Glasgow 162 years ago, and as a child was brought to America by her father, an officer of the British army. Her childhood was spent in Albany. At thirteen she was taken back to Scotland, and while still a girl became the wife of Rev. James Grant. Her husband died, leaving her with eight children to support, and she turned to literature as a means of earning a living.

She was a prolific writer of both verse and prose. Her "Letters from the Mountains," in three volumes, and "Memoirs of an American Lady," in two volumes, were widely read, and these and other literary works provided Mrs. Grant with an excellent income. Of all that she wrote, however, only her famous song, "The Blue Bells of Scotland," has survived to the present generation. Mrs. Grant died in 1838, at the age of eighty-three.

CALLED TO IMPORTANT WORK

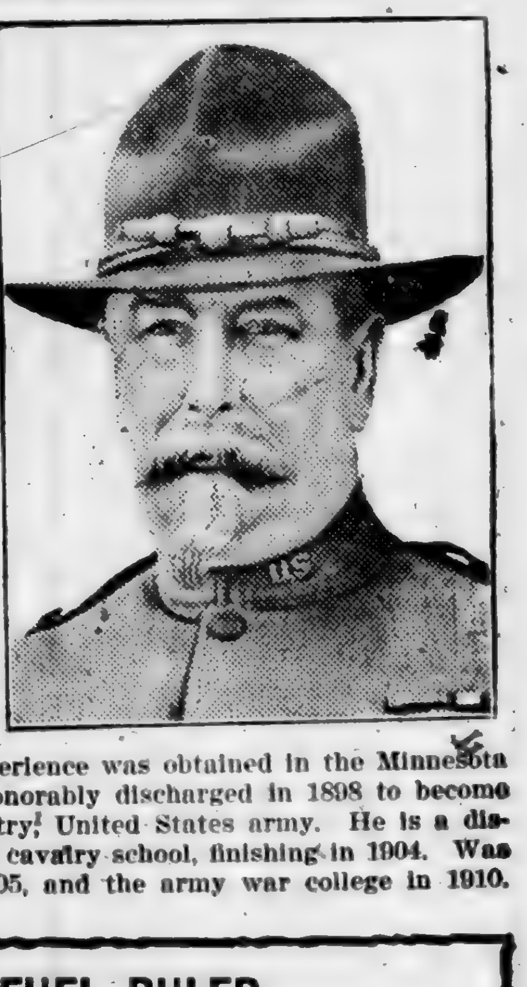


Judge Julian Mack, on whom devolves much of the work connected with the insurance of the soldiers drafted for the war with Germany, was born in San Francisco and has lived most of his mature life in Chicago. He was graduated from the law school at Harvard in 1877 and later studied at Berlin and Leipzig from 1887 to 1890. He was professor of law at Northwestern university and the University of Chicago previous to 1903, when he was made civil service commissioner in Chicago. Later he was judge of the circuit court of Cook country, later judge of the juvenile court in that city. In 1909 he was made judge of the United States circuit court for the First district of Illinois. In 1911, when the new commerce court was organized, he was named to it by President Taft.

Judge Mack, in a recent interview, after briefly outlining the defects of the pension system as applied after the Civil war and after the Spanish-American war, said:

"What the government intends to do may be expressed in two thoughts: 'Win the war' and 'give a square deal to our fighting men.' We must relieve the men under arms from all worry about their families, and we must see to it that the families do not suffer overmuch from the enforced absence of the breadwinners. As the secretary of the treasury has said, when we draft a wage earner we call not only him but the entire family to the flag; the sacrifice entailed is not divisible. It is up to the people of this country to see that the dependent wives and children, fathers and mothers of our fighting men are not reduced to want. We must maintain them until the soldiers and sailors can return and look after them."

IN COMMAND AT CAMP LOGAN



Maj. Gen. George Bell, Jr., designated to command Camp Logan, Houston, was born in Maryland, January 23, 1859, and consequently is fifty-eight years of age. He is recognized as one of the ablest commanding officers in the army.

He entered the United States Military academy at West Point in June of 1876. He was graduated as second lieutenant of infantry in 1880 and six years later was made a first lieutenant. He became a captain of infantry in 1898, in the meantime having won his L. L. B. degree at Cornell in 1894. He was advanced to the rank of major in 1903, and in 1911 was promoted to lieutenant colonel. Two years later he was a colonel assigned to the Sixteenth infantry. He was promoted to his present rank in 1914.

Lieut. Col. William K. Naylor, who is General Bell's chief of staff at Camp Logan, was born in Illinois, November 24, 1874. His first military experience was obtained in the Minnesota National Guard, from which he was honorably discharged in 1898 to become a second lieutenant in the Ninth infantry, United States army. He is a distinguished graduate of the infantry and cavalry school, finishing in 1904. Was graduated from the staff college in 1905, and the army war college in 1910.

NAMED AS FUEL RULER

Dr. Harry A. Garfield, president of Williams college, who is now engaged in fixing the price of wheat, was appointed by the president as coal director with full authority to administer the provisions of the fuel sections of the food control act.

Mr. Garfield outlined his program tentatively, revealing that a licensing system was contemplated, patterned after the scheme adopted by Food Administrator Herbert C. Hoover with respect to wheat.

Unless the operators, jobbers and retailers fail at some point to carry out the rules and regulations that will be laid down, the government does not propose for the present either to commandeer the mines or take over the output.

The only prices remaining to be fixed are those of the retailers.

It was suggested by Mr. Garfield that public sentiment might be sufficient to keep the retail prices down, in view of the fact that the cost to the retailers would be common knowledge.

Ice Cream Festival

The Red Cross home made ice cream social, given Saturday evening in the basement of the Lutheran church, was a decided success. It was well patronized. The ice cream was just right and the cakes were fine, and we defy any town to produce a better looking bunch of girls than the St. Joe young ladies who acted as waitresses. Everybody did their best to do their "bit," and the promoters have nothing left to be desired and cordially thank the people of the town and vicinity. The amount cleared was $14 05, all of which will be used to buy yarn and material to make hospital supplies. Every lady is requested to come to the work room and help make the things which will be needed by our soldier boys the coming winter.

GOMMITTEE.

New Postoffice Clerk

Miss Olive Ridgway has accepted the clerkship in the postoffice resigned by Miss Inez Hart She began on Monday morning. The young lady will not neglect her school work, however, attending to her duties at the postoffice outside school hours.

PASSENGER FACILITIES WILL BE TAXED TO THE UTMOST,

Passenger facilities of the railroads of the United States will be taxed to the utmost the coming month, in transporting the 687,000 men in the regular army to the various cantonments, carrying visitors to numerous state fairs and handling the regular passenger traffic.

The movement of troops must have precedence over all other traffic, even if it necessitates a reduction or even the abolition of the special trains which in former years have been run to accommodate those attending state and county fairs. It is possible that in places there may be difficulty in maintaining on certain days the regular passenger service, on account of the extraordinary call by the government for passenger equipment.

To move merely one field army of 80,000 men requires 6,229 cars, made up into 366 trains with 366 locomotives and train crews. In addition to moving the 687,000 men in the regular army, the railroads have been asked to transport 350,000 men of the national guard to their training camps. Between September 5 and September 9 the railroads must complete the movement of 2,000,000 men, about 30 per cent. of the new army and the transportation of the entire force must be completed early in October.

SINGLE MEN RESENT ACTION OF BOARD IN HOWARD COUNTY.

The Howard county military selection board Tuesday sent a letter to the first district official board at La-Porte asking that body to exempt all married men the Howard county board had certified to it as accepted for military service. The board's decision to take this action was reached after studying the latest communications from State Conscription Agent Eschbach.

The Howard county quota of 216 men had been made up. This action will cut the quota in two in the middle, as fully half the men the board had held for service are married. The board had examined 1,142 men to get the quota. It expects to have to examine fully that many more if the district board grants all the exemptions that have been recommended. The board's action is being joyously acclaimed by the married men who have not been examined, and is being criticised by the unmarried men who are due to be called.

When Senator Watson says our war is "unpopular" does he mean kaiserism is "unpopular?" We have made our choice between war with liberty and submissiveness with kaiserism triumphant. Does Senator Watson believe we have made an "unpopular" choice? Does he want us to think he believes we should have chosen the surrender to kaiserism as the "popular" thing? Senator Watson has permitted his quest for pro-kaiser votes to lead him far into partisan foolishness and flagrant un-Americanism.

It may be true that the Germans are talking of the kaiser as a presidential possibility in the future Teutonic republic. We are free to say the kaiser could not get to be constable in our township.

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

The $20 pig surely is a "parlor" pet.

"If the weather continues warm and our motorists continue to use this new 200 skunk power gasoline we'll all have to wear gas masks when we go out airing," said Dudley Glass.

Training of the personnel of base hospital No. 32, of Indianapolis, began Monday when that unit reported at Fort Benjamin Harrison. Its personnel includes 24 commissioned physicians, 65 nurses, 180 enlisted men and ten civilian employes. Dr. Edmund D. Clark is general director of the unit with the rank of major.

GARRETT CITIZEN ASKS NATURALIZATION PAPERS.

Frederick Zweibricker of Garrett, has filed his petition for naturalization, with the clerk of the circuit court of DeKalb county. He was born November 6, 1855, at Brundental Germany, and on March 14, 1882, he left the Belgium port at Antwerp for the United States, arriving at Philadelphia seventeen days later by the vessel Montreal.

On October 25, 1913, he declared his intentions of becoming an American citizen with the filing of his first papers in the DeKalb circuit court.

He came to Indiana on March 31, 1883, and located at Garrett, where he has worked for the B. & O. railroad company as tender, repair man for many years.

He is the father of eight children three of whom were born in Germany. They are: Lena, born on February 17, 1877, at Brundental, Germany, now residing at Garrett.

Katherine, born May 4, 1880, at Brundental, Germany, now residing at Detroit, Michigan.

Jacob, born February 2, 1882, at Brundental, Germany, now residing at South Chicago, Illinois.

Fred, born June 17, 1885, at Garrett, now residing at Chicago, Illinois.

Anna, born September 8, 1886, at Garrett, now residing at Toledo, Ohio.

Anthony, born August 29, 1888, at Garrett, now residing at Detroit, Michigan.

Frank, born October 19, 1892, at Garrett, now residing at Bloomington, Illinois.

Clara, born July 25, 1894, at Garrett, now residing at Toledo, Ohio.

Harvey O. Williams and Luther N Chorpenning are witnesses to the fact that they have known Frederick Zweibricker for the past seven years.

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh atan alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

FORT WAYNE SOCIALISTS ANNOUNCE THEIR PLATFORM.

The Fort Wayne socialist party has announced its candidates and platform for the coming city election this fall. The platform takes up three points. First the socialists would have home rule to enable the municipality to own and operate coal and wood yards, ice and packing plants, telephone systems and street railways.

Second the socialists would abolish contract labor on all public work, the labor to be hired by the city direct. The wages paid would not be less than the union scale. The third provision of the platform is the prohibiting of companies, corporations or individuals from using private armed forces or professional strikebreakers in time of labor trouble.

PROVIDING MOVIE SHOW FOR EVERY 3,000 SOLDIERS.

A motion picture show for every 3,000 men in military training camps is to be provided. The national war work council of the international committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, following a recommendation of the secretary of war's commission on training camp activities has just awarded contracts for these entertainments. More than 300 picture show places are to be provided for the 1,000,000 men that are expected to be in camp by November.

Camps are to be notified in advance what sort of pictures will be sent at a certain time, and films for these exhibitions are often obtained for two, three or even more distributing points. Some of the exhibits are to be given in theaters especially constructed for the purpose, while others are to be presented in the open air. The musical accompaniment carries from piano or organ music to a full band.

Department secretaries will fill out a blank after the exhibition noting the attendance of the performance, both men and officers, weather conditions and comments on how the films were received and if more than one presentation was demanded. Censorship is of the strictest nature, and every film must have a direct, positive value.

Fear of tuberculosis caused John Fisher, aged 39, of Martinsville, to take his own life by shooting himself through the right temple with a revolver. He had been in poor health for some time, and told his mother recently that he feared that he would be a victim of the "white plague" and that he would rather be dead than suffer from the disease.

TRAMP THROWS CARBOLIC ACID ON YOUNG GIRL.

Three hundred armed men residing in the vicinity of Warsaw searched for a tramp Monday afternoon and evening who had thrown carbolic acid on Hazel Deaton, the fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Cyrus Deaton of near Warsaw. The girl had promised to get the tramp something to eat and as she turned to lock the screen door the tramp dashed the acid in her face. The girl shielded her face with her hands when the acid was thrown. She was but slightly burned on the lower part of her face but more seriously on her arms.

The whole neighborhood was soon aroused and an armed posse hunted nearly all night and all day Tuesday for the tramp but no clue has been found and it is believed that he made good his escape.

CRISIS OF WOMAN'S LIFE

Change Safely Passed by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Wagoner, Okla.—"I never get tired of praising Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because during Change of Life I was in bed two years and had two operations, but all the doctors and operations did me no good, and I would have been in my grave today had it not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which brought me out of it all right, so I am now well and do all my housework, besides working in my garden. Several of my neighbors have got well by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. VIOLA FINICAL, Wagoner, Okla.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and dizziness should be heeded by middle-aged women. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has carried many women safely through the crisis.

Got a Line on Them.

Two English laborers who were on the road to Birmingham to get work happened to meet an old Irishman breaking stones on the roadside. They inquired of Pat how long it would take to get there. Pat simply looked at them and made no reply. Thinking he was deaf they walked on. When they had gone about 300 yards he called after them, so they came back.

"Ye asked me how long it would take to go to Birmingham?"

"Yes," they said.

"Well," said Pat, "it will take ye four hours."

"Why didn't you tell us that before?" they asked.

"Well, now," said Pat, "how could I tell ye until I saw how fast ye could walk first?"

Gave Daddy Away.

"Boots and shoes repaired neatly while you wait." So said a notice in the window. A small boy entered the shop and placed a pair of patent leathers on the counter.

"Please, father wants 'em repaired," he ventured timidly.

"What's he want done to them?" inquired the tradesman.

"Wants 'em soled an' heeled," piped the youngster, "also wants them stretched."

"Stretched as well, eh?" said the sole saver. "And where do they pinch him?"

"They don't pinch 'im," replied the ingenuous boy. "He pinched them."

In after years a man begins to appreciate the woman who handed him the icy mitt.

The Other Side.

"Young man," said the office manager, "if you knew as much about the business of this firm as you do about baseball you'd be holding down my job."

"I know that, sir," replied the office boy. "And if you'd make your business as interesting as baseball you'd have kids begging for a chance to work for you and willing to pay for the privilege."

The vindictive chap never has as much fun as the fellow who can smile and forget it.

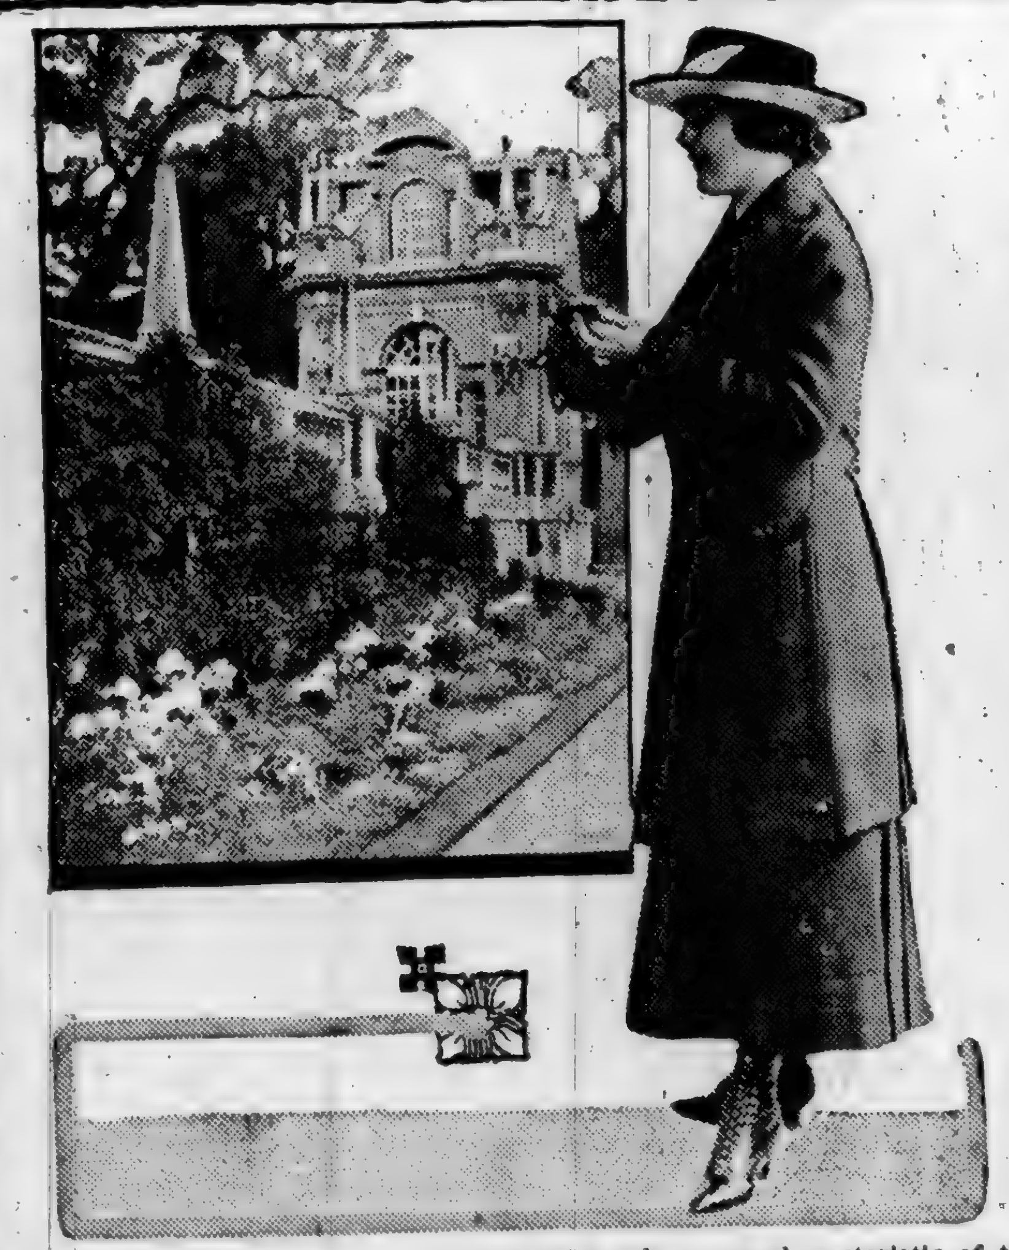
Fine Example of Tailored Suit



In the styles so far presented for fall and winter there are no radical departures from those of the passing season. Usually when the time comes to buy new clothes, the attention of the feminine public is almost wholly centered on incoming styles. But just now other absorbing interests are taking so much time that women are best suited with conservative ideas in dress. They are readjusting their lives in order to become helpful in time of war.

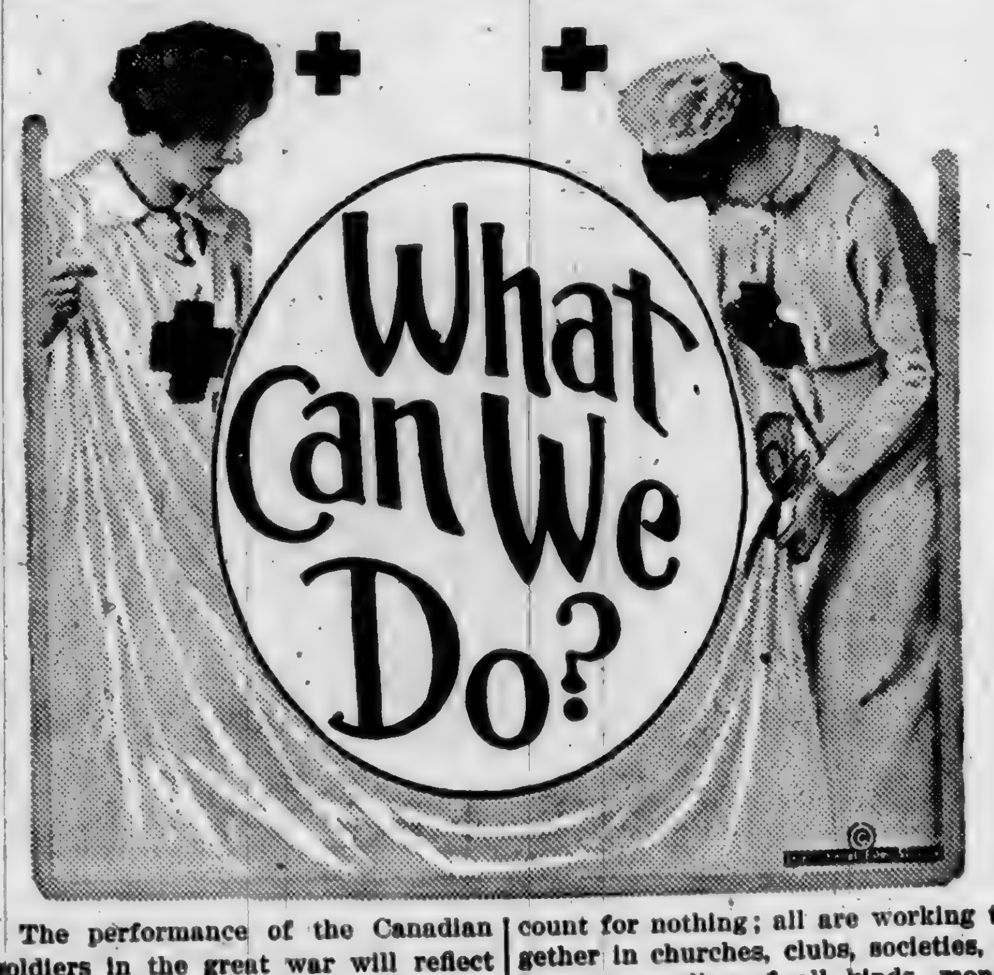
The most noticeable difference between the tailored suit for fall and those of last spring is in the length of coats. In coat suits the coats are longer. But a plain three-quarter length even if it did service last year, will find itself much at home among the plain suits just turned out. Besides added length the fall coats present a new feature in placing of trimmings. In many of them decoration appears only at the sides of the coat, where short bands of fur or braid or stitching find a place.

Soft surfaces, like wool velours, and quiet colors, are characteristic of the season. Colors most popular are those classed as "the fur colors" including taupe, gray, brown castor, beige. Dark wine and the shades of amethyst in the richest tones relieve a range that would otherwise be too grave. Dark blue is good as always.

One of the new fall suits is shown in the picture and is a model which looks well in any of the popular wool materials. The skirt has a panel with two plaits at each side down the back, which correspond to plaits in the coat. It is otherwise plain.

The coat is semifitting with two straps of the material across the back at the waistline. Below these is a straight panel like that in the skirt. A panel finished with three rows of braid at the bottom is set in at each side below a long side body which fastens over it with a button.

The pointed muffler collar is a new development of this admirable and popular style in collars. From every standpoint this is a fine example among well-tailored suits.



What Can We Do?

The performance of the Canadian soldiers in the great war will reflect glory on their country and race, as long as history lasts. But their record is matched by that of the women of Canada who have thrown themselves heart and soul into war work of all kinds. They have shown energy and endurance and bravery equal to that of their men. There is no calculating the value of the services they have given and the sacrifices they have made.

The same disposition to help shows itself among women all over this country. There are few among us so dense as to fail to see that it is disgraceful to be a slacker in times like these.

The government cannot do all the work that must be done for the soldiers and for those he leaves when he goes out to war. The soldier must be provided with clothing, socks, underwear, shirts, sweaters, mufflers and mits, when on duty. These things wear out and must be replaced. Hospitals must be supplied with sleeping garments, slippers, bandages, dressings, and an endless stream of surgical supplies must flow into them, besides sheets, pillow cases and other things that are made by women. Comfort kits are to be furnished for every fighting man, and every one is entitled to messages from someone back home, whether he has relatives and friends there or not.

Prisoners and the men in hospitals are to be remembered with letters and provisions, when possible. And besides all this, for the soldiers, there is the work of looking after the welfare of the poorer families left at home.

All these things require the volunteer work of women, money and more money. Women are showing themselves equal to the task set them. The thing for each one to do is to decide what part of the service she will enter, and to enlist in that and serve as long as she is needed. Social distinctions count for nothing; all are working together in churches, clubs, societies, to furnish supplies of all kinds, money and to do the work at hand whatever it is.

Batik Work.

Batik work, which first made a general appearance in our shops a few months ago, has been adopted as we usually adopt good ideas, and may be use in the future. Various fabrics are now treated with this process, which produces such unusual and interesting designs, and batik flowers are a not unusual form of trimming on afternoon frocks.

Corded Yokes.

When making a smock or a blouse that is to have a corded yoke, it is advisable to finish the yoke completely and when attaching the blouse section simply slip the pieces under the corded part and stitch right above the cording. All you will then have to do is to trim the under edges and roll them up.

Huge Silk Bags Match Suits.

Huge moire or other silk bags, in suit colorings and mounted on frames are being carried by New York women. They are something entirely new in handbags. While not really knitting bags, they are long enough to hold the needles and large enough in every way.

Helps Keep Shape.

One of the striking midsummer suits of rajah silk shows a four-inch fringe of silk about the bottom of the coat.

It not only is attractive to look at, but it is quite useful, for it is heavy enough to act as a weight to keep the skirt of the coat hanging straight and wrinkleless.

WHERE HE LOST INTEREST

Working Man Couldn't See Where There Were Any Bones to Be Left From His Sunday Joint.

For half an hour the working-class audience had listened patiently to the talented lady who was speaking to them about economical and nourishing cookery. She had talked about eggless puddings and butterless cakes, and now said, with a smile:

"I will now tell you about a splendid soup which can be made for next to nothing. Take the bones left over from your Sunday joint—"

At that a man in the middle of the hall rose to his feet with a disgusted look on his face, and said to his mate:

"'Ere, Bill, let's get out o' this."

"What's wrong?" asked the other, in surprise. "Don't you like soup?"

"Aye, I like soup well enough," was the grumbler's reply; "but how many bones does she think there are in a half a pound o' liver?"—London Tit-Bits.

Feed the Fighters! Win the War!!

Harvest the Crops—Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

The new maid would not rise early enough. Gentle reproof seemed vain and finally the master and mistress tried the inferential method of blame and left the damsel asleep whilst they prepared the breakfast for themselves.

"We'll shame her to it," said the master.

Not a word was said until nine o'clock the same evening, when the girl tapped at the door of the sitting room.

"Is there anything else I can do, mum?" she respectfully inquired.

There was nothing and she turned to go to bed, but at the door remembered something.

"If you're down before me in the morning, mum," she observed, "you'll find the eggs in the icebox in the pantry."

For nine long years he had been wooing the fair daughter of the farm.

"Jennie," he mused, as they sat on the old fence. "I read the other day that in a thousand years the Lakes of Killarney will dry up."

WOMEN! IT IS MAGIC! LIFT OUT ANY CORN

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

Just think! You can lift off any corn or callus without pain or soreness.

A Cincinnati man discovered this ether compound and named it freezone. Any druggist will sell a tiny bottle of freezone, like here shown, for very little cost. You apply a few drops directly upon a tender corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears, then shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it right off.

Freezone is wonderful. It dries instantly. It doesn't eat away the corn or callus, but shrivels it up without even irritating the surrounding skin.

Hard, soft or corns between the toes, as well as painful calluses, lift right off. There is no pain before or afterwards. If your druggist hasn't freezone, tell him to order a small bottle for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Time to Get Ready.

The other day a man telephoned to the draft selection board for Marion county outside of Indianapolis and asked whether it is necessary to have the wife's signature on an affidavit for an exemption claim. He was told it is necessary if he is claiming exemption on the ground that his wife is dependent on him.

"Won't anyone else do?" the inquirer asked. "My wife says she won't sign it."

The board member told the man that the best thing he could do was to "get ready to go."

THE LATEST TYPE OF HOG SHELTER

Model House Must Be Clean, Airy, Light, Roomy, Says Expert.

GOOD STYLE DESCRIBED HERE

Provides Essentials to Health of Stock — Upkeep Low if First-Class Material Goes Into Building.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

What is required for the successful raising of hogs? The answer is pure air, good water, clean feed and clean pastures. Ventilation supplies pure air, a deep well with power pump and a system of water pipes will supply pure water in abundance. A good concrete floor with a waterproof surface graded to lead the surplus liquid away will fix the drainage. A hose attachment will quickly wash the floor, the concrete or steel troughs and force the dirt out of the bottom of the drains. Steel partitions between the pens discourage bacteria and a combination of all of these improvements insures success.

A winter hoghouse of the most modern type is shown in the perspective and floor plan. It is made on the sawtooth plan with the upper windows placed directly over the pens. The roof plan is worked out to fit the latitude in which it is to be built, so the sun will shine into the nests at farrowing time, both spring and fall.

The building is 24 feet by 54 feet in size, built of structural tile, on a foundation of concrete. This makes a hollow wall above grade which is both windproof and dampproof. The concrete floor slopes from the outside walls to the gutters at the sides of the center feeding alley. These gutters drain out at the far end of the hoghouse and are easily kept clean with a hose.

The equipment inside is made as completely sanitary as possible with steel partitions, manure and feed carriers suspended from overhead tracks, feed troughs made of concrete for the large sows and feed troughs made of steel for the smaller hogs. The house is planned and built for easy cleaning and for ease and comfort in doing the work.

On the north side of the hoghouse it is advisable to build a long, narrow dipping tank for the hogs. It should be 18 inches wide at the top and 8 inches wide at the bottom, inside measurement. The tank should be 20 feet long on the bottom, with a 10-foot approach at each end. The incline down into the tank should be made smooth and the one leading out of the tank should be corrugated.

The tank is made narrow for two reasons: In the first place, less dipping fluid is needed for a narrow tank, and the second reason is that when a hog gets started through a tank as narrow as this, it cannot turn around. The length is about sufficient to give the dipping fluid time to soak into the hair and skin of the animal, while it is swimming through. A depth of 2 feet is sufficient for the large hogs. It is not filled full for the smaller ones. The object is to have the fluid deep enough to cover the hog all but its nose and eyes. A portable fence, made in panels, is placed outside of the trough when in use. After dipping, the portable fence panels are fitted over against the lane fence and are wired fast to hold them upright until needed again.

To protect hogs from vermin in the summer time, the cheapest and most convenient arrangement is a hog wallow. Where a good many hogs are kept, a number of wallows are necessary. These are made of concrete by first digging a pit about a foot deep. The concrete floor is made in the bottom of this pit by pounding down stones and filling in between them with concrete grout mortar. Then the inside wooden forms are put in place and the side walls are raised a foot above the floor. The earth is dug square so as to answer for the outside form. The top of the hog wallow walls are made after the fashion of a curb, to reach up above the ground about 2 inches to keep out dirt. A 2 by 4 is used as an outside form above the ground.

These hog wallows should be neatly finished. The forms should be made true and the curb or coping should be beveled on the edges so as to give a neat appearance and prevent chipping. The wallows are built along the stock lane at intervals, so the hogs may be admitted from the different fields, either by opening the gates or by creeps.

The yards in front of the hoghouse should be paved with concrete. The work is done by grading the ground with a drop of about 2 inches in the width of the floor, which is 16 feet. The concrete is laid sidewalk fashion, by marking off the area with 2 by 4's, making blocks 6 feet square. The lower part of the blocks may be made with a lean mixture of concrete on top of which a surface layer rich enough to prevent water-logging is placed. The hog feeding floor is not intended for hard use, so it is neither thick nor expensive, but it answers the purpose splendidly.

There should be a good wire fence all around the outside, stapled to concrete posts. The floor is used for feeding and as an exercising yard for hogs during the fall and spring, and when the weather is mild in winter. In summer and fall the feeding floor is used to finish the hogs for the market. Sometimes a bunch of 20 or 30 will be fed on the floor every day for a week or two and permitted to walk back to the fields between feeds. Later on, say two weeks before shipping, they are confined on the feeding floor and in the hoghouse until ready for market. This makes a combination summer and winter hoghouse.

Such a complete hog department as this requires a number of small portable hoghouses to be used in the fields. Sanitary hog raising plans should be carried out all through the different seasons. Winter pasture as well as spring, fall and summer pasture should be provided in different fields of the farm to work in with a thorough system of rotation of crops.

The portable houses may be 6 by 8 feet, simply made, with shed roofs. They may be hauled away and placed in any field for the accommodation of sows with their litters, or to make sleeping quarters for the older pigs when running on pasture. The size mentioned is small enough so that a sow with her litter of pigs can keep warm when the temperature is below freezing. This size also accommodates about a half-dozen shoats. They need shelter from storms and sleeping quarters at night.

The principle of ventilation is the same in all kinds of farm buildings. The air is heated by the bodies of the animals and rises. This air is replaced by fresh air coming in from below. The lower door is almost always open, in these houses, and upper doors are provided to take care of the discharge.

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 16

THE FIERY FURNACE.

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 3.

GOLDEN TEXT—When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shalt the flame kindle upon thee.—Isaiah 43:2.

I. The Occasion (vv. 1-7). The fact that God said to Nebuchadnezzar, "Thou art this head of gold" (2:38) was too much for him. Though he appeared to have been deeply impressed with Daniel's God, his pride got the better of him. As he grew great and became conscious of it, he grew proud. This moved him to set up a colossal idol of gold in the Plain of Dura to be worshiped by all the people of his realm. It was an attempt at self-deification. It combined with it a political move, the object of which was to weld together the various kingdoms and peoples into one homogeneous body. He inaugurated a religious festival, and called upon all the people to worship the image which he set up. He backed this demand by civil authority. The penalty for refusal to bow down and worship the image was to be cast into the burning fiery furnace. Imposing images are set up in many places, and men and women are being called upon to bow down and worship them. Some of these images are money, fashion, scholarship, worldly ambition, pleasures, etc., and woe be to those who will not worship before them.

II. The Behavior of the Hebrews (vv. 8-18). (1) the accusation by the envious spies (vv. 8-12).

Daniel's three friends had been promoted to positions of honor and responsibility. Certain Chaldeans whose envy had been excited by the promotion of these Hebrews, sought occasion against them. This they found when the Hebrews would not bow down to and worship the image. Envious eyes are always watching God's faithful ones. Had these Chaldeans been faithfully worshiping, they would not have seen the Hebrews.

(2) The king's rage (vv. 13-15).

He calls the Hebrews before him, questions them and gives them another chance. The offense was not serious—they were defying the authority of the one who had honored them in their promotion; it savored of ingratitude. After closely questioning them he gave them another opportunity to consider their position before consigning them to the fire. His supreme mistake was in the challenge he made to the God of the Hebrews. He seems to have forgotten entirely the confession he had made with reference to God (2:47).

(3) The courageous reply of the faithful Hebrews (vv. 16-18).

They replied without passion or fear. The peace of God filled their hearts. Their behavior is an expression of triumphant faith. "We are not careful to answer thee in this matter. If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up." They courageously showed their contempt for death. They were not afraid to die, but were afraid to sin against God. They knew that to bow down before this image was to disobey and dishonor God. While they did not know what God would do, in the premises they knew that he would do the right thing. These Hebrews were far away from home, exposed to the most severe temptation, but they saw their duty clearly set before them. God's law plainly settled it for them. They did not try to find an excuse to evade their duty, and seeing the way clearly they acted accordingly.

III. The Glorious Issue (vv. 19-30).

(1) The harmless furnace (vv. 19-25).

The infuriated king ordered the heat of the furnace to be intensified, his most mighty men to bind the Hebrews and fling them into the fire. Though the heat was so intense that the soldiers who cast them into the furnace were slain, the Hebrews were seen walking loose in the fire without any hurt. Equally astounding was the fact that a fourth one was seen with them.

(2) The convinced king (vv. 26-28).

The spectacle was so wonderful that the king called the Hebrews together out of the fire. They came forth unharmed, for the fire had no power over their bodies; not even a hair of their heads was singed, their coats changed, nor the smell of fire upon them (v. 27).

(3) The king's decree (v. 29).

This was most foolish and wicked. Even a king has no right to kill people for not worshiping God.

(4) Promotion of the Hebrews (v. 30).

Their fidelity in this trying ordeal resulted in their promotion instead of downfall. May we learn from this that:

(a) God alone is Lord of the conscience. One's faith and worship should be determined by the individual before his God. No church, king or ruler has a right to interfere.

(b) We should meet religious intolerance by being obedient to God rather than man.

(c) God will support those who are faithful.

(d) We should prepare for fiery trials, and through them all be true to our conscience.

"'Yes, I can feel myself that the snowy children will be whiter and finer than I am,' said Mrs. Snowy. Which only showed how her mother love was making her think her little birdlings were a great deal more handsome than she was. As yet they were rather queer and featherless. But deep in their bird hearts each mother bird knew that the day would come when the birdlings would be gorgeous birds, though just now they were only dear little helpless things!

"'My little ones,' whispered Mrs. Snowy again. The little ones stirred contentedly. They need have no fear. Mother Snowy was there to care for them. She would never desert them.

"'My darlings,' said Mrs. American Egret. And the small, feeble birds knew they would be loved and looked after.

"When, bang, bang, bang! went the gun of a big man, and down fell Mrs. Snowy from her rookery. Again the cruel sounds echoed through the woods.

"Bang, bang, bang! Down fell Mrs. American Egret.

"The little birdlings turned uneasily in their nests. They were hungry! Where was mother? Oh, why did the world all of a sudden seem so cold, so friendless, so foodless?

"Two men were talking. 'This snowy bird is a beauty,' said one. 'Ever so many hats can be trimmed now. And such money as we will get!'

"'There are fifty aigrettes in this American bird,' said the other man. 'This was a good day for us.'

"Yes, a good day for the men who made the money, perhaps. A good day for the women who wore the beautiful feathers in their hats. But back in the woods two families of little birds were left to starve and die—because the world of fashion wanted their mothers. These birds have almost disappeared in the country, so many have been destroyed, and now they are not supposed to be killed. But never, never, Nancy, if you ever see an aigrette for sale when you are a big lady, never get it, for such cruel fashions should be stopped. No one should ever buy such feathers, for they are finest when the birds are young, and think of what that means! Hundreds of little birds left to die because of a fashion!"

Quick Punch.

The daily pinochle game in the smoker was going on as usual when suddenly one of the commuters jumped to his feet and yelled wildly for the newsboy.

"Give us a new deck of cards, quick," he cried when the boy answered his summons. "The conductor just punched the ace of diamonds instead of my commutation ticket."

Back Given Out?

Housework is too hard for a woman who is half sick, nervous and always tired. But it keeps piling up, and gives weak kidneys no time to recover. If your back is lame and achy and your kidneys irregular; if you have "blue spells," sick headaches, nervousness, dizziness and rheumatic pains, use Doan's Kidney Pills. They have done wonders for thousands of worn out women.

An Indiana Case

Mrs. Mary M. Stoy, 216 E. Elm St., New Albany, Ind., says: "My kidneys were weak and I had bladder trouble. It didn't take much to tire me, I was so weak and run down. I was so lame I couldn't turn in bed without help and could hardly walk across the floor. Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me right away. Now I am able to do my own work and I feel fine. I can't speak too highly of Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

Canadian Farmers Profit From Wheat

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

The war's devastation of European crops has caused an unusual demand for grain from the American Continent. The people of the world must be fed and wheat near $2 a bushel offers great profits to the farmer. Canada's invitation is therefore especially attractive. She wants settlers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops.

You can get a Homestead of 160 acres FREE and other lands at remarkably low prices. During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley and Flax.

Mixed farming as profitable an industry as grain raising. The excellent grasses full of nutrition are the only food required for beef or dairy purposes. Good schools, churches, markets convenient, climate excellent.

There is an extra demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for the war. The Government is urging farmers to put extra acreage into grain. Write for literature and particulars as to reduced railway rates to Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or

SHARKS TO SERVE MANKIND

Veteran Fisherman Believes That, Properly Handled, the Meat of the Fish Is Edible.

Russell J. Coles of Danville, Va., who taught Colonel Roosevelt how to harpoon devilfish, announced that he has discovered a method of preventing world-wide starvation by tests he has carried out with regard to certain species of the dark shark and ray family. Mr. Coles has just come back from Morehead City, N. C., where he caught a number of fish, and despite the popular belief that the eating of them would bring death in a terrible form, he decided to take the risk and he sampled several of them. He has sent a complete record of his findings to Herbert Hoover in the hope that the food administrator will incline an ear and start the fashion of shark eating.

Mr. Coles believes that the sides of the larger fish may be tanned and converted into marketable leather.

After trying several methods the Danville man gives the following recipe for cooking shark steak:

Salt heavily for 30 minutes, soak out in three waters, parboil a few minutes, change water, parboil again, cook heavily seasoned and serve hot. The amount of seasoning must be used according to the odor of the meat.

The Broker's Son.

Visitor—Your little boy doesn't seem to be very cheerful. Isn't he well?

Broker—Yes, he's well enough, but he is feeling rather blue just now. You see, there was a great drop in leather this morning.

Visitor—Bless me! You don't mean to tell me that child knows anything about the market?

Broker—Well, perhaps not, generally speaking, but you see the particular leather that dropped this morning was his mother's slipper.

"Do you mean the man who practices with the flute every night?"

She said she did; and he made a dive for his pocket.

Condition of DeKalb Co.

Rate to be Paid by Taxpayers Unchanged Notwithstanding Increase in Cost of Materials and New Building being Erected.

The DeKalb county council in session in Auburn Thursday afternoon fixed the tax rate for DeKalb county for 1918 at 48.90 cents on the hundred dollars valuation. This is the same rate as last year.

The council before adjourning on Thursday also appropriated $100 for the use of the DeKalb County Council of Defense in assisting the government in various ways in the county during the war.

The matter of making an appropriation to take care of a part of the premiums at the fall fair held each year in DeKalb county, however, was voted down by the members of the council. The law gives the board the right to assist the county fair association with money to be used as premiums, but the members of the board refused the appropriation.

Five members of the county council were present at the meeting on Thursday. The board consists of Noah A. Lung of Fairfield township; J. H. Reed of Grant township; John L. Wildeson of Keyser township; Thomas Hamman of Smithfield township; Amos Fitch of Butler township; F. E. Rhodes of Spencer township, and Sol Casebere of Stafford township. The last two named were unable to be present.

Advance in Every Line.

Taxpayers of DeKalb county may feel themselves lucky this year in not having an increase in the tax levy. The advance cost of supplies used by the different offices and the advancing prices in every line has hit the county treasury as well as the individual hard. Practically every county in the state of Indiana made an increase this year and in Allen county the rate was boosted nine cents on the $100 valuation.

The DeKalb county officials are determined to keep the rate down, however, and to proceed as economically as possible. The levy is divided with 32.90 cents for the county government and 16 cents as a bond levy.

Along with the increased expenses comes the building of the new DeKalb county jail and the payments on the court house to be met. These, too, will be taken care of without an increase of a single cent in the levy. There still remains $80,000 on the new DeKalb county court house and this will be taken care of by 1924.

When the county's new buildings are paid for taxpayers may look for a decrease in the levy as the county will have no more buildings to construct for many years to come. All are of a substantial nature and will last for a life time.

Auburn Helps Pay for Roads.

The various townships in DeKalb county in which improved roads are under construction or have been completed will have an increased road levy this year. The following is the amount each $100 valuation will be assessed in the various township for the new roads:

Butler township, 26 cents.
Jackson township, 26 cents.
Spencer township 22 cents.
Concord township, 22 cents.
Union township, 30 cents
Smithfield township, 43 cents.
Auburn city, 32 cents.
Franklin township, 60 cents.

The taxpayers of the city of Auburn help pay for the Auburn-Waterloo and Auburn-St. Joe improved roads along with the taxpayers of Union township.

Franklin township has the highest levy of the townships, two roads being improved in that township with gravel.

Get Rid of the Pesky Dogs.

DeKalb county stands almost at the top of the list of the counties of Indiana in the amount of money paid out to owners of sheep killed by dogs. In 1915 the number of sheep and the amount of loss was unusually high amounting to $1,500. In the year 1916 the loss was around $1,400.

County Agent A. Z. Arehart has prepared a table showing the loss in the different townships of the county. There is a movement all over the state to do away with these sheep killing dogs. The money paid in dog tax of course takes care of this expense in most instances but the loss is a great economic waste, especially at the present time when every effort is being made to increase the food supply.

The loss in Wilmington township in the lear 1916, was one of the largest ever recorded in DeKalb county, the trustee of that township paying out $714 to sheep owners in that township, who had their stock killed or injured by dogs.

The following table lists the loss by townships and the amount paid out by the trustees of the xarious townships:

Township	1915	1916
Newville	$119.75
Stafford	188.00	$ 72.00
Troy	34.00
Keyser	217.75	60.00
Spencer	20.00	70.00
Wilmington	226.75	714.00
Richland	189.00
Butler	12.00	145.00
Grant	72.50	381.00
Fairfield	96.50
Concord	222.00	102.00

ONE IN EVERY FOUR MARRIAGES IN STATE OF INDIANA IS FAILURE ACCORDING TO STATISTICS.

Total of 9,772 Cases were Filed in State During 1916 but of These 2,615 were Denied—4,377 Granted to Wives.

One divorce case filed for every three and one-half marriages was the average in Indiana during 1916, according to statistics made public today by Henry A. Roberts, state statistician. Tabulations of reports on the divorce question from all of the ninety-two counties in the state showed that 9,772 divorces were asked of Indiana courts, while 33,522 marriage licenses were issued during the year.

The total number of divorces granted was 5,778 and the total number of divorce petitions denied was 2,615. Of the divorces granted 4,377 were granted to wives, and 1,399 to husbands.

On grounds of abandonment 733 divorces were granted to wives and 444 to husbands; on statutory grounds 208 divorces were granted to wives and 248 to husbands; on grounds of criminal conviction 94 divorces were granted to wives and fourteen to husbands; on grounds of cruel treatment 1,933 divorces were granted to wives and 444 to husbands; on grounds of drunkenness, 434 divorces were granted to wives and only thirty to husbands; on grounds of failure to provide, 700 divorces were granted to wives, and there were no complaining husbands on that score; on grounds of "other causes," 215 divorces were granted to wives and 95 to husbands.

New Disease Among Cattle.

Indiana cattle raisers were warned Wednesday by Dr. L. E. Northrup, state veterinarian, to keep on the watch for a disease known as Hemorrhagic Septicemia, which has caused a great deal of damage since its first appearance in the state five or six years ago. It is especially prevalent among feeding cattle. Placards have been distributed throughout the state asking cattlemen to notify state officials whenever a case of the disease appears. Symptoms of the disease are high temperatnre, bleeding of the nose and general depression. Medical agents have proven unsatisfactory in treating the disease because of the suddeness with which death comes after the disease is first noticeable. Animals weakened from exposure and young cattle are especially susceptible to the disease.

Garrett Boy In England.

Chester Bovee, a Garrett young man, who recently sailed for Europe to fight for Uncle Sam has written the following letter to his mother at Garrett, Mrs. Martha Sherman, reporting his safe arrival:

"We have arrived in England safe and sound. Had a very good trip, but was seasick two days. Most all were the same.

"We are in training camp now, but do not know for how long. The supposition is we will leave here for France soon. There is not much to say only that I am getting fat and that I am pleased with the country, for it is a wonderful sight to see. Their railroads are somewhat behind ours, but will say they have more system than we have for safety. They will not allow anyone on the tracks.

All For the Fall Fair

The DeKalb county fall fair, to be held at Auburn on Oct. 3, 4 and 5, is being pushed with much zest and enthusiasm by farmers over the county. A meeting was held at the St. Joe school house on Thursday evening and a committee of three for each department was named from each of the townships of Spencer, Newville and Concord, making seventy-two in all, and they will make every effort to encourage a large display. The tri-townships are highly productive and are inhabited by the best people on earth, and every effort should be made to let the world know what we can do at the coming fair. Our display should be the best.

President Nugen, of the fair organization, was present to help with the preliminary work, as was also Mr. Whitten, president of the Auburn Commercial club. The committees selected will meet at the school house in St. Joe on Saturday evening, Sept. 22, to perfect their plans for the display. All other interested are also invited to come.

News of the Week Cut Down for Busy Readers

U. S.—Teutonic War News

Corporal William H. Meeker of the Lafayette escadrille was killed while flying over the lines, somewhere in France, when the engine of his airplane stalled.

* * *

A large contingent of American artillery has joined the expeditionary army at the American training camp in France, and is well along with its intensive training under French supervisory instructions.

* * *

The material aid given Germany by Sweden was not confined to transmission of naval secrets by code from Argentina to Berlin. A copy of an official letter from Herr von Eckhardt, German minister in Mexico, to his home office, given out by Secretary Lansing at Washington, makes the startling revelation that Folke Chonholm, Swedish charge d'affaires in Mexico City, was an active agent of the German government.

* * *

Word reached Paris that Corporal Andrew Courtney Campbell, Jr., of Chicago, Ill., flying with the French squadrilla No. 65, had vanquished two German machines in aerial engagements.

* * *

The Liberty motor, the airplane engine on which the United States is relying to establish definite air superiority over the Germans, has passed its final test and is a complete and gratifying success, Secretary Baker announced at Washington.

* * *

Drafting all aliens in the United States except Germans, others exempt by treaty, and those of countries allied with Germany who have resided in this country one year, is proposed in a joint resolution passed by the senate at Washington and sent to the house.

* * *

The American colors now fly over Verdun. The flag, which was the gift of a prominent American Red Cross worker to the city, was hoisted over the ruin of the city hall after a ceremony attended by the subprefect, Jean Grillon.

* * *

A huge peace propaganda, emanating probably from Switzerland, is working throughout the United States, the state department at Washington declared, trying to encourage pacifists and to discourage the United States' war preparations.

* * *

A typographical error in a cablegram reporting a submarine attack on a convoy of merchant ships off the coast of France on September 5 led Secretary Daniels to announce at Washington that six submarines probably had been sunk in the battle, when in reality the probabilities are only one was destroyed. Two merchant ships were destroyed.

* * *

Domestic

Before 15,000 persons gathered at the war mass meeting in the Coliseum at Chicago Elihu Root defined the word "traitor" as it applies in this crisis. "Arguments against the war, since we have entered the war, are enemy arguments," he declared, while the great crowd shouted its approval.

* * *

A long-distance telephone message to Phoenix, Ariz., from Bisbee said 34 members of the Industrial Workers of the World, who were deported from there along with 1,100 others on July 12 and who have since been camped at Columbus, N. M., arrived there and were arrested.

* * *

Packing house district in Kansas City, Kan., is quiet after the rioting, when one striker was dangerously injured, two received minor injuries and an onlooker was badly bruised.

* * *

Comptroller Williams issued a statement at Washington asserting investigation had disclosed that the late J. B. Martindale, president of the Chemical National bank of New York, who died in July, 1917, was an embezzler and forger to the extent of about $300,000.

* * *

Evidence seized by government agents in their raid on the Philadelphia Tageblatt office shows that the paper was part of a national conspiracy against the United States. In the correspondence of the paper letters were also found from several congressmen, including Senator La Follette and others, who may be seriously embarrassed by the Tageblatt raid.

* * *

"There are three times as many ships in commission in the navy today as there were six months ago." This revelation was made at Annapolis, Md., by Secretary of the Navy Daniels in addressing the graduation class of 192 ensigns of the naval reserve.

* * *

In ability to obtain sufficient wheat for grinding has forced several flour mills at Minneapolis, Minn., to close temporarily. The situation is expected to be relieved, however, by the release soon of a considerable amount of wheat held in country elevators.

Two highwaymen entered the office of Frank L. Pion, diamond broker in the Heyworth building at Chicago, and at the point of revolvers bound and gagged him and escaped with more than $25,000 worth of uncut gems.

* * *

Mrs. Mildred McLean Dewey of Washington, widow of Admiral Dewey, has accepted an invitation to serve as honorary chairman of the comforts committee of the Navy league.

* * *

Five of the six officers of the Philadelphia Tageblatt were held under $10,000 bail each by United States Commissioner Long to await the action of the grand jury on charges of violating the espionage act.

* * *

A troop train on the Pennsylvania railroad was fired on at Mingo Junction, O. Four soldiers were wounded. Foreigners employed in the steel mills are suspected.

* * *

Improvement in the grain shortage situation, which for a time threatened to force the closing of many Minneapolis (Minn.) flour mills, was reported by grain and flour men. Harvesting and fall plowing have delayed marketing of the crops, and the delay has led to reports that farmers were holding back their wheat for higher prices.

* * *

Pro-German propaganda is responsible for the refusal of farmers to sell their wheat crop at the price fixed by the government was the statement issued at Washington by the food administration.

* * *

The Netherlands minister to the United States, Chevalier W. L. F. C. van Rappard, has been recalled by his government. Van Royen has been named to succeed him.

* * *

Grievance chairmen of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen presented requests to seven railroads at Chicago for an increase of $10 a month to passenger trainmen dating from September 1.

* * *

Pro-German propagandists are the prime movers in the violence and rioting at Springfield, Ill., according to the belief of Governor Lowden. Governor Lowden said that the organizations whose chief interest is at stake, namely the conductors and motormen, who are on strike, have taken no part in the recent rioting.

* * *

Personal

Adjt. Gen. Thomas J. Stewart, for 22 years the administrative head of the National Guard of Pennsylvania and former national commander in chief of the G. A. R., died suddenly at Harrisburg, Pa.

* * *

Washington

The Susan B. Anthony amendment for nation-wide woman suffrage was reported favorably by the senate suffrage committee at Washington and will take its place on the senate calendar at the December session.

* * *

The war insurance bill, carrying an appropriation of $176,000,000 and providing allotments for soldiers' families, compensation for injuries and comprehensive insurance, was passed by the house at Washington.

* * *

The final drive against high prices of meat is on. Representatives of 54 meat packers, live stock producers and cattle exchanges are meeting at Washington with Herbert C. Hoover. Food administration officials admitted there was little hope of any lowering of present meat prices.

It is understood negotiations are in progress to provide a credit of $75,000,000 for imperial government purchases of meats, bacon, etc., in Canada.

The Argentine government sent to the German legation passports to be delivered to Count Luxburg, the German minister in Buenos Aires.

FORM LIVESTOCK CLUBS IN STATE

Indiana Banks Giving Splendid Co-operation to the Council of Defense.

PRIZES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Stimulating Interest in Raising of More Pigs and Calves and Carrying on a Campaign of Education by Mail.

Indianapolis. — Indiana banks, through the agricultural committee of the Indiana Bankers' association, have been co-operating with the state council of defense in the conservation and production of livestock. Although the bankers have gone about their work along this line quietly, their work has been systematic and good results are expected.

In addition to carrying on a campaign of education, through mailing valuable information to all livestock raisers and breeders, many of the banks have assisted in organizing clubs for the purpose of stimulating the stock-raising industry. Others have given pigs to members of clubs under certain conditions as an inducement to stir greater interest.

Banks Offer Livestock.

The following is a brief statement of projects in livestock development work that have been promoted by Indiana banks:

The First National bank of Tipton and the Purdue State bank, West Lafayette, have purchased high-grade pigs and furnished same to young people on a promissory note, payable in six months. These pigs are to be fed for the market.

The State bank of Monticello has given to club members a number of gilts on the condition that two choice gilts from the first or succeeding litter be returned to the bank, the member keeping the sow and the rest of the pigs.

The Terre Haute Trust company has given pigs to two members from each of the 12 townships in Vigo county.

The People's State bank at Sullivan gave pigs to boys having the best agricultural conditions for successful pig club work.

The First National bank at Mooresville, the German National bank, Fort Wayne; the Second National bank, Vincennes; the First National bank at Owensville, the Farmers' National bank of Wadesville, and the National bank of Orleans have given pigs to club members. The Howard National bank at Kokomo has placed feeder calves in the hands of boys who are feeding them during the summer, the animals to be sold at auction during the late fall; the club member receives the difference between the selling and cost price.

The Atlas State bank of Union City will give feeder calves this fall, giving the club members an opportunity to do winter feeding.

The First National bank, Rensselaer, will arrange to place pure-bred Shorthorn heifers six months old and one year old among the boys of Jasper county.

The First National bank of Vincennes will buy fifty pure-bred Holstein heifers due to drop their calves in thirty to sixty days. The boys and girls will then care for these animals and deposit with the bank 50 per cent of the market proceeds. This bank also has employed a supervisor, who will give his entire time to visiting the boys and girls and aid them in the work. They have also planned to extend this work along other lines.

The Mount Vernon National bank at Mount Vernon has placed more than 100 pure-bred Holstein calves in Posey county.

The Farmers' and Merchants' bank of Boonville has placed a number of Holstein calves in Warrick county.

The State bank of Paoli has placed a large number of pure-bred Holstein calves and 250 sheep in different parts of the county. They are also planning a large pig club.

The Pendleton Banking company and the Pendleton Trust company will supply pigs and calves to club members.

The White River bank, Logootee, has supplied Holstein calves and Durock pigs.

The Citizens' State bank, Elwood, has supplied pigs and chickens to the members in the county.

The Old State bank, Evansville, has given Berkshire gilts to a large number of boys.

Note—Details of the plans for conducting these clubs and contests will be furnished by the agricultural experiment department, Purdue unversity, Lafayette, Ind.

Quarantine Is Removed.

The quarantine in Indiana against currant and gooseberry bushes has been removed by Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist. Indiana nurserymen have not been propogating many of these plants and there were not enough plants to supply the demand this season. The removal of the quarantine will permit nursery firms to get their plants from other states.

The quarantine was placed to prevent the spread of the white pine blister rust, and it is still unlawful to ship five-leaf pines into the state. The removal was decided on by Mr. Wallace when he found that much of the possibility of infection of Indiana stock by incoming stock has passed and that Indiana dealers, in many instances, had effected a "corner" on currant and gooseberry bushes and were charging extremely high prices for the plants, while the prices of similar plants in other states were much lower.

Praises Defense Council Work.

John H. Winterbottom of Michigan City, who is an agent of the section of the national council of defense which has to do with the co-ordination of efforts of state councils of defense, met with Will H. Hays, chairman of the Indiana council of defense, and other members of the council. Mr. Winterbottom praised the efforts of the Indiana state council of defense highly, saying there was no state in the Union which has surpassed the Indiana council in the amount and character of work accomplished.

Station Agent Ordered at Thayer.

The public service commission of Indiana dragged out dozens of cases that have been on the dockets for years and, with scant reverence for their venerableness, used its official knife on them with telling effect. The result included announcements of final orders in such cases as the old Winona rate case and the old controversy between duck hunters and fishermen and the Monon railroad, with respect to the re-establishment of a station agent at Thayer, where the Monon crosses the Kankakee river

The commission established rates, ranging from 9½ cents, gross, a kilowatt hour, to 4½ cents a kilowatt hour for residence and commercial light in the city of Warsaw and the town of Winona Lake, on the old petition of the Winona Electric Light and Water company. A minimum rate of 75 cents a month accompanied this schedule. For power rates the commission fixed a schedule ranging from 8 cents, gross, to 3½ cents a kilowatt hour. Street lamps range in cost to the town and city from $18 to $55 a year.

Commission Fixes Water Rates.

The commission fixed water rates at Warsaw and Winona Lake, the meter rates at Warsaw ranging from 27½ cents, gross, to 4½ cents a thousand gallons. The water rates, by meter, at Winona Lake, were fixed on a similar schedule. The commission also promulgated flat rate schedules for the two places.

The commission finally disposed of the ticket agent case at Thayer, which duck hunters and fishermen have been seeking for a long time to have made a regular station for their benefit, when seeking recreation in the Kankakee marshes. The commission ordered the company to keep a ticket agent at Thayer.

The commission recently discovered that a schedule of rates for electric service in Montezuma had been in effect for two years, the municipal lighting plant there not having heard from the old public service commission after it filed its new schedule for approval by that body, and therefore coming to believe that the rates had been approved automatically.

Authorizes Addition of Surcharge.

By orders issued the commission authorized the Interstate Public Service company to add a surcharge to its hot-water heating rates at Bedford and Lebanon, which brought these rates up to 22 cents. This surcharge, evidence brought out, will not be enough to take care of wartime increases in costs of operation alone, and will provide for the payment of no dividends. The commission permitted the Central Indiana Lighting company, at Bloomington, to add a surcharge for heating, which brought the rates up to the same figure of 22 cents for each unit of radiation. These surcharges are authorized for one year.

The commission authorized the Indiana Utilities company, which operates in northeastern Indiana, to issue $26,000 in bonds, at not less than 85 per cent of par. The original petition asked that the bonds be authorized to sell as low as 80 per cent of par, but the commission told the company that at such a high rate of discount it would be necessary for the company to amortize the entire discount. As a substitute for this amortization plan, the commission said it would allow the sale at 85 per cent and the company accepted the latter method.

Ball Coal Director.

W. C. Ball of Terre Haute was named by Governor Goodrich as coal director for the state institutions.

Indiana coal operators, meeting at Terre Haute, agreed to pro rate among the mines the demands of the institutions for coal for the coming winter and asked that the governor name some one to direct and supervise the distribution. Approximately 200,000 to 225,000 tons will be needed by these institutions during the coming year.

Mr. Ball is a member of the special purchasing committee selected some time ago by the governor from the membership of the boards of trustees of state institutions. He has been active in all the negotiations between state institutions and coal operators relative to the fuel supply for the coming year.

Test Aerial Lighthouse.

Tests were made under the direction of Carl G. Fisher, chairman of the airplane mapping committee of the national advisory committee on aeronautics, of a lamp that may be used in aerial lighthouse service on national aerial military routes. The lights are to be used on the first division of the aerial route between Dayton and Indianapolis, and will serve to guide aviators on night flights.

Horses on Their Way.

Horses belonging to the First Indiana field artillery are now on their way to the seacoast preparatory to being placed on transports for their trip overseas. Orders for the regiment which is a part of the rainbow division to entrain are expected at any hour.

Half-Trained Teachers Scored.

That a teacher may be within the law, which is to say, have every quality required by educational laws and yet not be all that a teacher should be, was emphasized by Dr. L. J. Rettger of the Indiana State Normal, in a talk before the Marion County Teachers' institute. He said that the law must deal largely with the external side of the applicant for teachers' license, although no external law, he said, can determine beforehand the independence and originality of teachers in meeting problems of school room.

A PHYSICAL WRECK

Laid Up In Bed, Barely Holding Onto Life. Doan's Effected Marvelous Recovery.

"Without warning I was dragged to the brink of the grave by malignant kidney trouble," says Robert Wengatz, 114 Cypress Ave., Bronx, N. Y. "My kidneys seemed to stop acting and the pains in my back were terrible. Big, bloaty puffs came under my eyes and attacks of dizziness often blinded me. My limbs swelled twice normal size and I could press big dents into the flesh.

Mr. Wengatz.

"I was confined to bed and had convulsions several times a day. Despite the best of treatment, I grew worse and was taken to the hospital. I didn't improve, however, and was brought home again, barely holding onto life.

"Toward the last of 1913, a friend persuaded me to try Doan's Kidney Pills and I cannot put into words what they did for me. The first box helped more than all the other medicines and treatments I had taken. I continued and from an emaciated wreck of a man I have taken on good, solid flesh until I now weigh 225 pounds and am in the best of health. Doan's alone deserve the credit."

Nitrogen From Air.

The production of nitrogen from the air in Germany, which was only 30,000 tons in 1913, has been so successful that 300,000 tons were so produced in 1916, and it is expected that 320,000 will be produced this year. According to the Frankfurter Zeitung, the cost is only six cents a kilogram.

Protein and Fat.

Two of the principal food elements are protein and fat. Soja Beans contain more protein and more fat than either Navy Beans, potatoes, wheat flour, lean beef, milk or eggs.

Alice Pork and Beans are a delicious combination of Soja and Navy Beans. Try them.—Adv.

Women Drive War Automobiles.

Between 150 and 200 women soon will be driving military motor cars behind the French front.

Women have tried since the beginning of the war to enlist in the automobile service. The Club Feminin Automobile was the center of this group, and it had secured the signatures of several hundred of the thousand women in Paris who hold licenses to drive motor cars. The passive resistance of the different war bureaus held them back until now.

The women are obliged to enlist for three months and to agree to submit csrupulously to military rules and discipline. They will in the beginning replace motor ambulance drivers in the foreign sanitary sections who are transferred to other services. Later on they may replace men in other automobile sections.

Soldiers and Officers.

The lieutenant was testing the squad in visional power.

"Tell me, No. 1," he said, "how many men are in the trench digging party over there?"

"Thirty men and one officer," was the reply.

"Quite right. But how do you know one was an officer at this distance?"

"Cos he's the only one not working!"
—Scottish American.

And some men spend so much time hustling that they haven't time to accomplish anything.

Deliberation is a good thing that has broken few records.

THE CUSTOMS INSPECTORS AT NEW YORK TAKE A HAND AND THE SUSPICION GROWS THAT LYDIA KNOWS MORE THAN HER NEW FRIENDS SUSPECT

Synopsis—Lydia Craven, traveling under the name of Lucy Carteret, runs away from her English home to go to her father, Thaddeus Craven, in New York, who she hasn't seen in five years. Three nights out on board the steamer Alsatia, she runs plump into her father making love to Mrs. Merrilees, a young widow, engaged to marry him. Later Craven explains his mysterious conduct and supposed bachelorhood by telling Lydia he is a British secret service agent in America. He gives her a small box to keep for him. She is attacked. The box is stolen, but Quoin, a detective, recovers it for the girl.

—10—

"Then let me see you back to your stateroom, and I'll—"

"No, I—I'd rather wait here. I must know tonight—I can't sleep without knowing—"

Admiration kindled in Quoin's regard. He liked that spirit. She had been quick to recover, quicker than the average woman would have been. "Very well," he assented.

They moved forward. Opposite the companionway Lydia paused.

"Will you be long?"

"Not ten minutes," Quoin promised. His figure momentarily eclipsed the blur of light that stood for the doorway.

Indeed it was hardly more than ten minutes when the doorway was again darkened, and Quoin came to Lydia's side.

"Was I long? I'm sorry. I had to be rather severe before they gave in—and up."

"You succeeded?" He laughed quietly. "Here it is."

Mute in astonishment, speechless with gratitude, she took the puzzle box from his extended hand.

"A crook known as Southpaw Smith—he deals left-handed—had it, together with the father and mother of all black eyes. I was almost sorry for him. 'George Traymore' is his alias on the passenger list. A tall, slender scoundrel—very, very smooth. Not that you're likely to see him before we land, if then. He'll lay very low and make the quietest getaway from the dock he can manage—"

"Mr. Quoin!" the girl interrupted in a tremulous voice.

"Yes?"

Her embarrassment was painful. "What can I say to you? Mere thanks aren't adequate."

"Please say no more. To know I've been of some use is enough. Besides," he laughed boyishly, "I've had a good time bullyragging Southpaw. I like that sort of thing, you know."

"I shall be always grateful—"

"Then do something to oblige me. I sha'n't be easy in my mind until you're safe in your room."

Transition from the gloom of the deck to the brilliantly lighted companionway was bewildering. Instinctively Quoin and Lydia paused. The girl smiled wistfully as she offered her hand.

"Good-night—and thank you with all my heart, Mr. Quoin!"

"Miss Craven,"—he retained her hand for a moment—"will you tell me one thing?"

"If I may—anything—"

His eyes searched hers jealously. "Do you know what's in that box?"

"No, Mr. Quoin! Upon my word of honor, no."

Her eyes were limpid pools of ingenuous candor. Quoin could no longer doubt. He nodded, releasing her hand.

"Thank you."

"But," she lingered, "do you?"

"I do," he admitted reluctantly. "Not through any wish of mine. But Southpaw had only succeeded in puzzling the combination out when I interrupted. I made him put back—what he'd taken from the box. Don't worry. I've already forgotten what it was. And Southpaw won't bother you again—I promise you that."

Her eyes questioned anxiously, his smiled reassurance. With yet another good-night, Lydia turned away.

He watched her down the alleyway to the door of B75, then turned to seek his own berth, shaking his head to rid it of tormenting doubts.

Softly closing the door, Lydia as gently shot the bolt, hoping to gain her bed unquestioned. But as she moved toward it in darkness the Dowager Dragon suddenly switched on the lights and lifted from her pillow an indignant head framed in a nightcap, the most coquettishly beribboned imaginable.

"Well?" she demanded tartly. "Where have you been, if you please?"

Lydia showed her a countenance innocent of any trace of guile. "On deck," she said quietly, removing her cloak with its sprinkling of moisture that glittered like diamond dust. "The foghorn, you know—and I wasn't sleepy, anyway. It's wonderful out there, so still and dark and uncanny. You'd think almost anything could happen, and no one be the wiser."

CHAPTER IX.

"Good old town!" said Peter Traft. Removing his hat, he saluted Town with grave and affectionate respect. "Graft and all, it's one human young city!"

Intuition enabled Lydia to interpret this utterance as the invocation to the litany of your tried but true Manhattanite.

The Alsatia was trudging sedately up the bay from the Narrows, Quarantine ten minutes astern, New York looming over the port bow through a tenderly irisated haze in whose illusion it became a city of mother-of-pearl suspended between the blue of haze-veiled sky and the blue of confluent waters.

"Arthur Rackham must have colored it," Lydia mused aloud.

"Wait—this is only the overture—wait till you see it as I mean to show it to you—bridlepaths in Central park of a sunny morning, Broadway at night with a full head of steam on, South street at noon with the old sailing ships asleep in the sun and their forefeet up on the sidewalk, Fifth avenue at evening, lights like big pearls popping out through the purple dusk—" Ostentatiously drawing a handkerchief from his cuff, Peter mopped his brows. "Beg pardon. Being poetical under forced draft is a bit exhausting."

"Your prose isn't anything to boast of. Henry James at his most arrogant was never more unintelligible."

"Oh, you'll wise up to it quick enough. But mind there'll be nothing doing in the poetry line after we're married. I know my limitations, and I couldn't stand the pace."

Here an apologetic steward caught Peter's eye. "Beg pardon, Mr. Traft, but you're wanted in the dining saloon to acknowledge your declaration."

"Thanks," said Peter sulkily. "I presume it's got to be tended to. You, too, Miss Craven."

"But I've already made my acknowledgment, Mr. Traft. I'm so sorry!"

"I wish I could believe you were!" said Peter vindictively, and went a morose way without her.

He would have been less downcast could he have guessed how soon the girl was to miss him. Alone and without distraction, imagination was hagridden by the care of that wretched puzzle box. It was still safe in her possession—that was the worst of it! Nevertheless, she had as yet said nothing to Craven about the attack in the fog, fearing lest he might insist resuming charge of the puzzle box; and so, perhaps, put himself in the way of some perils more vital even than that which had befallen her. And her father was all she had!

When they were free to stream down the gangway to the pier Craven, consigning Lydia to the care of Peter Traft, rushed off to commandeer the first available customs inspectors for himself and Mrs. Merrilees. So that it was Peter who piloted Lydia to C section, hunted up her trunk, and took her place in the rank at the chief inspector's desk; with the result that the luggage of "L. Carteret, Spinster," was quickly passed, and, Peter reluctantly leaving her to pass his own impedimenta, she was at liberty to garner what diversion she might from the trials of others.

In that section her father was dutifully but perspiringly in optimistic endeavor to persuade his particular inspector that he hadn't perjured himself in his sworn declaration. Noticing Lydia's indignant interest, Craven paused only long enough to lift a furtive eyebrow and draw down the corners of his mouth, thus signifying a conviction that his troubles were wholly due to the pernicious interference of his political antagonists, even as predicted.

She returned the least of nods, indicating that the puzzle box was safe—as it was, in her suede handbag, which, dangling from her wrist by its leather strap, had quite escaped the attention of the inspector.

Then, remembering Craven's hint that it would be well not to attract too much attention to their relationship until clear of the customs, the girl turned away to kill time until her father should be free.

Over the way, in Section B, Lydia found Mrs. Beggarstaff, surrounded by an array of luggage to do credit to an army corps, light of battle in her eyes, words of bitter wit upon her ready lips, in pitched combat with a graceless skeptic of an inspector.

Near by, three dock porters, two ship newsmen, half a dozen assorted citizens, and a brace of customs appraisers whose duties were immediate and elsewhere, hung in breathless interest upon the issue of the fray, one and all grinning broadly.

Lydia gathered an impression that the Dowager Dragon had found a foeman worthy of her steel; then hurried on to Section M and Betty Merrilees.

Greeting Lydia serenely, this last resumed her conversation with her assigned inspector. "You'll find everything dutiable in the hat trunk and that big dresser trunk over there—the two upper trays—the receipted bills in the first tray—all except—necklace. I have that here," she indicated the metal box in her hands, "and the bill as well."

"Thanks, Mrs. Merrilees." The inspector looked up from her declaration in futile attempt to maintain his official imperturbability; then his eyes twinkled in a network of wrinkles. His lips twitched, and he grinned outright.

"That's all very well," said the lady impudently. "Laugh if you like! But please do your worst as quickly as possible."

"Very well, ma'am. I'll hurry you through as fast as I can."

It became immediately apparent that the man wasn't disposed to doubt the sincerity of her conversation. The luggage she had indicated as innocent of dutiable goods he passed with the most perfunctory examination, while the millinery and other declared purchases detained him only briefly.

"Everything is quite O. K., thanks to you, ma'am. And now if you will let me have a look at that necklace. I've sent for the appraiser. He'll be along in a minute."

The box was already unlocked. Mrs. Merrilees promptly removed the leather-bound jewel case and handed it to the inspector.

Touching the spring, he let the lid fly up, exposing the pearl collar. As if dazzled, he blinked furiously. "She's a daisy!" he announced with unction. "Finest piece of the sort that's come through this year, or I'm no judge."

Momentarily his interest shifted to the bill of the Parisian jeweler.

"Three hundred thousand francs—sixty thousand dollars," he mused aloud. "You got it cheap, ma'am, if I'm any judge."

"Nonsense!" Mrs. Merrilees retorted indignantly. "As if an American ever got anything cheap in Paris—and from Cottier's, of all places! By every right you ought to assess the duty on not more than forty thousand dollars."

"Well," the inspector suggested indulgently, "we'll just see what the appraiser says. There he is now. Hey, Charlie, step over here a minute, will you?"

In response to this hail, a slender, bespectacled young man in O section nodded assent, picked his way through the barrier of trunks, and, recognizing Mrs. Merrilees, touched the vizor of a cap bearing the word "Appraiser."

"Mrs. Merrilees has declared her necklace, Charlie," said the inspector, handing over the case. "And here's the bill; but she wants you to take a slant at it for value."

Nodding again, the appraiser narrowed his eyes and surveyed the necklace with an expression of some mystification. Then he pursed his lips in a noiseless whistle, looked bewilderment at Mrs. Merrilees, and stepped aside with the jewel case to a spot where sunlight, through a wide opening, threw a brilliant splash of gold athwart the tempered gloom of the pier-shed. Here he subjected the necklace to minute inspection with a magnifying glass. Finally, wearing an illegible expression, he turned back.

"It's a corking good thing," he announced in an odd tone. "We don't get many like it; but the workmanship on this is immense! Call it three hundred at the outside."

"What!" Mrs. Merrilees blazed indignantly. "Three hundred thousand dollars! Ridiculous! Look at the bill—"

"No, ma'am," the appraiser interrupted with mournful decision, "not three hundred thousand, but just three hundred dollars; duty a hundred and eighty (sixty per cent ad val.), and if you like I'll get someone else to size it up and see if maybe we can't shade that a bit."

"Wha-at!" Mrs. Merrilees almost shrieked.

"If it was real stuff I'd be sure, ma'am," the appraiser apologized; "but you can't always tell about these imitations like you can regular stones."

The whole party of friends of Mrs. Merrilees get the surprise of their lives when the customs inspectors make a certain discovery. It's all told in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

IN FIGHT FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

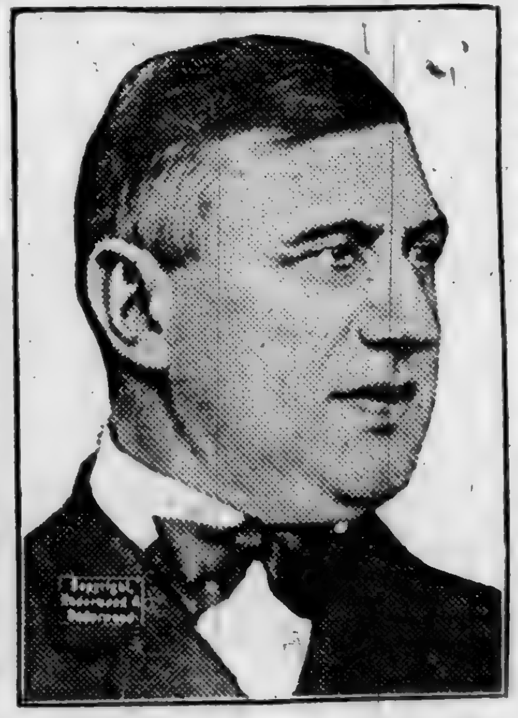
Not daunted by recent reverses at the polls, the advocates of woman suffrage are again carrying their fight to the people in two Eastern states—New York and Maine. In New York state the question whether women should have the right to vote was submitted at a referendum in the general election two years ago, and answered in the negative on election day, with the adverse majority mounting nearly to 200,000. In Maine woman suffrage has its first test before the voters.

The voting in Maine is on a bill enacted by the legislature, subject to ratification at the polls, providing that women shall have the right to vote for presidential electors and for municipal and other local officials, but not for administrative state officials or members of the legislature. In New York a constitutional amendment which would wipe out the discrimination in favor of men in the suffrage article of the organic law will be submitted. If it is ratified women will have the right to vote for all officers, municipal and otherwise, at all elections in this state.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National Woman Suffrage association, has taken charge of the Maine campaign, and re-enforcements are being rushed to her aid from all parts of the United States.

As far as suffrage is concerned Maine is practically an untilled field. It is known as one of the most conservative states in the country. It has a large rural vote. Woman suffrage, generally speaking, is not a popular issue with the rural voter.

HEAD OF GREAT SHIPBUILDING PLANT



The great plant of the Bethlehem Steel company has received orders to stop making rails and automobile trucks and start turning out plates, shapes and machinery for steel ships. The work of making the necessary changes in machinery is being rushed day and night and will be completed in a short time.

When the plant is ready to manufacture ship plates it will operate in conjunction with the Sparrows Point ship yard of the Bethlehem Steel company, which it adjoins. The two concerns now control 2,000 acres, including five miles of waterfront property, and employ upward of 10,000 men.

Officials of the Bethlehem Steel company said that the plan to bring the steel works and ship yard into close co-operation would result in giving Baltimore, of which Sparrows Point is a suburb, the largest shipbuilding plant in the world. Before November the combined industries will, according to officials of both, be turning out huge cargo steamers at the rate of one every three or four weeks. While 10,000 men are employed in the two plants at present 5,000 more could be put to work immediately were they available. Steel officials hope to have at least 15,000 workers keeping the great plant running 24 hours a day by October 1.

ONE OF ARMY'S MOST VALUED OFFICERS

Brig. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, commander of Northeastern department, was born in Ohio January 1, 1859, and appointed to the Military academy from that state in 1879. In 1883 he was appointed a second lieutenant in the Twenty-third infantry and continued in that arm of the service until appointed chief of the bureau of insular affairs in 1906. During the Spanish-American war he was given increased rank in the volunteers.

General Edwards is one of the livest and most energetic officers in the United States army, and his rise has been most rapid. He first came into the limelight during the Philippine insurrections following the war with Spain, where he served as adjutant on the staff of Major General Lawton.

In 1906 he organized the bureau of insular affairs and was made its first chief, and was later military aid to President Taft, in which capacity he made himself one of the most popular officers in the army. He is the senior brigadier general in the army, but in the last two groups of promotions of general officers he was passed over in the elevation to a major generalship.

He was recently placed in command of the newly formed Northeastern department, with headquarters in Boston.

Eat the Old Pelters.

The probability that horse flesh will become a food for general use was discussed by Dr. H. E. Barnard, pure food commissioner for Indiana, Friday. He said:

"Horse flesh became a popular food during the siege of Paris. The French have been eating it and liking it ever since. The present food scarcity puts every housewife in a state of siege and one by one the opponents of the use of horse meat are reaching the conclusion that there is no reason why the flesh of the horse should not be used as human food.

"Charles Grimmer, the president of the United Master Buchers of America, and Horace Hoskins, the dean of the state veterinary college, have issued a statement in which they say that they have been converted to the use of horse flesh as a food and believe that the American people ought to be educated to its use in this time of food scarcity. The statement is as follows:

"'At this particular time when the food problem is so difficult and gives certain promise of becoming increasingly hard to solve, there is every reason why the use of horse flesh as food should be urged. We have got to feed all Europe, and we still must keep enough to feed ourselves. Why shouldn't we take a food we have right at our hands that could relieve the situation tremendously?

"'Some people may rebel at the idea of eating horse flesh. Did they ever stop to consider that the horse will not eat food that is not clean. Just try to give a horse water from a pail that is dirty or oats in a pail or manger that is foul. You wil find that you cannot do it. No matter how hungry or thirsty the horse may be.

"'Then, too, consider that horses seldom, if ever, have tuberculosis, while cows and hogs have to be watched all the time and many have to be destroyed because they are tubercular. The more you stop to think about it, the more you must be convinced that horse flesh is clean and desireable from that standpoint. As for palatability, there are those who claim that horse flesh tastes better than beef.

"'I look confidently to the time when the government will take a stand on this. Of course, horse flesh should be surrounded with the same safeguards that now obtain with our other meats. It must be government inspected and passed and it must at all times be under proper regulations.'

"The sale of horse flesh is now permitted in New York City. The demand may never be great, but every pound that is sold helps out the shortage of the meat supply."

A Word To Teachers

"If you teachers and educators could see what I, in my line of duty must see every day, you would come to know that the most important thing in the world is right marriage and one of the most horrible things is the wrong kind of marriage," said Dr. George S. Bliss, superintendent of the Indiana School for Feeble-Minded Youth at Fort Wayne, speaking before the Delaware county teachers' institute.

"It is an important part of our duties there to trace the ancestry of the unfortunate children who are our charges, and the defectives run almost as true to form with their ancestry in the matter of mental deficiency as race horses run true to form in the matter of speed.

"It is a crime, no less, for a marriage to be performed where either of those entering the contracts is a mental defective or a physical defective of certain kinds, where the defects are likely to appear in the offspring. The jails, the hospitals, the asylums, the penitentiaries and reformatories are filled with the results of bad marriages.

"Some persons seem to thing that it means the death of romance to place marriage on a mental and physical basis, but let me tell you there is nothing romatic in an idiotic child and there is nothing romatic about the murderer and the thief that may spring from a union where one or both persons are defective."

Dr. Bliss urged stringent marriage laws, the teaching of eugenics to those capable of understanding the subject and the prevention of marriage among those mentally or physically unfit.

J. R. Leighty, of Kansas City, Mo., proprietor of the great "Leighty Orchard" St. Joe, and Ray Reasoner, manager of the farm, were Antwerp visitors Saturday. Mr. Leighty is a business man, who has a firm faith in newspaper advertising, and not only preaches it but puts into practice his own preaching. Last year all papers within a radius of thirty miles carried his display "ad." The result fully justified and confirmed his belief, expenditure of time and money. Although the crop will be short this year, because of unfavorable weather conditions, he again comes to his patrons via the country newspaper route and tells them. Say, Bro. Editor, doesn't it appear like an oasis in the desert to be permitted to see a man of such stature after all space requests for charitable (?) purposes.

Mr. Leighty recognizes that our space is our "stock in trade" and would no more think of receiving it gratuitously than giving away the product of his orchards.—Antwerp Bee-Argos.

WANTS 30,000 ACRES OF WHEAT IN DEKALB COUNTY.

In a letter sent out by the state food director, J. I. Christie, farmers in each county of the state are asked to increase their acreage of wheat and rye from 25 per cent. on wheat to 35 per cent. on rye over the acreage of last year. DeKalb county is asked to have a wheat acreage of 30,000 acres next year and 3,000 in rye.

Director Christie has received communication from Secretary of Agriculture Houston and Herbert Hoover, national food director, instructing him to forward a message to Indiana farmers urging the larger planting this fall. He sent the communication to each county agricultural agent and chairmen of county committees on food production.

Director Christie's letter points out that George C. Bryant, state field agent of the United States Bureau of Crop Estimates, has co-operated with the state food committee in estimating the number of acres to be planted in each county, and has fixed the above acreage for DeKalb county.

Problem Answered

Miss Lazearn E. Sailer was the first one to bring in a correct solution to the arithmetical problem in last week's News. The answer is $357.50, as she gives it; but better than answer giving, is the analysis that accompanies her work.

Another Problem

Last week, the News gave an arithmetical problem—an easy one; and this week, it gives another—a harder one. Here it is:

A pole 40 feet high stands beside a stream 20 feet wide: where must the pole break so that the top just touches the opposite bank? This will give a right-angled triangle, the stream forming the base and the pole the altitude and the hypothenuse.

An arithmetical solution is wanted. But a slght knowledge of algebra is needed to find a rule.

ASKS $10,000 FOR ALIENATION OF HUSBAND'S AFFECTIONS.

A suit for $10,000 for the alienation of affections has been venued from the Whitley County Circuit court to the DeKalb Circuit court for hearing at the next term. The suit was filed in the Whitley County court by Mrs. Emma K. Wetzel who charges that Florence A. Moore alienated her husband's affections.

The plaintiff states that she was married to Lewis C. Wetzel on October 22, 1895, and that they lived together until February 8, 1917. She says that for the past three years the defendant has been guilty of persuading her husband to leave and abandon his wife. For the alleged alienation of affections the wife asks for $10,000 from the "other woman" in the case.

If Mothers Only Knew.

From 12 to 20 out of every 100 babies die the first year of life and most of these deaths take place during warm weather. Children's diseases are usually caused by germs which enter the body through the mouth or nose. This is especially true of Infantile Paralysis. It's easier and cheaper to prevent disease than to cure it. If mothers knew the value and importance of a good antiseptic used in the mouth and nasal passages of children they would never neglect its use. One of the best antiseptics and germ destroyers known is Glando Gargle. It contains the much known and highly recommended Eucalyptus which combined with other valuable ingredients makes it of unestimable value in the home. Germs cannot breed where it is used regularly. Glando Gargle is fine for teething babies. It relieves the feverish, swollen gums and makes teething easier. It is excellent for a cold in the head, hay fever, sore throat, sore mouth and catarrh. It is also a preventative of adenoids. Use it and you will have no regrets. Sold by druggists or can be secured from the Gland-Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

Prophecy of 300 Years Ago.

A good deal of attention has been paid in some quarters to an extraordinary Latin prophecy, said to have been made by a "Brother Johannes" in the year 1600, as quoted in a recent issue of the Figaro, published in Paris, France. In deciphering the allegory, it is taken for granted that France is represented by a cock, England by a leopard, Russia by a white eagle, Germany by a black eagle and Austria by the "other eagles;" while the lamb stands for Justice, Mercy and Truth.

"Towards the year 1900, the Antichrist will manifest himself. His army will surpass in numbers all that can be imagined. There will be Christians among his legions, and there will be Mohammedans and savage soldiers among the defenders of the Lamb.

WAR IN FOUR ELEMENTS

"For the first time, the Lamb will be all red. There will not be a single spot in the Christian world that will not be red; and red will be the heavens, the earth, the waters and even the air, for blood will flow in the domains of the four elements at once.

'The Black Eagle will throw himself on the Cock, who will lose many feathers, but will strike back heroically with his spurs. He soon would be crushed were it not for the help of the Leopard and his claws.

"The Black Eagle will come from the country of Luther, will surprise the Cock from another side and will invade the country of the Cock up to the middle of it.

"The White Eagle, coming from the north, will surprise the Black Eagle and the Other Eagle and will invade the country of the Anichrist from one end to another.

"The Black Eagle will see himself forced to liberate the Cock in order to fight the White Eagle, and the Cock will pursue the Black Eagle into the country of the Antichrist to help the White Eagle.

RIVERS CROSSED ON DEAD BODIES

"The battles fought up to then will be as nothing compared to those which will take place in the country of Luther, for the Seven Angels will together pour in the fire of their censors on the impious earth which signifies that the Lamb will order the extermination of the race of Antichrist.

"When the Beast sees that he is lost he will become furious, and for many months the beak of the White Eagle, the claws of the Leopard, and the spurs of the Cock will furiously strike at him.

"They will cross rivers over the bodies of the slain, and there, in places, will change the course of the waters. They will bury only the men of noble families, the leading commandants, and the princes, because to the carnage made by the armies will be joined the wholesale death of those who will die of hunger or the pest.

"The Antichrist will ask many times for peace, but the Seven Angels who walk in front of the three animals defending the Lamb have declared that victory will only be granted on the condition that the Antichrist be crushed like straw on the barn floor.

"The executors of the Justice of the Lamb cannot stop fighting as long as the Antichrist possess soldiers to fight against them.

KAISER TO DIE A MADMAN

"That which makes the decree of the Lamb so implacable is that the Antichrist has pretended to be a follower of Christ, and to act in His name, and if he does not perish the fruit of the Redeemer would be lost, and the doors of Hades would prevail against the Saviour.

The fight which will take place where the Antichrist forges his army, will not be in any way a human fight. (This may have reference, it is suggested to Essen, where the Krupp works are, and many authorities believe that the decisive battle may take place in Westphalia.)

"The three animals defending the Lamb will exterminate the last army of the Antichrist, but they will be forced to erect on the battlefield a pyre as large as a city for the bodies of the dead will change the aspect of the countryside, as there will be mounds of the slain.

"The Antichrist will lose his crown, and will die in solitude and madness. His empire will be divided into twenty-two states, but none of them will any longer possess fortresses, armies, or vessels (curiously enough, this number coincides with the number of German states.)

RUSSIA TO GET TURKEY

"The White Eagle, by the order of St. Michael, will drive the Crescent from Europe, and will instal himself at Constantinople.

"Then will begin an era of peace and prosperity for the earth, and there will be more wars, each nation being governed according to the rules of justice.

"There will no longer be Lutherans or Schismatics. The Lamb will reign, and the supreme happiness of humanity will begin.

"Happy will be those who, escaping the perils of that period, will be able to enjoy the fruit of the reign of the Spirit and of the purging of humanity, which can only come after the defeat of the Antichrist."

Druggist Praises Glando

Suffered Many Years From Constipation and Liver Trouble

After several years of close confinement in a drug store at the corner of Main and Sixth street, Columbus, O., I found my health broken and was compelled to give up my work and go to a hospital for treatment. I received but little help. I had an enlarged liver and was constipated. Laxatives had lost their power and I was forced to use injections for each action of the bowels. I was nervous and my heart action was bad. I was losing flesh at an alarming rate. I had tried about everything for this condition that was kept in a drug store without receiving any permanent help. After spending several hundred dollars doctoring, I began to feel that there was no help for me. Relief finally came through the use of Glando Tonic. After several months treatment my liver trouble was gone and my bowels were restored to their normal condition. I now seldom ever take a laxative." The above testimony is only one of the many testimonials which tell of the wonderful cures that are being effected through Glando, the Great Gland Tonic. Gland Tonic can be secured from druggists or of the Gland Aid Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind. Price 50 cents.

Introducing Suits and Fabrics

Fashion holds a loose rein this season and leaves much to the fancy of the individual. If only she contrives to be smart and somewhat original she may please herself as to the length of her coat, the lines of her silhouette and the material of her suit. She who loves the plain, tailor-made suit in quiet colors is much approved by fashionable sentiment, and she who cannot be happy in severe things may go a long way in elaboration.

Nevertheless the predominating style in tailored suits is built on the almost straight line silhouette, with a three-quarter length (or slightly longer) coat and a plain skirt without any fullness to spare and hanging straight. It may even cup in a little toward the bottom, and buttoned up the side seams from the hem almost to the knee. There is no attempt to make suit skirts longer and eight inches above the floor is a safe rule for them.

There are several new names for soft woolen cloths, usually descriptive of their surfaces. Instead of trying to remember them all—for no one else is apt to—they may be classed as the "glove finish" materials, as their names imply—suede twill, wool jersey, velours, broadcloth, bolivia, are all of this character.

The suit shown here has a plain skirt, fuller than the average. The coat is semi-fitting with straight line down the front, and a fashionable fullness over the hips, where it is set on to a belt curved at the sides. Two small pockets appear below the belt and there is a convertible collar of the material. The hem of the coat is very narrow and there are no decorative features except the buttons on the pockets.

Superb Lounging Robe of Satin

It is a far cry from the ordinary kimona to the gorgeous lounging robe that is pictured here, although there are kimonas and kimonas; some of them superb and rich in the embroideries of Japan. Perhaps it is these that have inspired the boudoir gowns or lounging robes that have departed from the simple ways of their forebear to become rich and splendid. Anyway at home one may be as gaily decked out as the fancy chooses, and as rich and splendid as money will allow, without offending anybody's taste or sense of fitness.

This lounging robe is of salmon colored satin embroidered with silk in tones of the same color. The long, set-in sleeves with points finished with tassel, carry the mind kinomaward, and so does the management of the front where the opening is like that of a kimona. But a "V" shaped vestee is set in and the garment cut with a long body finished at the bottom with an embroidered band. The skirt portion is set on to this and falls open to the hem, pre-supposing an under-petticoat of silk or net or lace. The under-petticoat is of crepe de chine, with a lace trimmed flounce. To indulge in so rich a boudoir gown is to take the consequences in the form of petticoats, slippers, stockings and cap that shall be in keeping with it.

The pretty cap shown in the picture leaves no doubt in the mind as to its origin for it is a dainty interpretation of a coolie hat. The crown is made of band[illegible] narrow ribbon, the brim of lace and a flounce of lace falls from the brim edge. The slippers are made of satin ribbon set on to a soft sole and gathered about the top edge. They are held on by narrow straps made of satin ribbon shirred over flat elastic and there are two straps to each slipper. The cap and slippers need not be of the same color as the robe but the effect is fine when they are.

Overhead Decoration.

A charming device for an overhead decoration for a porch, outdoor fete or even a dining room is made by taking a large Japanese umbrella or parasol.

Cut off the handle close to the top, then get a wee electric light and fasten on the end of each rib, say, alternating white and blue. From each rib a strand of smilax, asparagus fern or narrow ribbon may radiate to the corners of the table.

Silk Coatees Favored.

Little silk bolero coatees are made to go with the lovely cream white net dresses. They are often rather loose, and made by lapping the breadths to make them take the form of the figure, more or less. They are bordered with ancient gimps, or with old-fashioned looking narrow flowered ribbons. They generally take the tone of the ribbon used in some way on these vaporous dresses.

INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 23

DANIEL IN THE DEN OF LIONS.

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 6.

GOLDEN TEXT—The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.—Psalms 34:7.

I. Daniel the Prime Minister of the Medo-Persian Empire (vv. 1-3).

Daniel's sterling worth brought him to the front and kept him there. The new king was quick to discern his merits and to give them recognition by placing him at the head of affairs in his kingdom.

II. An Occasion Sought Against Daniel (vv. 4-9).

(1) The Reason of—Envy. To have this foreigner placed over them aroused the jealousy of the presidents and princes of the empire, so they set about to have him removed. The presence of envy shows inferiority. One never envies those below him It is hard to forgive those who have outstripped us and left us behind in the race of life.

(2) The Failure (v. 4). Daniel's official record was blameless. Not even an error could be found of which they could accuse him. Though he was without fault he had to suffer. Those who excel in any line are sure to suffer in some way. It is true in business, the home, the school, politics and religion.

(3) The Wicked Plot (vv. 5-9). Not being able to find any fault, they trumped up a charge against him on the ground of his foreign religion. They were not careful about the method employed, just so their end was attained.

III. Daniel's Noble Confession (vv. 10-13). Though Daniel knew that the wicked decree was signed, he knelt before God three times a day as usual. He went quietly about his affairs, attended to his regular devotions, because he trusted God. There is always a marked silence about heroism. Weak men bluster, but strong men have little to say. Daniel continued his usual habit of prayer, even though it was a violation of the civil law, because he knew that God's law was first. When the laws of earth conflict with the laws of heaven there is but one thing to do; that is, to obey God rather than man.

IV. The Foolish Decree Executed. (vv. 14-17). The king was greatly displeased with himself (v. 14) and diligently sought to deliver Daniel, but he was helpless (v. 15). The proud ruler was a slave. Laws which change not are self-condemnatory, foolish, positively wicked. The king was weak for fear of others, which is utter wickedness. Daniel was cast into the den of lions (v. 16) and a double seal placed upon the den (v. 17). They were not content with the king's seal alone, which shows that one rascal will not trust another. The king's words, "Thy God, whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee," to Daniel were a poor excuse, but they were the best that he could offer to his conscience.

V. Daniel Delivered (vv. 18-23).

(1) The King's Sleepless Night (v. 18). Doubtless Daniel was more comfortable in the den of lions than the king in his palace. His quietude is a picture of the safety and peace which are the portion of those who trust God and do his will. This is a sample of what faith can do. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth thee."

(2) The King's Question (v. 20). In the morning the king called to Daniel in the den of lions saying, "Is thy God able?" This is always the question of the unbelieving heart. The believing heart says, "Our God is able."

(3) Daniel's Answer (v. 22). "My God has sent his angel." Angels are God's ministering spirits. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." (Psalms 34:7.) Many times no doubt our lives are preserved because we are guarded by God's angels. Not even a sparrow falls to the ground without the Father, and the very hairs of our heads are numbered, so we ought to expect the mouths of the lions to be shut against us.

(4) Daniel Removed From the Den (v. 23). There was no manner of hurt upon him. The reason was that "he believed in his God." The same reason is why the garments and hair of his companions were not even singed.

VI. Doom of Daniel's Accusers (v. 24). They were cast into the den of lions "and the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came at the bottom of the den."

Daniel's God to Be Feared.

VII. Darius' Decree (vv. 25-27). He decreed that in all parts of his kingdom men of all peoples and tongues should tremble and fear before the God of Daniel.

VIII. Daniel's Prosperity (v. 28). Though Daniel's enemies perish, he goes higher and higher in the kingdom, even continuing into the reign of Cyrus. In all our trials and testings we should not be moved, for there is a righteous and just God in heaven, and nothing can occur without him. Man's schemes shall even continue to praise him.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

SALOON FOISTED ON POOR MAN.

All of a poor man's wealth is invested in his children, says Mr. John F. Cunneen, labor leader and workingman of Chicago. The poor man sacrifices his whole life to raise his children and hopes when they grow up they will be a help to him in his old age. If the rich man's children go to the bad the rich man still has money to support him, but when the poor man's children go to the bad all his wealth is lost and he is left in his old age to a life of misery. The saloon is an institution that robs the poor man of his children, and he ought to be against it even more than the rich man.

The rich men will not live where there are saloons. They will have their land deeds fixed up so that no saloons can be established, or they will have laws made to bar out saloons. Some Christian people ease their consciences by having laws made to keep the saloons away from the church doors; but when you drive the saloons away from the rich man's home and the doors of the church, you drive them to the homes of the poor people—the least able to withstand their ravages. The poor man cannot drive the saloon away from his door with money, like the rich man, for he has not the money; he has a vote, and with that vote he can, and should, drive the saloon away from his door.

INSURANCE MEN DRY.

Speaking editorially of the waste in human life due to drink, the Insurance Magazine says:

"One of the brightest hopes that this country had in its entrance into war was the hope of the abolition of the manufacture and use of booze.

"It is permissible to disagree with the president that beer and wine are in any way more necessary than whisky. Every one of them is a first aid to German bullets, an enemy to food conservation and a deliberately unjust tax upon the entire country in time of war.

"At some national or perhaps international conference all the chiefs of the insurance world will put a co-operative ban on intoxicants.

"It is the man who drinks who is more largely responsible for the present mortality tables than any other factor.

"It is the man who drinks who is forced to pay a greater sum for his insurance than otherwise would be the case. . . .

"If the man who drinks is still acceptable as a risk at a certain price, then the man whose system is free from the brain-numbing poison is entitled to a lower rate."

SCREEN ACTRESS TALKS.

Those who enjoy good, wholesome motion picture plays will welcome the action of Miss Blanche Bates in declining to appear in any production in which drunkenness is depicted. "There are many reasons," she says, "why all the plays in which I've appeared have been on the water wagon, and one of them is that I would not participate in a drunken orgy any more on the stage than off. My managers would often say to me, 'But it gets the laughs, and that's what we want.' And I would answer: 'Drunkenness is one of the most pitiful and unpleasant conditions that any man or woman can descend to, and if the American theater audiences laugh at the antics of an intoxicated person, I firmly believe that the American sense of humor ought to be censored."

IMPORTANT AS OLYMPIAN GAMES OR BALL CONTESTS.

"Supposing our soldiers were preparing themselves to uphold the honor of their country in the Olympian games," said the Times. "Their friends would help them and would be filled with horror if they saw one going wrong. To encourage him to drink would be held an act of treachery deliberately intended to injure him and the national cause. What are the Olympian games, or any other contests whatever, compared with this? They are play, make-believe. This is the real thing, the true test of manhood. Is our manhood, then, to be a shame or an honor to us?"

START WITH BEER.

"No youth or young woman begins the alcoholic drug habit with what you term 'The condensed and highly concentrated alcoholic drinks, like whisky,'" says Mr. Samuel Wilson, writing to William Randolph Hearst in the American Issue. "In my law enforcement work I have visited hundreds of saloons, cabaret restaurants and dance halls. Invariably the drink of the young men and young women is beer or wine."

BEER STROKE.

"One of the principal factors in producing heat prostration is the drinking of beer," says Dr. W. A. Evans in the "How to Keep Well" department of the Chicago Tribune. "It has been proposed," he continues, that the term 'heat stroke' be changed to 'beer stroke.' . . . The use of beer is more harmful than the use of whisky because most people have sense enough to keep away from distilled liquors in hot weather, but somehow they have gotten the idea that beer is cooling."

Too Sick To Work

Many Women in this Condition Regain Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Convincing Proof of This Fact.

Ridgway, Penn. — "I suffered from female trouble with backache and pain in my side for over seven months so I could not do any of my work. I was treated by three different doctors and was getting discouraged when my sister-in-law told me how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her. I decided to try it, and it restored my health, so I now do all of my housework which is not light as I have a little boy three years old." —Mrs. O. M. Rhines, Ridgway, Penn.

Mrs. Lindsey Now Keeps House For Seven.

Tennille, Ga.—"I want to tell you how much I have been benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. About eight years ago I got in such a low state of health I was unable to keep house for three in the family. I had dull, tired, dizzy feelings, cold feet and hands nearly all the time and could scarcely sleep at all. The doctor said I had a severe case of ulceration and without an operation I would always be an invalid, but I told him I wanted to wait awhile. Our druggist advised my husband to get Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has entirely cured me. Now I keep house for seven and work in the garden some, too. I am so thankful I got this medicine. I feel as though it saved my life and have recommended it to others and they have been benefited".—Mrs. W. E. Lindsey, R. R. 3, Tennille, Ga.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

COSTLY CHIMES FOR CADETS

Big Set of Bells Is Being Made for Chapel at United States Military Academy at West Point.

What is said to be the most costly chime of bells in America and one of the most musical sets in existence is now being made at the foundry of the Meneely Bell company of Troy, N. Y., for the massive tower of Cadet chapel, Rev. H. P. Silver, chaplain, at the United States military academy, West Point, as the gift of Mrs. James M. Lawton, in memory of her father, the late Maj. Gen. Robert Anderson, who was graduated from the academy in 1825, and whose brilliant command of Fort Sumner at the outbreak of the Civil war has thrilled millions of readers of American history, says the Watchman-Examiner.

There will be 12 bells in the chime, the largest weighing nearly two tons and measuring 56 inches at its mouth. The cadet chapel is of stone, quarried from rock found on the military grounds and cost to build about half a million dollars. Its commanding position on the hill back from the Hudson river makes an ideal place for bells, and the patriotic airs from the chime will sound throughout the beautiful highlands, in the midst of which the military academy is situated, and prove a source of inspiration to the future generals of the United States army that will always linger with them pleasantly.

LIFT YOUR CORNS OFF WITH FINGERS

How to loosen a tender corn or callus so it lifts out without pain.

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn or callus without even irritating the surrounding skin.

A small bottle of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but will positively remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet.

If your druggist hasn't stocked this new drug yet, tell him to get a small bottle of freezone for you from his wholesale drug house.—adv.

Anything for Comfort.

"I woudln't grieve so about your boy going to war."

"It is dreadful; I can't bear the thought."

"I know, but you remember that if he stayed home he might take it into his head to marry some girl you have no use for."

Between Us Girls.

Miss Sharpe—Some men can be led, but others must be driven.

Young Sharper—Oh, yes! But while you can drive a man to drink you can't always lead him to the altar.

An apparatus operated by compressed air, recently invented, literally blows ice cream from molds.

Easy to Remedy.

Jones was always complaining of his wife's memory.

"She can never remember anything," said he. "It's awful!"

"My wife was just as bad," said Brown, "till I found out a capital recipe."

"What is it?" asked Jones, eagerly.

"Why," said Brown, "whenever there's anything particular I want the missus to remember I write it on a slip of paper and gum it on the looking glass."

Jones is now a contented man.

An Illuminating Postcard.

A young girl of plebeian ancestry achieved fame as an actress in London. Feeling the necessity, however, of a rest from her labors, she wrote to her uncle, a police sergeant of a country village, asking him if she might come and stay with him to recuperate. She ended her note: "Please send a P. C. to say if I may come."

A few days later her landlady rushed upstairs with an awestricken countenance—a policeman wanted her! The girl descended with an ominous feeling at her heart, says London Tit-Bits.

"If you please, miss," said the stolid being who confronted her, eyeing her with stern disapproval, "I'm the P. C. what you asked your uncle to send, but I may as well tell you straight away as I'm a respectable married man. Your uncle's prepared to take you in if you're willing to make yourself useful—feed the pig, clean his office and the two cells."

"Wife a Good Sport."

W. S. Desmond, a carpenter of Huntington Lake, Cal., is above the selective draft age limit, but he wanted to join the army.

He told his wife. She objected. He offered to match pennies with her. She agreed. He suggested heads, stay at home, tails got to the front.

They matched and tails won. Desmond enlisted in the field artillery. "My wife's a good sport," he told the recruiting officer.

WRIGLEY'S

As beneficial as it is enjoyable—in other words, doubly beneficial: that's why is popular the world over. Many a long watch or a hard job is made more cheerful by this long-lasting refreshment.

WRIGLEY'S

Feed the Fighters! Win the War!!

Harvest the Crops—Save the Yields

On the battle fields of France and Flanders, the United States boys and the Canadian boys are fighting side by side to win for the World the freedom that Prussianism would destroy. While doing this they must be fed and every ounce of muscle that can be requisitioned must go into use to save this year's crop. A short harvest period requires the combined forces of the two countries in team work, such as the soldier boys in France and Flanders are demonstrating.

The Combined Fighters in France and Flanders and the Combined Harvesters in America WILL Bring the Allied Victory Nearer.

A reciprocal arrangement for the use of farm workers has been perfected between the Department of the Interior of Canada and the Departments of Labor and Agriculture of the United States, under which it is proposed to permit the harvesters that are now engaged in the wheat fields of Oklahoma, Kansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Wisconsin to move over into Canada, with the privilege of later returning to the United States, when the crops in the United States have been conserved, and help to save the enormous crops in Canada which by that time will be ready for harvesting.

HOW DO YOU LIKE COLONIAL STYLE?

This Type of Dwelling Seen in All Parts of Country Because of Real Popularity.

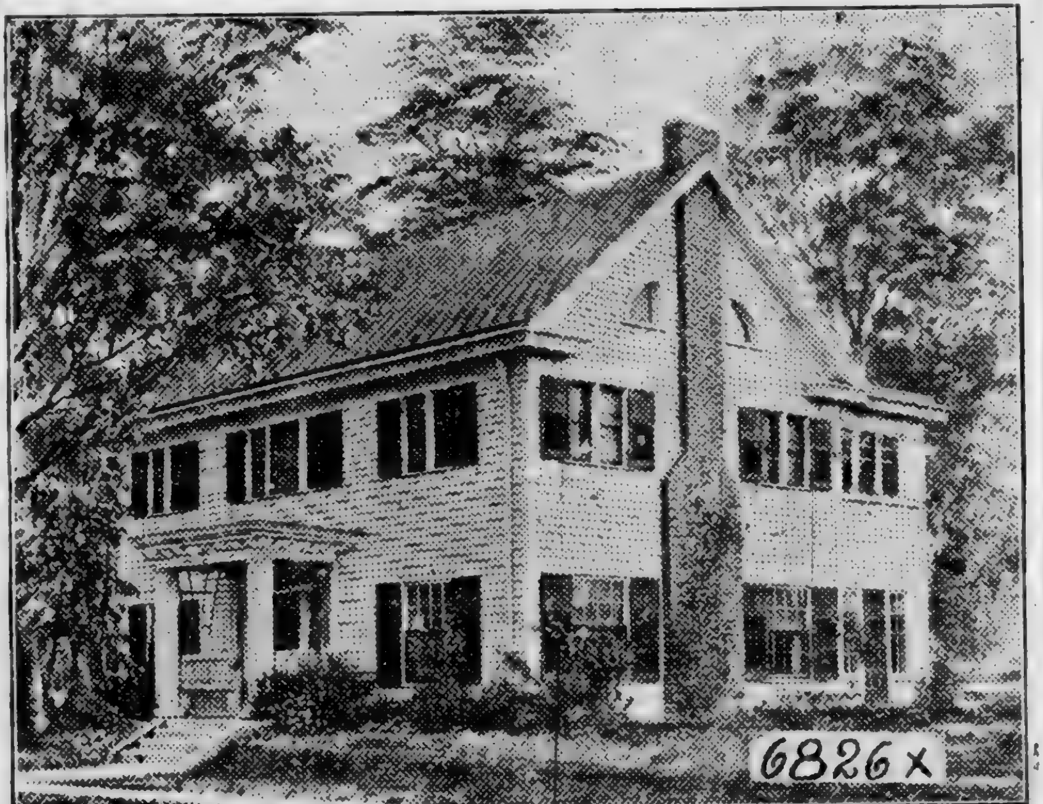
EARLY MODELS FROM BRITAIN

Americans Developed Use of Wood as Building Material—Pleasing Design Described in This Article.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

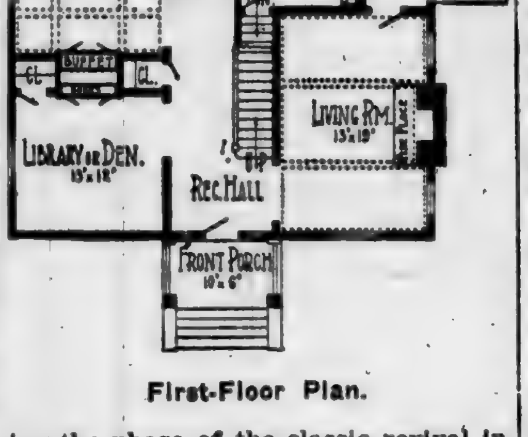
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

If you travel through the country and notice the houses both in the cities and in the open country, you will find houses of the colonial style everywhere, strikingly attractive in any environment, provided they are not crowded too closely. The colonial style of architecture has a strong American appeal because of historical association and also because of the beauty of simplicity. The early American homes, after which the modern colonial homes are modeled, were all framed in a manner which brought their beauty out from their simplicity. The architectural style adopted by the colonists was naturally affected by that of the country from which they came, and therefore, the homes which they built after the period of privation and discomfort had passed, could easily be distinguished as following the English style of architecture. Even farther than that, a great many early colonial houses were actually partially built in England, the parts being sent over the ocean bodily to be framed into the house on this side.



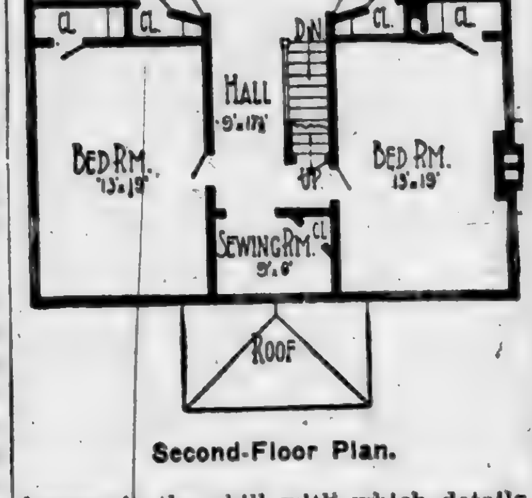
It was nearly a century after the successful colonization of America had begun that attention became directed to architectural development. The beginnings of American architecture date back to the early part of the eighteenth century. The early English colonists held closely to frame construction, but some brick houses were built in the southern and Dutch colonies.

In the period of 50 years immediately preceding the revolution, the so-called colonial style of architecture was developed. It was based largely upon ideas prevalent in England during the phase of the classic revival in England which took place during the reign of Queen Anne. The principal difference between this colonial style and that from which it was adopted was in the use of wood rather than stone as a building material. The residences in the various colonies each had characteristics peculiar to the tastes of the people in these colonies, but the basic features of all were traceable to an origin in Old World ideas. The rich English subjects, especially in Maryland and Virginia, alone, built of brick. Their estates were modeled after those found in England at that time. Their manor houses were surrounded with extensive grounds bordered with high brick walls in which elaborate gates were built. The high-ceilinged rooms of these southern colonial manor houses were elaborately decorated. Large fireplaces were used, similar to those found during the reign of Elizabeth in England.



First-Floor Plan.

Even the finest of the New England houses were built of wood. Because they were less extensive in their arrangement, they did not possess the dignified appearance of the houses built in the southern colonies, but they were, nevertheless, picturesque. The type, which is familiar to all, was that of the large, rectangular house having many-paned windows placed symmetrically and one above the other, fitted with shutters, with the entrance directly in the center of the building and heavy pilasters carried from foundation to roof at the corners and on either side of the entrance. The interiors of these houses were often finished with just as much skill and in just as elaborate a manner as those of the southern colonial manor houses. Perhaps the most interesting thing which may be observed in the work of those who designed and built these early American colonial houses is the skill with which details were adopted from stone in wood.



Second-Floor Plan.

The modern adaptation of the colonial style is largely influenced by developments which took place after the revolution and if the general outline of the house and perhaps the window arrangement are followed, this is considered sufficient to characterize the structure as a colonial style house. The roof design is one particular which designers use to advantage in varying the appearance of their colonial houses. It is true that the old colonial houses which are still standing today have almost every possible type of roof represented and modern American architects are not without material for their inspiration and guidance, no matter what sort of roof they wish to use. It is noticeable, however, that particularly among the larger modern colonial house designs, the box cornice roof is given preference. Houses following this style are being built from all of the modern building materials.

The smaller colonial houses of today are largely of a type similar to that shown in the accompanying perspective view. Wide clapboards, originally used as a matter of economic necessity, are now produced for their artistic effect. The many-paned windows with their shutters are still adhered to in this style, although the fittings used are very different from those found on the early houses. The outside chimney, carried up wide at the bottom to provide for a fireplace and narrowed down near the second floor, is a favorable feature. These houses are practically always finished in white with dark green shutters, when built of wood. The contrast of the shutters and the chimney with the white walls of the house is always pleasing.

In this design, the front entrance leads into a reception hall from which the stairway leads to the second floor. Cased openings lead into the living room and library, near the front of the house, and into the dining room farther back. A door at the end of the hall opens into the passage through the pantry.

The living room contains the fireplace, and the ceiling is furnished with exposed timbers. The library or den is a very attractive room with its built-in book cases. The dining room ceiling is paneled and a buffet sets into the wall between this room and the den. The rear entrance into the house is through an entry in which the refrigerator is placed. A small lavatory is provided off of the entry. The kitchen is handily arranged and well-lighted. The serving pantry is an important feature of convenience. Two large bedrooms and two inclosed sleeping porches, a sewing room and a bath are provided on the second floor.

The arrangement of this house is typical of the smaller modern colonial style houses, the scheme being to arrange all of the rooms on both floors around a central hall. Maximum convenience, independence of rooms and the best lighting facilities are obtained in this way.

On Writing Letters.

"I was told by Capt. Harry Light the other day," writes a Canadian major, "that there is a new style in trench letters. The censor's duties have been reduced by many per cent. The soldier now has the sense of the situation engrained in his thinking. He sees through the need of keeping quiet even on matters that call for some criticism. There is more humor and matter-of-factness about his letters. One of my men, who can't write very well, was telling me the other day that one letter a week is all that he can summon up his courage to write, and he gave this as a reason: 'The people at home don't, can't understand life here. We have got to go through it. Why tease them with anxieties—they have enough to put up with in pacifists and political grumblers.' And I think he is right. Don't you?"

Eat Plenty of Those Spuds.

Eat lots of potatoes. First to help sustain the price to encourage growing of another big crop next year. And secondly to save bread. That is the advice of Harry E. Barnard, Indiana food administrator.

"Potatoes taste better today than ever before," explained Barnard. "During the months when they were so scarce that they were real luxuries, we learned to appreciate them. Now that they are cheap again we find them more satisfying than before the long days when they were absent from the table.

"The potato crop will be very large this year for in spite of the high price of seed and the scarcity of labor, the great potato states of Maine, Michigan and Wisconsin planted large acreages which have been cared for so faithfully that only an unexpected disaster can prevent them from harvesting one of the largest potato crops on record. And besides the effort of the real potato growers, every amateur gardener who planted a few hills in his back yard has contributed to the total crop.

"Potatoes will be cheap. And because they are cheap we should eat them eagerly. There are two reasons for this. We must help sustain the price and willingly pay the reasonable demand of the farmer in order that he may be induced to grow another large crop next year. We must also use the potato as a starchy food for every peck of potatoes we eat saves several loaves of bread. Large potato eaters are not great bread eaters. They do not need the bread. They get their starch and mineral salts in an excellent form in mashed or boiled or baked potatoes.

"And so in your saving remember that every potato that you eat today lays by a little more wheat with which to win the war."

TERRE HAUTE GIRL BECOMES WIFE OF BELGIAN CAPTAIN.

Capt. J. M. DeBeaufort, a Belgian, who served two years as a war correspondent for a London newspaper on the Western front in France, and Miss Helen F. Reiman ,one of Terre Haute's society leaders, motored to Charleston, Illinois, Friday afternoon and returned a few hours later as Mr. and Mrs. DeBeaufort.

The wedding had been planned for October, but telegraph orders this week by Captain DeBaufort prompted the change in the plans. Captain DeBeaufort met the girl who became his bride at a military ball at Governor's Island, N. Y., and to that military post they will proceed within a week.

Capt. DeBeaufort has been one of the patriotic lecturers on the staff of the adjutant general of New York. He has been speaking in New York and other states. He applied for a commission as one of the seventeen captains to be appointed as special military attaches and interpreters andwas recommended for the commission by General Erasmus Weaver, chief of the coast artillery. These officers are to be assigned to various contingents of the United States military forces sent to France.

Where Some Tax Money Comes from.

DeKalb County is Fortunate in Having So Many Railroads and Telephone and Telegraph Lines to help Pay Taxes—Assessed by State Board.

That the railroads passing through DeKalb county have been assessed at $3,636,216, the Fort Wayne & Northwestern interurban at $130,647 and the telephone and telegraph lines at $292,129, is brought out in the report of the assessments made by the state board of taxation.

The valuation of the different public utilities has just been received from the auditor of the state by County Auditor S. P. Nelson. DeKalb county is fortunate in having so many railroads passing through within its boundaries as they help materially in taxes. The two big trunk lines that pass through, the New York Central assessed at $1,715,468 and the Baltimore & Ohio, assessed at $1,042,278, are the largest taxpayers in DeKalb county.

This county also has an unusual number of telephone and telegraph lines and express companies which pay in large sums in the county treasury.

There are six railroads that pay taxes in DeKalb county, one interurban line, one sleeping car company, two telegraph companies, ten telephone lines and three express companies.

Railroad Valuations.

The New York Central is the largest taxpayer in DeKalb county. The company's property of the main line alone is assessed at $1,715,468. The branch line has been assessed at $255.685. These assessments are for the amount of the company's lines that come within the bounds of DeKalb county.

The assessment of each of the railroads, telephone, express and telegraph lines, their mileage in DeKalb county, the amount assessed per mile and the total each is assessed is as follows:

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Number of miles of first main track in DeKalb county, 20.72, valued at $31,000 per mile, total $642,320.

Number of miles of second track, 20.72, valued at $8,000 per mile, total $165,760.

Number of miles of side track, 22.69, valued at $3,000 per mile, total $68,070.

Notice to Defendants

STATE OF INDIANA, } ss.
DEKALB COUNTY }

In the DeKalb Circuit Court. October term, 1917. Cause number, 11,046. To quiet title.

Charles F. Boyden and
Frank F. Martin,
Plaintiffs.
—vs.—
Bliss Lowman et al,
Defendants.

Now come the plaintiffs by Charles O Borst, their attorney, and file their complaint herein, together with the affidavit of a competent person, that the following named and designated defendants are non-residents of the state of Indiana, to-wit: Bliss Lowman and the unknown wife of Bliss Lowman; that said action is for the purpose of quieting title to real estate in the state of Indiana; that a cause of action exists against all of said defendants; that all of said defendants are necessary parties to said action and that they are believed to be non-residents of the state of Indiana.

The following real estate in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, is described in said complaint, to-wit: The southwest fractional quarter of section eighteen (18) and the west half of the southeast quarter of said section eighteen (18), excepting from said two tracts the north one hundred and sixty (160) acres thereof by parallel lines; also the south fifty-eight (58) acres of the east half of the northeast quarter of section nineteen (19); also the west half of the northeast quarter of section nineteen (19); also the east half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section nineteen (19); all in township thirty-four (34) north, range thirteen (13) east.

This action is instituted and prosecuted by said plaintiffs for the purpose of quieting their title to the real estate above described as against all demands, claims and claimants whatsoever. Notice is therefore hereby given said defendants that unless they be and appear on the 31st day of October term, 1917, of the DeKalb circuit court of Indiana, being the 5th day of November, 1917, to be begun and holden on the 1st day of October, 1917, at the court house in the city of Auburn, in said county and state, and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court at the office of [L. S.] the clerk thereof in the city of Auburn, Indiana, this 6th day of September, 1917.

Remembered Our Boys.

Last Friday morning five of our young men from this town and vicinity left for Camp Taylor, Ky. They were Roy Maxwell, Ralph Sechler, Clarence Zonker, Grant Baltz and Ralph Hull. Two more boys, Vernie Monroe and Harry Friend are called and will follow on October third.

In a few words Mrs Chas. Koch who is chairman of the comfort kit department, presented each young man with a comfort kit, which is made of the khaki cloth six inches wide and eleven inches long, bound in blue braid. This contains pockets bound with the same braid, filled with two rows of common pins, two colors and four different sizes of buttons each sewed seperate on a small piece of cardboard, fifty yards of white and khaki colored thread wound on small pieces of cardboard. They also contain two seperate pieces of red flannel on which are pinned one dozen safety pins, three different sizes, one large darning needle and three large sewing needles, a small band of khaki cloth bound with blue braid which has two button holes to hold the little pair of scissors in place. A small testament 5½x3 inches and ½ inch thick, some literature and a small book of national hymns donated by the W. C. T. U., complete the kit. This is so arranged that it can be folded into a very neat pack making it convenient for the soldier boy to carry.

Each one thanked Mrs. Koch and felt grateful to the young ladies of St. Joe who raised the money and made these kits.

Each boy who has gone from here has been presented with a comfort kit whether in the navy or malitia.

Two Answer Death Call.

McKinley McCurdy, was born near Perrysville, Ohio, November, 16, 1852, and died at his late home near Concord September 19, 1917 at the age of 64 years, 10 months and 3 days.

He was married to Nancy Ann Cole, November 25, 1886. To this union were born two children, Amos B. and John Spencer. Amos having preceded his father some twenty-seven years ago.

He united with the St. John Lutheran Church near Perrysville, at the age of thirty-three. Since coming here he transferred his membership to the St. Joe Lutheran church. He has endeavored to live a faithful christian life for thirty-one years. He was a loving husband and a kind and affectionate father.

He leaves a wife, one son, John Spencer of Bluffton, one granddaughter, two brothers and many friends. The funeral service was held from the Lutheran Church on Friday afternoon. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

Walter M. Abel, son of Homer and Electa Abel, was born at Coburn's Corners, DeKalb county, Indiana, August 27, 1846. At the age of two years he moved with his parents to Trumbull county, Ohio. After residing there four years, he moved back to Coburn's Corners where he grew to manhood, receiving his education in the school at that place.

In early manhood he was baptized and united with the church at Coburn's Corners.

When the dark clouds of war were hovering over the land, he answered his country's call enlisting at the age of seventeen in Company F, 129th Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He took part in the battles of Resacca, Buzzard's Roost, Dalton, and was severely wounded at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain June 17, 1864.

After recovering from the same, he returned to his regiment, taking part in the battles of Franklin, Nashville and other engagements. He received an honorable discharge August 29, 1865 and later became a charter member of the John Carnes Post, Grand Army of the Republic, at St. Joe, Indiana.

After returning home he taught in the public schools for several years and engaged in farming, which occupation he followed through life, residing on the same farm for forty-six years.

On March 30, 1870, he was united in marriage to Anna E. Nelson. To this union were born two children, Lulu M. Carper of near Auburn, Indiana, and Rose H. Abel of near Coburn's Corners.

He was a kind husband, an indulgent father and a good neighbor, and will be greatly missed in the community in which he lived.

About the first of the year he renewed his faith in Christ and during his last sickness, which covered a period of about ten months, he was a patient sufferer, departing this life on September 15, 1917, aged 71 years and 19 days.

He leaves a wife, one daughter, one son, two grandchildren, Walter Hugh and Nellie V. Carper; three sisters, Mrs. Melvina Alton of Elmwood, Nebraska, Mrs. Almira Kimes of Kinsley, Kansas, and Mrs. Alice Hart of Coburn's Corners and a host of other relatives and friends to mourn his departure.

The funeral services were held from the Coburntown church on Wednesday of last week wtth interment at Riverside, St. Joe. L. W. Spayd officiating, with E. R. Kinsey as funeral director.

Silver Medal Contest

There will be a silver medal contest on next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The music will be furnished by the Sahara Quartette of Fort Wayne. Everybody is urged to come and help to encourage the young contestants. The contest will be held in the Lutheran church.

Mr. and Mrs. Glen Bowen and little daughter, of Fort Wayne, were over Sunday guests of S. S. Widney and other relatives.

Snipping Parties this week

There has been a splendid response on the part of the town and surrounding community to the appeal of the Red Cross. The big task just now is the rush order for hundreds of the comfort pillows to do service in France. These are made from ginghams, calicoes, white cotton goods, percales and muslins, does not matter how much they are worn just so they are clean. These are cut in pieces not to exceed one-half an inch, and collected in paper bag and taken to the Red Cross work room Saturday P. M. where there will be women who will make and fill the pillows and get them ready for shipment the first of next week. Neighborhood groups and community circles will make the snipping party popular this week.

Even father works, in spite of the old song which claims that he doesn't.

Order Saturday Evening Post, 5.

B. V. Widney and wife left Friday for Lafayette where they will attend school.

The first of a series of literaries to be given by the high school alumni, will be held at the school house Friday evening.

Important News Events of the World Summarized

U.S.—Teutonic War News

Secretary Lansing made public at Washington an astounding addition to the series of disclosures covering German intrigues in America and elsewhere—a message sent by Count von Bernstorff in January of this year to the Berlin foreign office requesting authority to pay out $50,000 to influence congress through an unnamed organization, apparently known to the Berlin authorities. Bernstorff indicated in his message that money had been paid this organization on former occasions to perform the same work.

Germany and Austria-Hungary are both very desirous of peace. This was revealed in their replies to Pope Benedict's plea for peace, copies of which reached Amsterdam. The German note says the kaiser "cherishes a lively desire that the appeal may meet with success." Peace would come from the recent proposals of Pope Benedict if the belligerent nations would enter into negotiations in the sense of the pontiff's suggestions, Emperor Charles of Austria-Hungary says in his reply to the Vatican note.

* * *

President Wilson indorsed and Secretaries Baker and Daniels jointly authorized at Washington a national campaign to raise about $3,750,000 to provide entertainment for the men of the new army and navy in the cities and towns near the training camps.

* * *

Ambassador Bakhmeteff, diplomatic representative in Washington of the new Russian republic, is prepared to pledge formally that his government will remain in the war against German autocracy until the end.

* * *

U-boat warfare has claimed another American victim, the Standard Oil steamer Platuria, of 3,445 tons, hailing from New York. Nine men, including the captain, John Leslie, fifty, of Jersey City, went down with the vessel.

* * *

Provost Marshal General Crowder at Washington is preparing to summon before the local boards all the remaining 8,000,000 men enrolled under the selective service draft.

* * *

Approximately 274,800 men left their homes to mobilize for war. They are but 40 per cent. Never in America has such a force been moved in similar time.

* * *

Harold Willis of Boston, the American aviator reported as missing after an aerial battle on August 19, is a prisoner in Germany. Advices to this effect were received at Paris from German sources.

CAPITAL AGHAST AT LATEST PROOF OF TEUTON PLOTS

Plan to Use Money to Influence Congress on War Arouses Legislators.

BERNSTORFF SEEN UNMASKED

Disclosures Made by Secretary of State Lansing Regarded as Showing Ambassador Directed German Intrigue.

Washington.—Convincing proof that German diplomatic agents in the United States violated all rules of international courtesy and conspired to influence congress by the use of money to prevent this country from going to war to defend itself from the attacks of the German government is seen in the publication by Secretary of State Lansing of a note from Count von Bernstorff, former German ambassador to the United States, asking for authority to expend $50,000 for the purpose of influencing congress.

The publication of this note was a greater bomb-shell than any of the other revelations of German duplicity that have been made by the state department. Neutral diplomats, members of congress and others were literally astounded by the disclosures. It has been no secret that the German diplomatic representatives in the United States conspired in various ways to prevent this country from entering the war on the side of the allies but the proof that German money was used or was to be used for the specific purpose of influencing congress furnished an amazing climax for all the revelations that have gone before.

Telegram Sent by Bernstorff.

The telegram, exposed by Secretary of State Lansing, was sent through some secret channel to the Berlin foreign office on Jan. 22, 1917, by Count von Bernstorff, former ambassador of Germany. It was as follows:

"I request authority to pay out up to $50,000 (fifty thousand dollars) in order, as on former occasions, to influence congress through the organization you know of, which can perhaps prevent war.

"I am beginning in the meantime to act accordingly.

"In the above circumstances a public official German declaration in favor of Ireland is highly desirable, in order to gain the support of Irish influence here."

Some congressmen expressed the view that the money was spent in a campaign by telegraph just before the United States declared a state of war, when millions of messages were poured in upon members of both houses.

German propagandists used the telegraph wires freely to further their purposes.

The message of Count von Bernstorff which was revealed by Secretary Lansing was sent last January, at a time when there were no outward indications of a break between the United States and Germany. This, officials said, showed that Count von Bernstorff was fully aware of the kaiser's plans to launch ruthless submarine warfare, thus repudiating Germany's pledges to the United States.

Exposes German Deceit.

State department officials declined to comment upon the object hoped to be realized as a result of the publication of the Bernstorff message. It was believed, however, to have as its purpose supplementing the general policy of exposing to the world the malicious deceit that characterizes German diplomacy, the revelation of German inspiration of peace propaganda in America.

It was denied that there was any intent to reflect upon congress in making the dispatch public at this time. It could not be ascertained that there was any design in selecting any particular moment for the publication and it was asserted also to be a mere coincidence that the exposure occurred just after the arrival of Count von Bernstorff at Constantinople as German ambassador to Turkey.

Officials made it plain that the government had some information of Germany's policy of duplicity before Bernstorff requested authorization to continue his campaign to influence congress. There was gratification in official quarters that the ambassador did not presume to intimate to his government that any amount of propaganda could influence President Wilson.

Officials asserted that the government had an idea of the identity of the organization referred to by Ambassador Bernstorff, but, there being no absolute certainty, none would be named.

It was said to be unfair to draw the conclusion that the organization referred to by Ambassador von Bernstorff was an Irish institution, and from the remarks of officials it was gathered that the instrument used by the German government was one of several peace societies which, masking under the name of "peace," have actually served the interests of the central empires, and are still motivated by consideration of hostility to the policies of the United States.

A sensational feature of the Bernstorff note was that it was dated January 22, the date of President Wilson's "peace without victory" address to congress.

Prior to that time, however, in the latter part of December, Secretary Lansing, in interpreting President Wilson's peace note, made it clear that the United States might be drawn into the war, and indicated that one of the reasons impelling President Wilson to address the powers at war was to ascertain the objects for which they were fighting, so that this country, if it should be compelled to make a decision, might better be prepared to align itself with one of the two groups.

It is accepted that neither in December nor in January was the state department aware of the full connection of Ambassador von Bernstorff with the works of Captain Boy-Ed and Captain von Papen, the naval and military attaches, respectively, of the German embassy, but it is believed now that the government has complete proof of the direction by Count von Bernstorff himself of all the activities of German agents, official and unofficial, of German nationality and of American nationality.

Whether the state department is in possession of other evidence indicating the ambassador's activities has not been revealed, but the extraordinary disclosures already made have fixed the belief that agents of the United States government have collected and compiled the entire story of German duplicity and intrigue and that additional chapters will be added.

Knew Plan of "Ruthlessness."

The reference to averting war is taken as an indication that Ambassador Bernstorff had prior knowledge of his government's intention to proclaim a merciless widespread submarine warfare and that he was equally confident that the United States government could not be easily placated by mere promises. The German announcement of its intention to expand its submarine activities was not made public until January 31, when the world was startled not only by the determination to remove all restrictions, but by the statement that it would become effective on the following day. Three days later the United States government had expressed its disapproval by severing relations with Germany.

That the German ambassador knew of his government's intention was assumed by some officials, although at the same time he denied prior knowledge and those in close touch with the embassy were given to understand that he did not approve the course and worked to obtain modification.

Small Amount for Bribe.

It has not been assumed that the ambassador actually attempted to bribe or personally influence any member of congress, and doubt that such was his purpose is supported to some extent by the comparatively small amount of money he asked. Fifty thousand dollars, it was pointed out, would go but a short way toward buying the influence of any congressman. Judiciously expended, however, it might do much in compensating paid agents, such as are now known to have belonged to the elaborate machine Bernstorff had so carefully built up for the production of propaganda and for purposes of espionage.

Search Anti-War List.

As soon as news of the Bernstorff message reached the capitol members began a hasty search of the files to find the names of the men who voted against war. While there was no assertion from anyone that anyone of these members was influenced by German propaganda or money, yet it was pointed out that if such influence was exerted, and if it had any effect, the names of those affected would be shown in the lists of those who opposed the war resolution.

"I was forced to the conclusion some time ago," Representative Heflin said, in discussing the revelations, "that Germany thought we were a cowardly people and afraid to fight, but I did not know that we were a corrupt people and would betray our country for German gold.

"The telegram sent by Count von Bernstorff is an admission of the fact that Germany had a corruption fund in the United States for the purpose of carrying on German propaganda.

"If members have acted in suspicious fashion by the introduction of resolutions or bills or by speeches in congress or out of congress, that leads to the conviction that they are not loyal to this government at this time, they ought to be investigated, and, if found guilty, they ought to be expelled from the floor of this house and from the floor of the senate of the United States."

HOLLAND'S WINDMILLS.

It was at one time stated that there were in Holland at least 9,900 large windmills, of which the sails ranged from 60 to 100 feet long. At that time their yearly cost was reported to be nearly $10,000,000. The mills are used for many purposes—for sawing timber, beating hemp, grinding, but their principal use has always been to pump water from the lowlands into the canals, to protect the little country from being inundated.

TOWEL AND MEDICINE CLOSET.

A good idea for a towel and medicine closet or cabinet in two bathrooms which have a common wall is to divide the one closet space into thirds laterally. The upper third forms the two shallow medicine closets, back to back, with a mirrored door in each bathroom. The other two-thirds extend through the depth of the closet and are used for towels. Each of these divisions opens into one of the bathrooms.

INDIANA PATRIOTIC LEAGUE IS FORMED

Organization Effected by Prominent Business and Professional Men of State.

HENRY L. WILSON IS HEAD

Council of Defense Sends Out Call to County Councils to Plan Speaking Campaigns to Arouse Patriotic Interest in War.

Indianapolis.—A movement in Indiana to organize the leading business men and citizens under the name of the Indiana Patriot League to give active support to the government in the prosecution of the war was begun when 32 representative business and professional men of Indianapolis, as charter members, organized and elected Henry Lane Wilson, former United States ambassador to Mexico, president.

The league will have its headquarters in the Lemcke building and a permanent secretary will have charge of the work. An effort will be made to have branches organized in every Indiana city.

Expect Large Membership.

The movement as planned by the league is in line with suggestions made by the state council of defense. It is the determination of the league to support in every detail the plans of the president in the war and it is believed a large membership will be obtained throughout the state.

The executive committee of the league will be composed of the officers and Frank E. Gavin, Edgar A. Perkins, A. M. Glossbrenner, Robert Lieber and Henry W. Bennett, Samuel M. Ralston, former governor, and Judge Charles E. Cox were elected vice presidents and Thomas A. Wynne was made treasurer. As soon as arraigements are perfected for completing the local organization the work will be extended to other cities in the state.

Purposes Set Forth.

The constitution of the league sets forth its purposes as follows:

"This organization is formed for purely patriotic purposes; to encourage and stimulate an intelligent support of the government now engaged in war; for the protection of American rights and institutions, to provide methods for striking at open or masked disloyalty; to aid the state and national governments in their policy of achieving a full measure of national efficiency."

The charter members are: Judge Charles E. Cox, Col. John T. Barnett, A. M. Glossbrenner, Henry C. Atkins, William P. Kappes, Robert Lieber, Sol Kiser, Frank D. Stalnaker, Henry W. Bennett, James W. Noel, Thomas A. Wynne, W. C. Bobbs, Winfield T. Miller, William A. Pickens, William P. Herod, Eben Wolcott, Charles N. Williams, A. C. Ayres, Rev. Owen D. Odell, John E. Hollett, Dr. G. V. Woollen, Henry Lane Wilson, Frank E. Gavin, Charles E. Remster, Albert Rabb, Ernest Bross, Dr. Thomas B. Noble, Meredith Nicholson, John H. Holliday, Charles Martindale, Philip Zoercher and Stoughton A. Fletcher.

Medics Approve Bill.

At a meeting of the state committee of the medical section of the national council of defense at the University club, a resolution was passed indorsing the Owen amendment for the elevation of rank of officers of the medical reserve corps.

The following is abstracted from a letter received by the committee from the national council of defense:

"Your attention is respectfully directed to an important bill now pending in congress. This bill has been approved by the committee on legislation of the general medical board of the council of national defense and your earnest and active co-operation is asked that this bill be enacted into law. The bill, is 'amendment proposed by Mr. Owen to senate bill 1786, Sixty-fifth congress, first session. This amendment provides for military rank among medical officers of the army commensurate with such rank as is already provided for medical officers of the navy and appropriate to the dignity and importance of the medical corps.'"

Plan Speaking Campaigns.

The Indiana state council of defense, Will H. Hays, chairman, sent out letters to the county councils of defense urging them to take immediate steps in furthering a vigorous speaking campaign with a view of teaching the people of their communities the reasons the United States is at war. The letter also asks the county councils to send the names of speakers who are willing to do this work to Prof. J. J. Pettijohn of Indiana university, who has charge of the speakers' bureau.

Thinks Victory Is Certain.

"Regardless of the combined forces of the liquor elements and the corporate interests, our cause is assured of victory," said Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter, president of the Legislative Council of Indiana Women, which played a prominent part in putting the suffrage bill through the last legislature. "The Legislative Council will immediately join with other organizations in making an appeal to the state supreme court. In the meantime we shall urge all women of Indiana to register

Apple Show in November.

The Indiana Horticultural society has announced that the Indiana apple show would be held in the new coliseum at Evansville, November 21 to 27.

This is the second time that the apple show has not been held in Indianapolis. At the request of the Tri-County Fruit Growers' association of Washington, Lawrence and Orange counties, the show was held in West Baden last year, and the plan of holding the show in the part of the state most vitally interested was followed again this year.

The announcement says: "The Indiana apple crop this year is almost twice as large as in 1916. The condition is excellent wherever modern methods of spraying and management have been practiced. In neglected orchards the crop is hardly fit for human food, being scabby, blotched, wormy and deformed by disease and by insects. This is invariably the case, so year after year more progressive farmers spray, and attend to their apple orchards. If every Hoosier apple grower lived up to his opportunities, the Indiana apple crop would rank second only to the apple crop of the state of New York. Now Indiana is the seventh state in apple production. Every Indiana apple show adds much to the national reputation of the Hoosier apple."

Trustees Sold School Positions.

Evidence of alleged conditions in the township schools of Indiana, under which a system has grown up whereby some trustees compel teachers to pay them money in order to obtain employment, came to light when the state board of accounts certified a number of reports to Governor Goodrich's office for transmission to the attorney general.

In one Arthur Miller, trustee of Heth township, Harrison county, from January 1, 1909, to December 31, 1914, is charged with having compelled Stella Beanblossom, a teacher to pay him $100 for a school to teach; Carrie Hays, $85, and Beulah Movars Winders, $25. Affidavits from each of these teachers and others, in support of the charges of the examiners, are contained in the report.

Also Another, Is Alleged.

Affidavits from Harriett Frank Ferree also set out that Lee F. Sherman, a trustee who followed Miller into office, required her to pay $25 "for the personal use of said Arthur Miller, as pay for his (Arthur Miller's) employment of affiant to teach said school." This sum, the affidavit shows, was returned to the affiant "through the efforts of her brother, John K. Frank."

In Washington Township.

A similar report in the case of Richard Cunningham, trustee of Washington township, Harrison county, also was filed. This report alleged that Cunningham compelled Lora Shireman Fravel to pay him $25 in return for his employment of her as a teacher. An affidavit from the teacher recites the facts in the case.

Thomas J. McDowell, clerk of the civil city of Bluffton in 1914, is charged in another report with having paid the superintendent of the water works $100 excess salary. Dr. C. H. Mead, secretary of the board of health of Bluffton, 1915, is accused of having received $100.26 excess salary. C. W. Clark, the superintendent of the water works at Bluffton in 1915, is charged with the $100 excess salary.

Fraternal Bodies Loyal.

Representatives of more than twenty of the leading fraternal societies of Indiana met in the statehouse with Will H. Hays, chairman of the state council of defense, and pledged themselves and their memberships, totaling hundreds of thousands of persons, to the service of the state and nation for the period of the war.

A resolution introduced by Madison Walsh of Washington, representing the Knights of Columbus, expressing sympathy over the illness of Gov. James P. Goodrich, was adopted.

Chairman Hays, in opening the meeting, reviewed the history and purpose of the state council of defense, and declared "Indiana is doing what the council of national defense, the war department and the president of the United States want done."

Committee Named.

Mr. Hays during the meeting took occasion to praise the patriotic efforts of the Jewish people throughout the state in all lines of endeavor. On motion of Harry Wade, representing the Knights of Pythias, Mr. Hays named a committee to outline a plan of organization for what will become the fraternal orders section of the state council of defense.

The committee consists of Harry Wade, representing the Knights of Pythias, chairman; Madison J. Walsh, Washington, representing the Knights of Columbus; B. L. Branigan, Franklin, Indiana Grand Lodge of Masons; A. A. Spears of Brazil, representing the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Arch Hobbs, Indianapolis, representing the Red Men. Miss Tarquina Voss, Indianapolis, representing the Daughters of the Revolution, will advise with the committee.

Tax Rate of Hoosier Cities.

The average tax rate in Hoosier cities for 1917 is 2.817, according to the statistics completed in the office of Henry A. Roberts, statistician for the state. The same work places the average tax rate for counties at .5759. The list of cities includes the 92 county seats and six others which are designated as cities. The total average rate for the cities, including county and state rates, is 3.79, as compared with that of 3.86 for last year and 3.81 for the twelve months of the preceding year.

SHEEP'S CLOTHING

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

WHEN THE CUSTOMS INSPECTORS DISCOVER THAT MRS. MERRILEES HAS BROUGHT IN A LOT OF IMITATION JEWELS THEY SUSPECT HER OF TRYING TO PLAY A SMUGGLING TRICK

Synopsis—Lydia Craven, traveling as Lucy Carteret, runs away from her English home to go to her father, Thaddeus Craven, in New York, whom she hasn't seen for five years. Three days out on board the steamer Alsatia, she runs plump into Craven, making love to Mrs. Merrilees, a young widow, engaged to marry him. Later Craven explains his mysterious conduct and supposed bachelorhood by telling Lydia he is a British secret service agent in America. She is attacked at night and a small box containing supposed valuable documents, which he has given her to keep for him, is stolen. This is recovered for her by Quoin, an amateur detective. When the party lands at New York, Lydia, carrying the small box, has no trouble passing the customs inspection. When Mrs. Merrilees declares a $60,000 necklace, the inspector tells her it is worth about $300—just an imitation. This information astounds them and Mrs. Merrilees raises a row.

CHAPTER X.

—11—

The silence was short-lived; but while it lasted a power of scorn played like lightning round the devoted head of the appraiser.

As for Lydia and Peter (who had just joined the group), they gaped in open amazement; while the inspector looked sorry for Charlie.

After lightning, thunder, remote, maestoso, "Are—you—mad?"

"Me? No, ma'am, not a bit. It's nothing to me, you know."

"Don't quibble, if you please. I want to know whether or not you're daft. You know perfectly well that necklace is worth ninety—sixty thousand dollars. Look at the bill. Inspector, be good enough to show this person Cottier's bill."

The appraiser examined the receipt with ostensible astonishment. "I don't understand this, ma'am," he faltered.

"Nor I!"

"Cottier's don't deal in imitations, I know," he pursued with greater confidence. "All the same, I'll stake my job that those are fish-skin pearls, paste brilliants, and—well, the settings, I admit, are genuine."

"Then your job is as good as lost. I shall file a complaint and have you discharged for incompetence."

"If you'll pardon me, I don't believe you will, Mrs. Merrilees."

"Easy, Betty!" Peter Traft interposed. "Perhaps he's right, after all."

"Be quiet, Peter. When I want your advice, I'll let you know. Certainly I ought to know when I paid for that collar—"

"Then you have been shamefully cheated, Mrs. Merrilees," the inspector put in.

"Quite impossible. I know real gems from articles de Paris, and I examined this necklace with the greatest care before I purchased it. Since then it has never left this box, which hasn't been out of my care an instant except when in the purser's safe."

"I'm sorry, but I know what I know. If you're the judge you think yourself, ma'am, I can only suggest that you take this to the light and—here, I'll lend you my magnifying glass."

"Thank you, I sha'n't require it."

With a gesture of rage, Mrs. Merrilees snatched the case from the appraiser's hands and moved toward the patch of sunlight. Before she had reached it, studying the collar attentively on the way, Lydia saw her slacken pace and falter.

One short minute in that strong glare sufficed. As pale in mystification as she had previously been with wrath, Mrs. Merrilees returned.

"I owe you an apology," she informed the appraiser in a shaking voice. "It's a palpable imitation."

The box slipped from her grasp and went to the floor with a bump, spilling its trashy contents, and Mrs. Merrilees flopped incontinently to a convenient trunk—Lydia's ready arm round her shoulders.

"But, my dear!" Betty wailed. "It's perfectly preposterous!"

The appraiser looked at once bored and dubious. Peter Traft batted bewildered eyes, then with a helpful air picked up the box and replaced its contents. The inspector swung sharply round and made off, with every evidence of inspired haste, toward a distant quarter of the pier.

"Let me think!" Mrs. Merrilees said in a stifled voice. Indenting her lower lip with a knuckle, she fastened an abstracted stare on the polished tips of her shoes.

Lydia, at a loss, found nothing to say. She couldn't decently express too great concern over the disappearance of something that had been dedicated to her on her wedding day—however remote that event. Yet she was gravely if unintelligibly distressed. Beneath her ready sympathy stirred a qualm of peculiar uneasiness.

Distracted by the rumble of men's voices, she looked up, to find that Quoin had added himself to the group and was studiously attending to Peter's account of the counterfeit collar. Their eyes met presently, and Lydia was surprised by the look he bent upon her, a regard somehow faintly reminiscent of their parting subsequent to her adventure of the night before last.

She favored him with her shadowy, enigmatic smile, now vaguely tinted with solicitude.

Nodding briefly, with a thoughtful air, Quoin returned his consideration to Peter and the article de Paris.

"I simply cannot understand it!" Betty declared, abandoning the puzzle as hopeless. Then, catching sight of the detective, she hailed him. "Quoin, do come here at once!" and immediately, heedless of bystanders, began to detail her perplexity in a high, querulous voice.

After a moment or two Lydia rose and joined Peter Traft. "Poor dear!" she said gently, with a slight nod to correct any possible misconception as to the object of her sympathy. "I'm so sorry for her!"

"Well," said Peter, impressively judgmatical, "of course Betty can afford to lose these trinkets by the gross; but, granted she isn't faking, it's a pretty puzzle, isn't it?"

"Faking!" Lydia echoed resentfully.

"Now don't get huffy—please! Betty's a darling, and everything like that; but she's got no conscientious scruples about smuggling—none that you'd notice—and I don't mind telling you she isn't above turning a trick like this—acting up to it too. She's one wonderful young comedienne, if you don't know it."

"'Turn a trick like this!' What does that mean" Lydia demanded stiffly.

"Have her dog collar duplicated in paste and fish scales, substitute it for the original article, and pretend she's been jockied like one o'clock. Mind you, I don't say she has done that; but the little devil's got it in her."

"I don't believe you!"

"There!" Peter complained. "Now you're sore. Didn't I tell you the other day the foolishest thing a chap could do was to take things seriously, especially out loud?"

"You're—horrid!"

The adjective was childish; but Lydia wasn't in a mood to search for one more dignified. She turned a frosty shoulder to the young man; but the seed of suspicion had been planted in the mind of one who couldn't forget how lightly Betty had confessed to prior exploits in the gentlewomanly art of smuggling, and her laughing confession that nothing but sheer fright would prevent her attempting again to outwit the custom house.

And even while this memory was troubling her the affair took a turn to fix doubt of Betty firmly in Lydia's mind.

It began with the return of the inspector, accompanied by the custom house official in charge of the pier—a middle-aged man, this one, with a rather consequential manner, gold-rimmed eyeglasses, and a not unkindly expression.

"Mrs. Merrilees, I believe?" he asked with much urbanity.

Mrs. Merrilees interrupted herself abruptly to turn and examine the deputy with the eye of disfavor. "Yes?" she asked brusquely.

The deputy introduced himself. "The inspector has just informed me of this—er—unfortunate matter," he pursued. "And I thought I might possibly be able to help straighten it out."

"Kind of you, I'm sure." But the tone of Mrs. Merrilees completely belied this statement. "Have you anything to propose?"

"If I might have the privilege of a word in private—" the deputy suggested blandly.

Quoin made as if to withdraw.

"Wait, please. This is Mr. Quoin. You may have heard of him."

"Who hasn't?" the deputy returned pleasantly. "Proud to meet you, sir."

"Mr. Quoin has kindly volunteered to help me in this—outrage. Anything you wish to say he may hear."

"As you please, madam, but—" The glance of the deputy veered significantly to Peter and Lydia.

"No!" Mrs. Merrilees insisted warmly. "You can have nothing to say that any of my friends may not hear."

"Then, madam—permit me to advise you, in all deference—"

"Well?"

"It will save you a great deal of trouble to produce the original collar, pay the duty on it, and—"

"Quoin!" Betty exclaimed in a tone of irritated perplexity. "What can this person mean?"

Quoin was silent.

"I don't mean," the deputy pursued, unabashed, "to be offensive; but—the inference is unavoidable. You are known to have purchased a valuable pearl collar in Paris—"

"I believe I declared it!"

"But upon examination you produce only a comparatively worthless imitation, and assert that you have been robbed of the original."

"I assert! I have asserted nothing." Mrs. Merrilees drew a long breath, closed her teeth with a vindictive snap, and reopened them to observe with withering distinctness, "Go away! You are insolent! You presume—oh, you annoy me! Do go—before I forget myself!"

"We can't assess an imitation at the value of the real necklace, of course, and yet we know that the original is coming into this country by this boat."

"Then permit me to recommend the other passengers to your attention."

"We'll do our best to overhaul them all, I promise you. But if the goods don't turn up, we'll feel reluctantly compelled to make a thorough search, not only of your luggage but of yourself as well, Mrs. Merrilees."

"Quoin!" Mrs. Merrilees appealed.

The investigator shook his head. "It's too bad; but I really don't see what's to be done about it. These people have the power to make things mighty unpleasant for you unless—"

"What, you too?" she hissed, with vast dramatic expression.

"No, no!" Quoin protested hastily. "Don't misunderstand me. I'm only afraid that, unless the necklace shows up, you'll have to submit."

"Very well!" With a shrug of defiance, Mrs. Merrilees showed Quoin an ungracious back. To the deputy she added with blighting disdain, "Go ahead. And while you're finding nothing in my trunks you may as well send for a female inspector to search me. But every one of you will suffer for this—or I'll know the reason why!"

"I'm sorry, madam."

But there wasn't much uneasiness betrayed in the deputy collector's manner as he signed to the inspector to do his hateful duty.

The three friends of Mrs. Merrilees, on the other hand, were acutely uncomfortable—Quoin in disgrace, Peter Traft firmly convinced that the deputy was right and consequently afraid to meet Betty's eyes, and Lydia not only sore distressed with misgivings, but repelled by Betty's attitude.

And this was the phase of the affair disclosed to Craven when he bustled up, aglow with satisfaction.

"Hello, people! I'm all clear. Had the deuce of a time—the silly ass wanted to rook me for duds I brought in as long ago as 1908; but— What's the row?"

This last was in a tone radically changed, and at the same instant his fiancee decided to acknowledge him on probation, however rigidly she might elect to deny the rest of humanity. So she unbent enough to beckon him with a nod; and Craven hurried on to get his answer from the one most concerned.

What is your solution of the mystery? Do you think that Mrs. Merrilees is trying to put over a trick? Some mighty queer happenings are described in the next installment.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Within Hospitality's Limits.

"Willie, you are going out to dinner. You may ask for a second piece of cake if you really want it, but there's one thing I wish you to remember."

"Yep, ma."

"Whatever you do, don't ask for a second helping of potatoes."

TELLS OF RUSSIAN SOCIALISM

Henry N. Hall has made a close study of conditions existing in Russia since the revolution. In a recent interview he said:

"To understand the Russian revolution and the situation which has developed over there in the army—'the Russian collapse,' as some newspapers call it—you must study the underlying causes, or rather, I should say, their underlying cause. For the otherthrow of the czar on the one hand and on the other the refusal of many of Russia's bravest and best soldiers to fight any more are both due to one and the same thing: Class-struggle socialism. Let me see if I can make it clear."

"Abraham Cahan, the editor of the Jewish Daily Forward—the man who teaches socialism to the great East side—was telling me of the upheaval in Russia, the land of his birth, and explaining to me the whys and wherefores of the apparently contradictory events which have happened in quick succession on the eastern front. I listened intently as he went on:

"As a technical term of scientific socialism the words 'class struggle' mean more than the mere struggle between capital and labor. You might as well talk the Talmud to a Sunday school child as to try to get people here to understand the Russian situation if they have no knowledge of what 'class struggle' means in socialism. The doctrine of 'class struggle' which all of us socialists preach has undergone some important modifications, and this is where the trouble comes in. It is the weak spot of our movement. Anyway, it has been too weak to stand the strain of the present world war.

GUARDS HEALTH OF SOLDIERS

Surgeon General Blue is convinced that such edible nicknacks as "hot dogs, peanuts, lemonade and ice cream cones" should be accurately set down on the public menus as "trash" and he will, therefore, strictly segregate any of the ubiquitous "pop and peanut" men who might hover about the various cantonments many miles from their objectives.

Soldiers, as a rule, have pronounced "sweet tooths" and, as a consequence, delight in spending their loose change about stands which fly popular colored advertising pennants and are armored with tin soft drink emblems.

These same soldiers, also Surgeon General Blue maintains, generally have more or less stomach trouble from their careless diet and are many times temporarily incapacitated from their routine of duties. And it is with the object in view of keeping "the boys" in perfect physical trim that the surgeon general has found it necessary to issue this health order.

It is presumed that the "pop and peanut" edict will eventually reach those camps adjacent to the District. At the present time, however, its jurisdiction ends on the borders of those cantonments situated in and near Anniston, Ga.

EXPERT IN AVIATION WORK

International Film Service

Maj. Benjamin D. Foulois, junior military aviator, can justly be called the original "bird-man" of the army. When attending the signal school in 1907 and 1908 flying, which had never been seen in the United States, was his hobby and his graduating address was on that subject, and men here who heard that address state that each of his predictions have come about with but little variation from his prognostications.

He has been on aviation duty from its beginning in the United States army. In July, 1909, he operated the government dirigible at Fort Myer, St. Joseph, Mo., and Omaha. January, 1910, to July, 1911, he operated the first army airplanes at San Antonio and engaged in reconnaissance duty on the Mexican border in 1911, after which he was relieved from aviation service until 1915, when he was ordered to the Mexican border.

When the United States entered the war against Germany, Major Foulois was brought to Washington and placed in charge of the organization, training and supplying of the new aerial forces of the United States army.

THIS BUNGALOW NEEDS BIG LOT

Type Described Here Pleasing to Admirers of Odd Architecture.

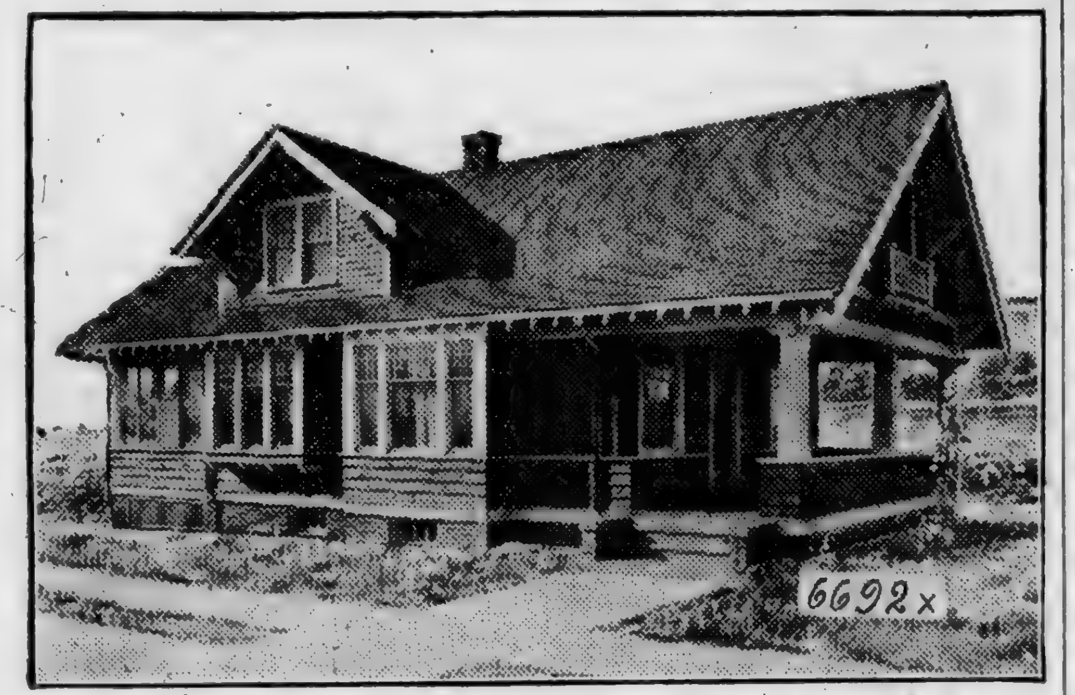
DETAILS OF THE STRUCTURE

Entrance Into Living Room Is Through Vestibule—Roomy Sleeping Porch on Second Floor—Many Neat Conveniences Too.

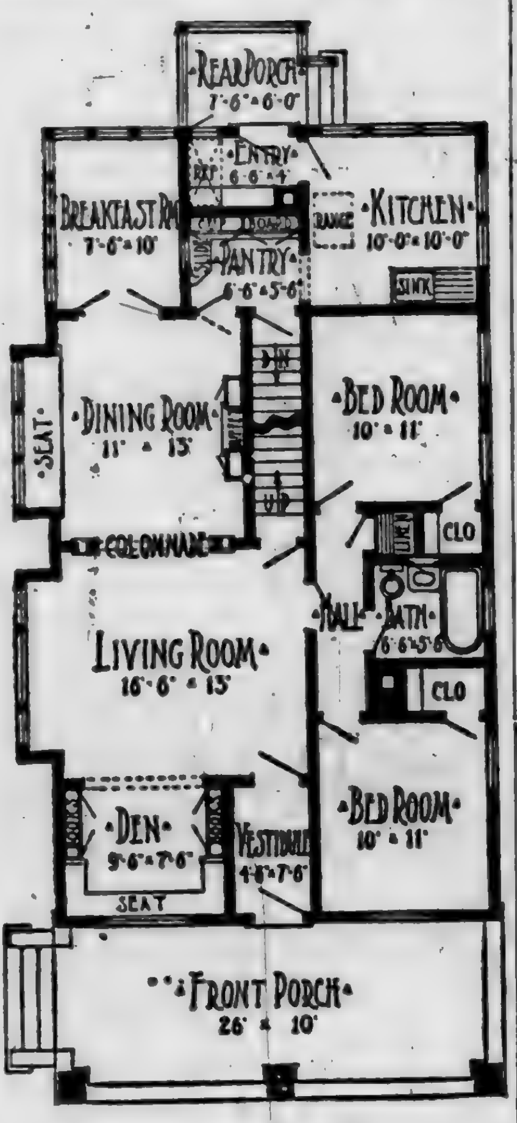
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

Where a sufficient frontage is available, a bungalow of the type shown in the accompanying perspective view is an excellent residence design for the person who appreciates bungalow architecture. The building is one which is designed to have its longest dimension on the street. It would be most economically placed on a corner lot having a width approximately one-half of its length. In this position the building has a very pleasing appearance on either of the streets. It is rectangular in plan, being broken from the regular shape only by the two small bays in the front wall. The gable roof is built with a fairly sharp slope, with the cornice directly above the first floor window heads. There is second floor space available, however, the rooms being formed along the center of the building where a 14-foot width is available for this purpose. In addition, there is a dormer on one side of the roof for a bedroom and on the other side of the roof for a toilet, closet and part of another bedroom.



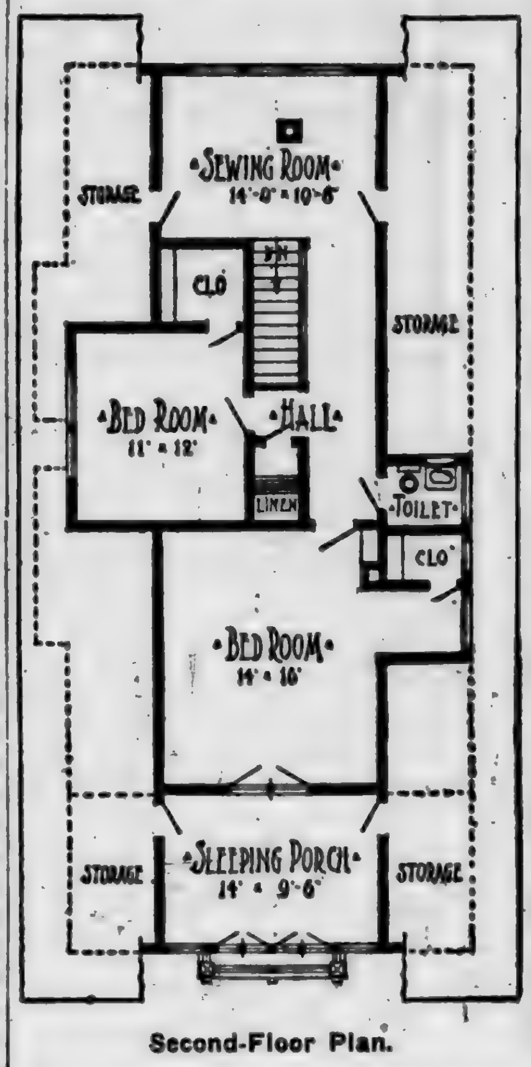
The foundation walls of the house are of concrete up to grade and of face brick to the sills. A belt of wide rough clapboards girts the structure between the brick and the window sills. Above this line, the walls are finished with standard narrow bevel siding up to the plate. The gables and the dormer walls are finished with stained shingles. The rough clapboards may be painted in some harmonizing color which is not too dark and the trim is best finished in pure white, since contrast is needed with the prevailing dark tones of the walls.



First-Floor Plan.

Ornamentation of the roof consists in the use of a simple open rafter cornice and attractive brackets. A special ornamentation feature is the small balcony at one end of the second floor, above the front porch. This balcony is supported by three cantilever beams which are securely anchored to the second floor joists. The rail used is of an especially pleasing design. The second floor overhangs the porch at this end of the building, three solid square columns being used to carry the weight down to the foundation. The porch ceiling is very carefully insulated and sealed tightly so that the sleeping porch above will be protected.

Even more interesting than the exterior design is the interior arrangement. The entrance into the house is by way of a vestibule which opens into the living room. Three rooms are here grouped together in a most pleasing manner. Centrally located in the group is the large living room with its three-window bay. Toward the front of the house through a large cased opening is the coziest little den which anyone might ask for. Bookcases are placed on either side of the room just within the opening and from these, entirely around the inclosed space, there is a built-in seat. There is a large window in the center of the forward wall of the nook. A colonnade separates the living room from the dining room, which completes the group. The dining room also has a three-window bay in the outer wall and a buffet is placed against the center of the wall opposite. A broad seat is built into the bay, adding the final touch to the scheme.



Second-Floor Plan.

French doors lead back from the dining room into the breakfast room. The outer walls of this room are practically all glazed, which establishes this as one of the most pleasant features of the house. In the corner of the house adjacent to the breakfast room is grouped the rear entry, the kitchen and, near the center, the pantry. The arrangement is ideal. The refrigerator is placed in the entry and a door is built in the wall for icing it from the rear porch. Across the wall opposite the entrance there is a shelf from the chimney to the side wall. This shelf is high enough so that the refrigerator sets under it. The most interesting detail of this arrangement is the location of the serving pantry. This pantry connects the kitchen with the dining room. There is a cased opening from it into the kitchen and a swinging door into the dining room. A cupboard occupies the wall toward the rear of the building. A slide is provided which extends out under the window in the hall between the pantry and the breakfast porch.

The first floor bedrooms are arranged according to the best modern practice, which places them side by side with a connecting hall. Each bedroom closet is fitted with a shelf and a rail all around for clothes hooks. Most contractors and builders will suggest that an iron pipe or wood rod be placed horizontally across the closet just under the shelf, so that clothes placed on hangers may be hung there, greatly increasing the capacity of the closet and keeping the clothes in much better condition than if they were hung against the wall.

The second floor is reached from the living room, the stair door being directly in front of the vestibule. The stairs lead to the sewing room on the second floor which connects with an open hall leading to the bedrooms and toilet. There is a linen closet in this hall handy to the two bedrooms. These bedrooms are provided with closets and in the larger one there is also a shelf just behind the door as it swings open. The statement has been made that there is practically no outside exposure on the walls of the second floor rooms. This is clearly indicated on the plan, which shows that there is plenty of storage space provided under the roof along both sides of the building. These spaces are reached from the sewing room and from the sleeping porch.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

ABUSED PENCIL.

"A boy named Gerald," said Daddy, "was finding it very hard to do his lessons. School had commenced and yet the days were so lovely it was hard to study.

"There had been such a long and glorious summer too when studying had not been thought of, and now playing was so much easier to think about.

"It was afternoon and Gerald was sitting on the back porch of his home studying. He liked the front porch better as there was so much more to be seen there. People passed by on their way to the post office and boys who were playing baseball or who were going for a walk in the woods.

"But he had known if he had sat there he would not have been able to say 'No,' if he had been asked to join a walking party.

"So very sensibly he was sitting on the back porch. In front of him was a table and upon the table were his books and his box of pencils.

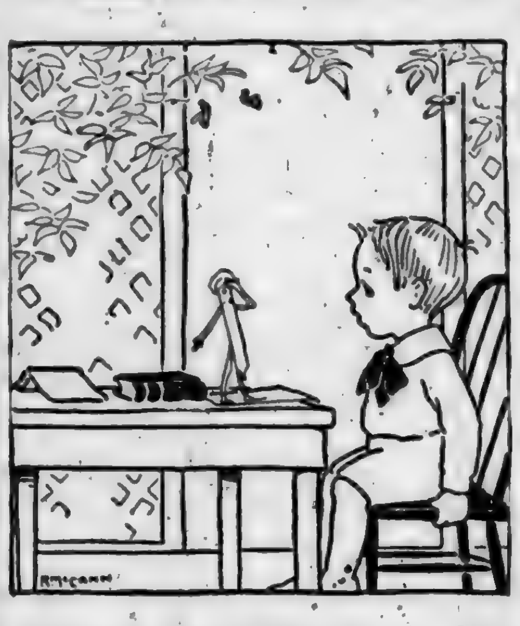
"He could not draw a map and he was supposed to have one drawn for the next day. He found it so hard to remember just how the places looked on the map and he was supposed to do it from memory.

"He gave up trying the map after a few moments. Then he sat and chewed the end of his pencil. Perhaps in a moment or two he would think of all the places he was suppose to mark.

"He decided he would do his arithmetic but he could not manage the sums. They were all so extremely hard. Much worse than they had been in the spring, though in reality they were a little easier. The teacher had known the children had had a long summer and it would take them a little time to get back into their work.

"He tried to do the sums but couldn't. What a pity the book had no answers in the back! And he began to chew the end of his pencil again while he tried to think.

"Before long he felt he could not do his lessons for he was too tired and they were entirely too hard. He was dreadfully afraid he would be put back with the boys a year younger than he was, and yet he couldn't do such difficult lessons.



"Gracious, Pencil, What Is the Matter?"

"How ashamed he would be to be put back! Oh dear, what could he do? He must simply tell the teacher the lessons were too hard. But then he felt sure she would tell him to go back into a class where they were easier.

"He put his head down on his arms. The soft autumn breeze was blowing. It had been a warm day and two bumble bees were buzzing and talking very near him. They were having some sort of a talk about the sweetness of the honey in the honeysuckle vine.

"Just then he saw his pencil. The end of it was wrapped up in cotton wool and gauze.

"'Gracious pencil, what is the matter?' asked Gerald.

"'I shouldn't think you would ask me what was the matter,' said the pencil as it squeaked in a sad little voice.

"'Why not?' asked Gerald. But the moment he had asked the question he knew the answer.

"The pencil answered him just the same. 'You think I am to do your work. I will work but I must be guided and directed. I cannot think. A pencil is not supposed to think. A boy is supposed to do that. I merely write down what you think is correct, and goodness only knows I often feel very badly when I have to write down all sorts of wrong answers.

"'And when I won't think for you,' continued the pencil, 'this is the way you abuse me. Think! Don't bite me to pieces. And I'll tell you another thing. You may bite me in two, but never, never will I do your thinking for you. I am not supposed to and I won't.' The pencil was certainly very decided, Gerald thought, and he thought he would not argue with it.

"'I was a lovely red pencil with black lead,' the pencil continued, in an injured tone, 'and now I am all bitten to pieces. One of my ends is almost useless, and I will break when the lead is used very much further. Oh dear! And I was such a nice pencil!' It sighed and seemed very mournful.

"Just at that moment the cotton wool came off the pencil and Gerald saw that he had been sleeping. The pencil had been badly bitten, but Gerald, now wide awake, put his mind to his studying, and found the lessons were not so hard after all!"

LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 30

THE GOODNESS AND SEVERITY OF GOD.

(Review.)

LESSON TEXT—Daniel 9:3-19.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.—Psalms 103:8.

A profitable way to spend the hour would be to make a study of Daniel's prayer as recorded in the lesson assigned for our reading today, and have the lessons of the quarter as illustrations of the goodness and severity of God. Announcement of the plan may be made the Sunday before, and the different lessons of the quarter assigned to different members of the class to tell how they bear upon the topic of the lesson for this week. A broad analysis of Daniel's prayer is as follows:

I. Confession of the Nation's Sins (vv. 3:15). The circumstances of this prayer were extraordinary. The crisis was so serious that Daniel sought after prayer to the Lord with fasting, sackcloth and ashes. In his confession the people's sins are placed in contrast with God's righteousness. He acknowledges that their sorrows and sufferings justly belong to them. Daniel, the holy man against whom there is no record of wrongdoing, includes himself with his people.

II. Supplication for Mercy and Forgiveness (vv. 16-19). He pleads for God's anger and fury to turn away, and his remembrance of the Holy City and his chosen people. The Lord's honor was at stake. He confesses that Israel had no merit, were utterly destitute of righteousness, and pleads consideration on the ground of covenant relationship.

Another way to conduct the review would be to ask different members of the class to report on the different lessons by giving the vital and central teaching of each. The following are suggested as vital teachings of the several lessons:

Lesson 1. God is absolutely holy, therefore those who have been sanctified by fire from the heavenly altar are qualified for his service.

Lesson 2. He who turns away from the Lord shall be judged by the Lord.

Lesson 3. In Hezekiah's reformatory work the Passover Feast was restored, showing that the only way to get people to return to God is to gather them around the Cross of Christ—the Atonement by Blood.

Lesson 4. Though our unfaithfulness and cowardice have shamefully humiliated us, we should turn to God in prayer.

Lesson 5. God's gracious invitation is extended to all without money and without price.

Lesson 6. No matter how wicked one may have been in his apostasy from God, if he sincerely repents, God will be found of him.

Lesson 7. Regardless of one's age and experience, God can use him in doing mighty work if he will but open his heart unto him.

Lesson 8. The Word of God found and read will mightily convict of sin, and transform one's life and environment.

Lesson 9. God's predictions as to the captivity of Israel were fulfilled to the letter. Nothing shall fail of that which God has said he will do.

Lesson 10. Jehovah is the shepherd of captive Israel, and will surely gather them out from their wanderings and save them.

Lesson 11. One should be unflinchingly loyal to God under all circumstances.

Lessons 12 and 13. God is able to deliver those who trust him, from fire and from wild beasts.

When God Probes.

God loves us too much to let what would hurt us stay with us. So, because of this love, he himself is willing to hurt us in order to save us from the greater hurt. Probing is done in order to get rid of something that would injure. And so, as Prebendary Webster has said: "Do not be afraid of God's probing. He never wounds except to heal. He never humbles except to exalt. Do let God deal with you; do not be afraid of his probing." Most of us have been afraid of it; we may be dreading it just now. We shall not fear if we remember what kind of love is back of it: that all-sacrificing love that died for us on the cross. So we can safely, gladly let ourselves go utterly into his hands and ask those nail-pierced hands to do with us what they will. Then he can begin to show us his love as we may never yet have known the meaning of love.—Sunday School Times.

WOMAN SICK TWO YEARS

Could Do No Work. Now Strong as a Man.

Chicago, Ill.—"For about two years I suffered from a female trouble so I was unable to walk or do any of my own work. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the newspapers and determined to try it. It brought almost immediate relief. My weakness has entirely disappeared and I never had better health. I weigh 165 pounds and am as strong as a man. I think money is well spent which purchases Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Jos. O'Bryan, 1755 Newport Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

BIG QUESTIONS WAR RAISES

Tremendous Variety of Problems Must Be Solved by Those Directing the World Conflict.

Somewhere in the Australian hinterland railway trackage is being pulled up in order to be laid down again in the desert of Sinai or along the Tigris or in Albania or near the White sea or in the secor of Arras, says a thoughtful writer in a New York journal.

Given a shipload of iron ore, it is for someone to decide whether that iron is to be shell, or barbed wire, or steel helmet, or airplane engine, or anti-submarine net, or boat anchor, or traveling crane, or farm tractor for the raising of potatoes to feed the crew of the ship that brings Chinese coolies from Canton to Marseilles to handle other masses of iron ore at the Creusot armament factories.

And when you multiply the task by the number of departments, war, admiralty, agriculture and subsistence, when the problem develops into one of determining whether a man can be best used for throwing hand grenades at Bullecourt or plowing in Sussex or unloading wheat at Liverpool or manufacturing boots for the Russian armies in Roumania, it becomes plain how inadequate is the ordinary pencil stub and newspaper margin for winning the war out of hand.

Why That Lame Back?

Morning lameness, sharp twinges when bending, or an all-day backache; each is cause enough to suspect kidney trouble. Get after the cause. Help the kidneys. We Americans go it too hard. We overdo, overeat and neglect our sleep and exercise and so we are fast becoming a nation of kidney sufferers. 72% more deaths than in 1890 is the 1910 census story. Use Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands recommend them.

An Ohio Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story."

J. H. Truebe, 342 Harvard St., Youngstown, O., says: "Three physicians said I was in such bad shape with kidney complaint I couldn't live six months. For nine months I was confined to the house, most of the time in bed. My limbs were terribly swollen and my back pained acutely. The kidney secretions were scanty and I had awful dizzy spells. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me and the cure has been permanent for years."

PAIN? NOT A BIT!
LIFT YOUR CORNS
OR CALLUSES OFF

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. It never disappoints and never burns, bites or inflames. If your druggist hasn't any freezone yet, tell him to get a little bottle for you from his wholesale house.—adv.

SOME RIFLE FIRING KINKS

There Are a Thousand Things Not Mentioned in "Drill Regulations" That Recruit Must Learn.

The average recruit who starts in at West Point knows as much about the fine points of rifle firing as a longshoreman about flying. First he masters the elementary steps—the manual of arms and the correct firing positions, says the Popular Science Monthly. Then he must learn a thousand facts not mentioned in the "drill regulations." Among the rifle kinks, for instance, is the smoking of the glass rifle sights for work in the sun. By simply holding the sights over the flame of a match—or, better, oxer an alcohol flame—a light layer of lampblack is spread over the sight which enables the soldier to fire even when he is directly facing the sun. And when his back is toward the sun, the reflected glare is eliminated so that he can work without danger to his eyes.

Another kink is the doubling up of the ordinary rifle strap in order to use it to obtain a sling-grip. By making the sling short enough, it is possible for the left hand to odtain a viselike grip on the rifle. This helps considerably in steadying it.

As a less expensive substitute for an electric hair drier an electrician in Europe has invented a device for warming ordinary combs.

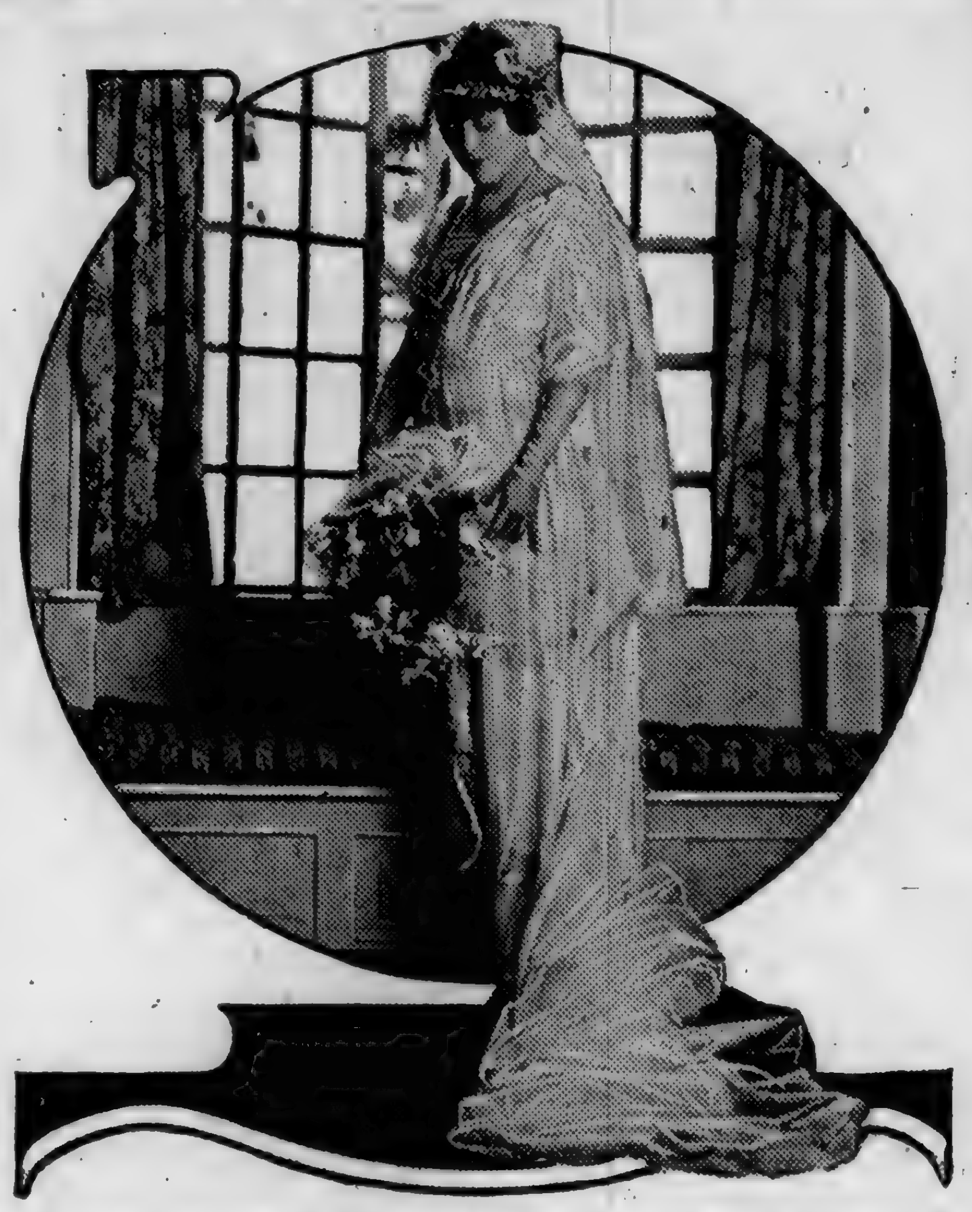
October's Brides



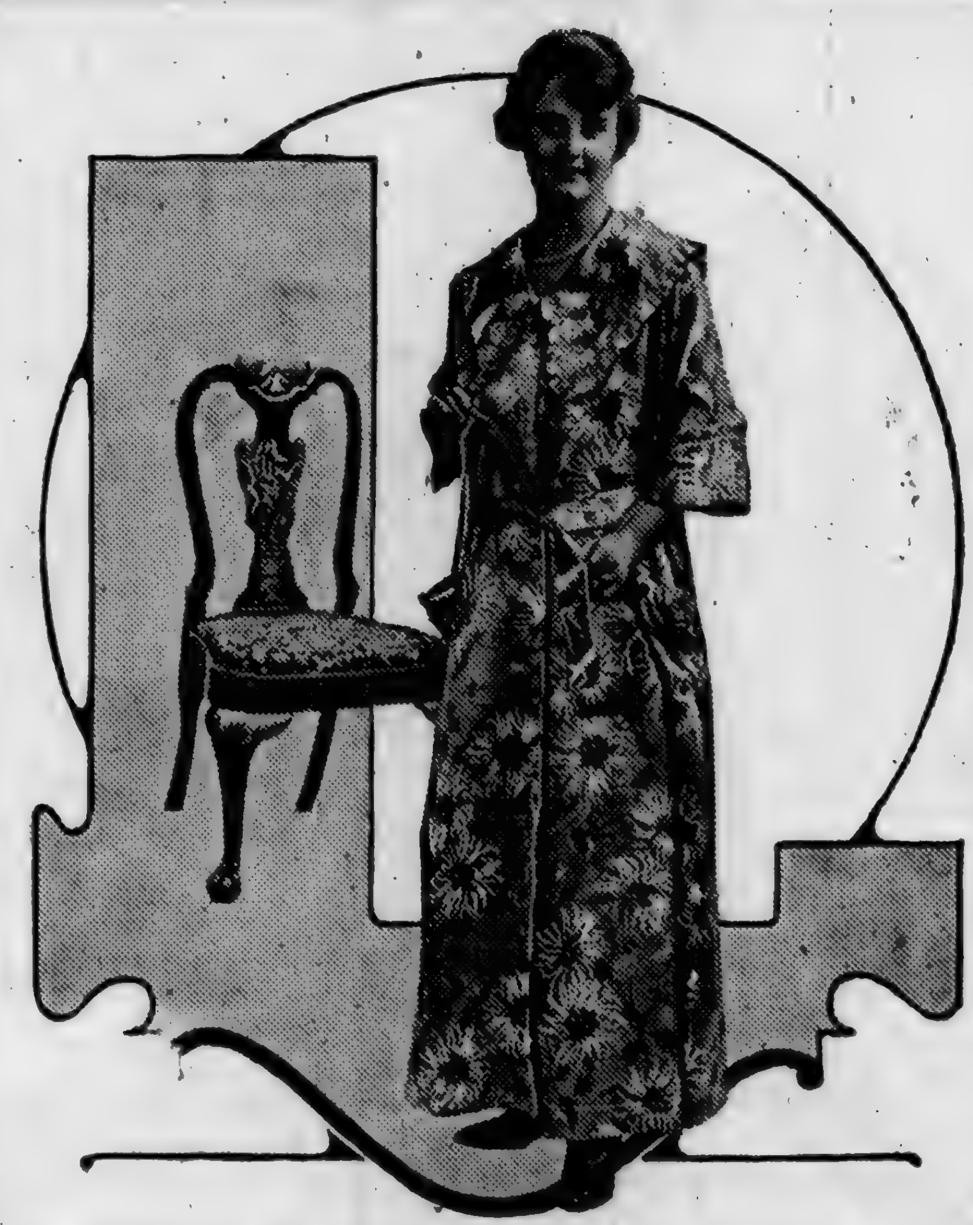
If October's brides take advantage of the great liberty in the choice of styles, for their wedding gowns this year, they will be wonderfully garbed. It appears that they may be quite independent of the current modes and make excursions into the past in order to garb themselves and their attendants in the styles of other days and other lands. All that is required of the wedding procession is that it shall be picturesque and dignified. There is no getting away from that last condition; no frivolous and light-binded suggestion must appear in the bride's apparel.

If she chooses the modes of the hour she is fortunate, also, for she finds them beautifully adapted to the wedding gown. There are the straight-line dresses and those that show a little definition of the waistline; all simple and dignified. And the vogue for full draperies in soft, rich satins plays into the hands of the designer of wedding gowns. Just how well this style can be managed is shown in the gown pictured.

This model has the regulation long sleeve, partly of satin and partly of crepe georgette, but it has not the regulation high neck. A little chemisette of crepe with a V opening at the front, makes pretty amends for the absence of a higher collar. It is hardly discernible in the picture. The train is long and straight and the veil is longer, falling in two lengths from the puffs across the back of the head. The ends of the veil are bordered with fine val lace and the shorter length is something over half the length of the figure. A very narrow girdle and a double strand of pearl beads dispose of the finish at the waistline, and a long strand of pearls is worn about the neck.

Orange flower buds make a band about the forehead, with clusters of buds and blossoms arranged in the veil at the back. Altogether this is a costume that will never look less beautiful in years to come than it does today—and the bride will always be able to point with pride to her picture.

For Her Hours of Ease



The comfortable and reliable kimona, undisturbed by brilliant rivals in lounging robes and negligees, appears in greater force than ever, secure of a place in every wardrobe. Japan is sending a lot of them in pretty colorings and with attractive embroideries, and selling at very moderate prices. Some of these are made of thin silks, interlined, but most of them are of cotton crepes. The printed silks are very interesting.

Among the American cottons flannelette is the most popular choice for kimonas and house jackets made for real comfort. The newest arrivals among them are finished with ruffles of narrow ribbon, and proclaim their allegiance to the cause of pockets by adopting one or two. Most of them also bear the signs of the times in a narrow belt made of the same material as the kimona. But this is one of the garments that has no good reason for changing and therefore the kimonas of today are much like those of many yesterdays.

In the picture a cheery and good-looking example of the Japanese silk kimona has set-in sleeves and a wide collar edged with a frill of satin ribbon. Three points of lace at the front of the collar are set on at each side. The sleeves are three-quarter length with turned-back cuffs edged with ribbon frills, and the pockets are finished in the same way. A narrow sash, made of the silk, tells the rest of the story of this unpretentious garment that contrives to be fascinating because of its simplicity and the real beauty of the silk. It would make a lovely gift for the girl going away to school—or anyone else inclined kimonaward in her hours of ease.

Breakfast Cheer.

A breakfast daintily served is the surest index of a perfect day. One woman, who determined to give her hubby a cheerful sendoff every morning, bought blue willowware for the breakfast china. Then she used blue and white as her color scheme for the dining room. She made napkins of white linen, rolled their hems and blanket-stitched them in blue. They were related at once to the china. Then she bought two blue and white runners and spread these over the breakfast table. A blue bowl, which held a place in the center of the table, always contained white flowers of some sort. This was one woman's way to make a husband happy.

BILLY SUNDAY ON AMERICA.

I would like to do this: I would like to see every booze-fighter get on the water wagon. I would like to summon all the drunkards in America and say: "Boys, let's cut her out and spend the money for flour, meat and calico; what do you say?"

Come on; I'm going to line up the drunkards. We will line up in front of the butcher shop. The butcher says: "What do you want, a piece of neck?"

"No; how much do I owe you?" "Two dollars." "Here's your dough. Now give me a porterhouse steak and a sirloin roast."

"Where did you get all that money?"

"Went to hear Bill, and climbed on the water wagon."

"Hello! What do you want?"

"Beefsteak."

We empty the shop and the butcher runs to the telephone. "Hey, central, give me the slaughter-house. Have you got any beef, any pork, any mutton?"

They strip the slaughter-house and then telephone for trainloads of beefsteaks.

"What's the matter?"

"The whole bunch has got on the water wagon."

And the big packers say to their salesmen: "Buy beef, pork and mutton," and the farmers see the price of cattle and sheep jump up to three times their value.

Let me take the money you dump into the whisky hole and buy beefsteaks with it. I will tell you what is the matter with America: Your children are going naked and the whisky gang has your money.

SHALL WASTE CONTINUE?

"The fermented rather than the distilled liquors call for the greatest consumption of grain in the liquor business," asserts the dean of the college of agriculture, Illinois university, writing in the Atlantic Monthly. "That is to say, about 120,000,000 bushels—or approximately the world shortage—are used for fermented liquors, against some 35,000,000 bushels, practically none of which is wheat, used for distillation.

"To transport the grain now used for fermented liquor in the United States alone would require the entire fleet of a thousand wooden ships, such as are now contemplated for the war trade. This 120,000,000 bushels of grain is the equivalent of over half the wheat crop of France or of Canada, and it is twice that of England. It represents the entire grain food of over 15,000,000 people, and that is no negligible amount. It represents in the form of meat no less than 750,000,000 pounds, or the carcasses of more than a million of the heaviest beeves.

"With people starving abroad, with large sections of Europe desolate, and with food riots beginning in this country as a result of high prices, there can be but one answer to the question whether this wastage shall continue."

JAB FROM THE LANCET.

"The enormous expenditure on drink—even if drink were innocuous—implies a corresponding abstraction of wealth from useful and beneficial uses. But drink is not innocuous. It is the most powerful and fascinating of all means of degradation and disease which unfortunate human nature can find to debase itself. Every medical practitioner sees illustrations of this almost every day of his life. . . . The bishops have set us an example, and we of the medical profession have also our religious duties."—London Lancet.

NINETY PER CENT ACCEPTED.

Wartime conditions have brought to light a new and unanswerable argument in favor of prohibition. It has been a source of no small concern that no larger a per cent of the young men of the country were able to meet the physical requirements of the army and navy. A Y. M. C. A. secretary has made a significant discovery. He has ascertained that while but 25 per cent of the young men from a certain license state were accepted for army and navy service, 90 per cent of those who enlisted from Kansas, the veteran prohibition state, were up to grade.

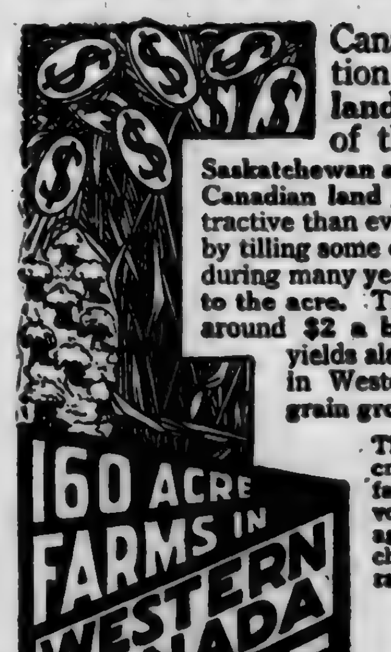
Raise High Priced Wheat on Fertile Canadian Soil



160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Canada extends to you a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help feed the world by tilling some of her fertile soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think of the money you can make with wheat around $2 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming in Western Canada is as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. There is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. No Need of Watchmen.

The watchmen at the B. & O., river bridge, east of town, have been discontinued with Saturday evening being their last. The men were stationed night and day to guard the bridge for the past seven months. At the beginning of the watch two men were on duty at night and two during the day time, but for the past four or five months the men were single handed. Now that the soldiers are all moved from the western camps that the B. & O., are to move, they are cutting down the expense of the guards being stationed along the line, which means the expenditure of considerable money each month.

Herbert Curie and Willis Beaber were the two men on the job up to Saturday and they were ordered to report at Garrett, Monday, of this week. The boys report but very little trouble with pedestrians crossing the bridge at any time and only the "Hobos" seemed to show their authority for walking the tracks.

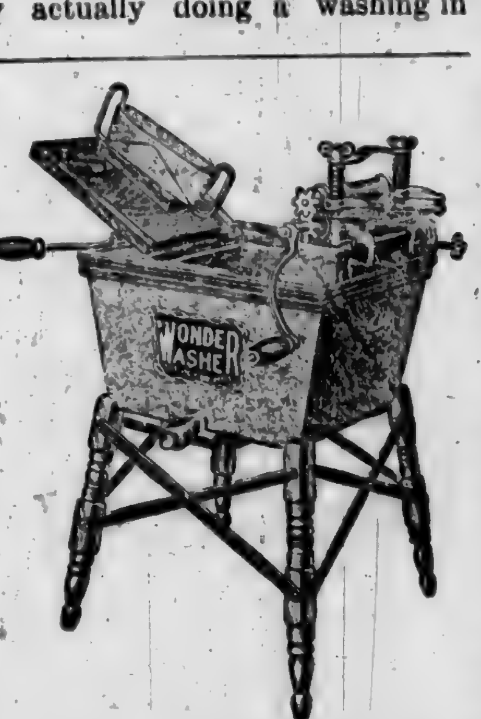
It's Surely a "Wonder."

The demonstration of the Wonder Washer at the Kinsey Hardware Store, last Saturday afternoon, was a "hummer" in every respect, and the success of the event proved that the machine was surely a "Wonder."

Mr. E. A. Kibbe, the field demonstrator, of Hiawatha, Kansas was present and explained to the spectators the merits of the Wonder Washer and then proved them by actually doing a washing in part for his audience. There is no need of any doubt in the minds of those who are without a washer, as to them doing the work, and if the directions are followed, only three minutes are required to run out a single washer of clothes. Some women folks think that it can't be done only by applying the clothes to the old wash-board, but it can, and the editor will vouch for it—because he used the "Wonder."



Remember that Elza sells this machine.

In the DeKalb Circuit Court. October term, 1917. Cause number, 11,046. To quiet title.

Charles F. Boyden and
Frank F. Martin,
Plaintiffs.
—vs.—
Bliss Lowman et al,
Defendants.

Now come the plaintiffs by Charles O. Borst, their attorney, and file their complaint herein, together with the affidavit of a competent person that the following named and designated defendants are non-residents of the state of Indiana, to-wit: Bliss Lowman and the unknown wife of Bliss Lowman; that said action is for the purpose of quieting title to real estate in the state of Indiana; that a cause of action exists against all of said defendants; that all of said defendants are necessary parties to said action and that they are believed to be non-residents of the state of Indiana.

The following real estate in DeKalb county, state of Indiana, is described in said complaint, to-wit: The southwest fractional quarter of section eighteen (18) and the west half of the southeast quarter of said section eighteen (18), excepting from said two tracts the north one hundred and sixty (160) acres thereof by parallel lines; also the south fifty-eight (58) acres of the east half of the northeast quarter of section nineteen (19); also the west half of the northeast quarter of section nineteen (19); also the east half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of said section nineteen (19); all in township thirty-four (34) north, range thirteen (13) east.

This action is instituted and prosecuted by said plaintiffs for the purpose of quieting their title to the real estate above described as against all demands, claims and claimants whatsoever. Notice is therefore hereby given said defendants that unless they be and appear on the 31st day of October term, 1917, of the DeKalb circuit court of Indiana, being the 5th day of November, 1917, to be begun and holden on the 1st day of October, 1917, at the court house in the city of Auburn, in said county and state, and answer or demur to said complaint, the same will be heard and determined in their absence.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said court at the office of [L. S.] the clerk thereof in the city of Auburn, Indiana, this 6th day of September, 1917.

W. W. MOUNTY, Clerk of DeKalb Circuit Court.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR

The most desirable features of motor car construction are found in Ford cars. They are strong with the strength of vanadium steel, heat-treated by Ford methods. Excess weight is eliminated by strength, and allows the Ford more power for its weight than any other car. Back of the car is the organization which has built and sold over two million Ford cars. The Ford car saves time—is a sure money maker. Touring Car $360, Runabout $345, Sedan $645, Town Car $595, Coupelet $565—all f. o. b. Detroit. On display and for sale by

Locates at Butler

I have purchased the practice of Doctor Samuel at Butler, Ind., and intend to move there within a week or so. I want to thank the people of this community for the patronage they have given me and assure you that I have appreciated same. I have regretted to make the change, but in doing so get closer to my parents and am not very far from St. Joe. I trust if you need the services of a physician in the future that I may be able to serve you, as I hope that my past work has been satisfactory. I know I am leaving a very fine community, but conditions have come up that I feel I must make the change. At Butler I will be fully equipped with X-ray and electric treatment devices, if anyone needs that kind of service.

There are a few open accounts on my books yet, and I would appreciate it very much if those owing me would please call and settle or make arrangements to do so this week.

Again thanking you one and all, I am

Sincerely Yours,
Dr. H R. Farnham.

Nancy Melissa Lawhead-Reasoner was born at St. Joe, Indiana, August 24, 1851 and departed this life September 20, 1917, at Zion City, Illinois, at the age of 66 years and 27 days.

In 1870 she was united in marriage to Hiram Reasoner and to this union was born six children, three of whom have preceded her to the haven of rest. She was a kind, loving wife and mother and a faithful christian in the home and before her associates, and always ready to help in time of need. She leaves the husband, two daughters, one son, six grandchildren, one sister, two brothers and other relatives and friends who will greatly miss her cheerful companionship.

The remains were placed in Mt. Olivet cemetery, Zion City, Illinois.

DEFENSE BOARD RAPS ARGUERS

Resolutions Adopted Severely Censuring Men Who Criticize Government.

A CALL TO PATRIOTIC ACTS

State Council of Defense Takes to Task the Indifferent Citizen as Well as Those Who Are Disloyal in Word and Act.

Indianapolis.—Persons who are not taking a part in some of the many phases of war service work came under the sharp criticism of the State Council of Defense at its weekly meeting in the state house. Especially did the council censure those who are yet talking about what "should have been done by the government," and who evidence other signs of conscious or unconscious disloyalty.

Resolutions on the subject were read before the council by Frank Wampler, a member, who presented the topic before the body some time ago. The paper was prepared by Rev. A. B. Storms, also a member of the council. Its salient features follow:

"The attention of the State Council of Defense having repeatedly been called to the fact that some individuals, by speech and in print, are in certain localities criticizing our government and its determined policies, we believe it timely and pertinent that there should in the name of the state be a declaration:

"The time for discussion upon the main issue is past and the time for action has come.

Criticism Is Treasonable.

"Criticism of the fundamental policies of the government when those policies have once been determined becomes dangerous if not treasonable.

"Without desiring to engender or encourage suspicions and jealousies, that should rather be allayed, we yet believe that there should be vigilance everywhere in rebuking treasonable words and checking treasonable action, and that prompt information should be given to federal authorities whenever it shall appear disloyalty is hindering national purposes.

"The time is now come when the nation must say to its own people, 'He who is not for us is against us.'

Cultivate Spirit of Patriotism.

"We suggest that every effort be made by those in authority in the state, the county, the city and the township to impress on our citizens at this time the love of country by a display of the flag on all public buildings, courthouses, city buildings and public schools, and that the United States regulations for the honor of the flag be observed in every community. We also recommend to the churches, private schools and social and fraternal organizations the same honor to the emblem of our country.

"Every citizen should consider it his patriotic duty to do something to help the country in one or more of the ways suggested by the national, state and county councils of defense, in food conservation, in the activities of the Red Cross, in the boys' reserve, in helping to cheer a soldier by letters, literature and remembrances and the many other agencies to help the country at this time. While our boys are at the front in the line of danger let there be no 'slackers' among those who remain at home. Every man and woman should evidence his patriotism by being enrolled in some form of activity to help the country. Let this be the test of patriotism and the external sign of our sympathy with our country in this war."

Canned Products Clearing House.

The Indianapolis food conservation committee, with Mrs. Carl Fisher in charge, met at the statehouse and formulated plans to establish a clearing house in Indianapolis for canned products, of which many housewives now have a surplus on hand.

The committee heard Henry B. Ward, representing the United States bureau of fisheries, outline a plan for a campaign that is to become statewide, in the interests of the eating of more fish and the conserving of the meat supply in this way. Eugene C. Shireman, state fish and game commissioner, already has made experiments on this subject, and believes thousands of pounds of coarse fish can be taken under state supervision from the rivers and lakes of the state and sold at nominal prices to anyone who cares to buy.

The state commissioner has established a camp on White river for the purpose of taking coarse fish out of that river to sell at low prices in the Indianapolis market. The commissioner will co-operate with the other agencies, which now will begin a statewide campaign to "eat more fish."

Plans Law Enforcement.

Preliminary plans for the enforcement of recently enacted Hoosier laws on state charities which became effective October 1 were drawn up at a meeting of the board of state charities held in the office of Amos W. Butler, its secretary. The new laws deal with the approval by the board of all plans for new hospitals built from money obtained by taxation; new poor relief policies and the deportation from Indiana of dependents not originating in the state. Copies of rules governing county officials will be mailed later.

Warning About Fires.

Warning has been issued by H. H. Friedley, Indiana state fire marshal, to all people to look after their stoves, furnaces and flues before starting their fires for the coming winter. He points out that many disastrous fires and much damage to property may be avoided by proper care along this line. Here is what the fire marshal says:

"Before stoves and furnaces are put into service for the winter months every property owner and tenant should ascertain that flues, stovepipes and heat apparatus are in perfect order.

"The large number of fires that occur every fall and winter due to dirty or defective chimneys can be reduced if the householder will take the time and pains to make a careful inspection to see that his chimney, stovepipe, furnace, stoves and any other heating apparatus are in good condition, and that all soot is removed from flues and pipes leading to the flue. Soot-destroying preparations may be obtained at most any hardware store.

"If a careful inspection of the chimney discloses any serious structural defect, such as may be caused by settling, or by poor mortar used when the chimney was built, an experienced brick mason should be called in to make repairs before the chimney is put in use. See that the chimney conforms to the following rules of chimney construction:

"1. Build from the ground up on well-grounded foundation. No chimney should be built on joists, posts or brackets.

"2. Chimney should have walls at least four inches thick and be lined inside with well-burnt terra cotta chimney tile set in Portland cement mortar.

"3. Chimney should project at least two feet above highest part of building.

"4. Wooden beams or framework should be separated at least two inches from chimney.

"These are but a few of the most important points that should be remembered while inspecting the chimney. A little delay in repairing and cleaning the chimney may result disastrously. Remember that an hour or so spent now in going over the heating apparatus may avoid a lot of worry later on."

Indiana's Production.

Indiana produced in 1916 a total of 18,649,266 bushels of wheat on 1,522,509 acres. These figures are given in a report just issued by H. A. Roberts, state statistician, who, by the way, will go out of office on October 1, because the legislature of 1917 abolished the state bureau of statistics.

These figures are interesting in view of the campaign that has been in progress in Indiana, under the direction of the state food director, G. I. Christie, for a large increase in wheat acreage for the 1918 crop. Figures for the 1917 crop are not yet available, but it is estimated that the total crop of wheat in Indiana this year will run in the neighborhood of 24,000,000 to 25,000,000 bushels.

It is the aim of the state food director and the object of the campaign to increase the 1918 crop to at least 30,000,000 bushels, through the means of larger acreage planted and a higher grade of seed wheat. Professor Christie believes that the 1918 crop will reach the high figure at which he aims.

The report of Statistician Roberts also shows that in 1916 the Indiana corn crop amounted to a total of 133,798,790 bushels, from 4,352,413 acres. Figures for 1917 are not yet available, but it is certain that the crop will be larger than last year.

Considers War Work.

The committee on scientific research of the state council of defense met at the statehouse and considered plans for assisting in carrying on the war. A permanent organization was formed, which will seek to co-ordinate the industrial and scientific resources of the state during and after the war. Attempts will be made to enlist all educational institutions of the state in the work.

Among those present were Dr. F. R. Eldred, director of the scientific laboratory at Eli Lilly & Co., Indianapolis; Daniel B. Luten, a civil engineer of Indianapolis; O. H. Skinner of Indianapolis, and Dr. John White, professor of chemistry at Rose Polytechnic institute, Terre Haute. C. L. Mees, president of the Rose Polytechnic institute, presided at the meeting.

Plan State Campaign.

The Indiana state library war council, at a meeting at the statehouse, laid plans for a state-wide campaign, to be conducted during the week of September 24, for the purpose of raising $125,000 to establish libraries for soldiers. The Indiana campaign will be a part of a national campaign which has in view the raising of a fund of $1,000,000.

Louis J. Bailey, librarian at Gary, was elected chairman of the Indiana organization. Money is to be raised at the ratio of $1 for every person in 5 per cent of the population of any community.

Listing War Supply Factories.

The survey of the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce of the facilities of Indianapolis factories to manufacture war supplies for the United States government has been completed, and Ernest N. Smith, general secretary of the chamber, now is formulating plans for extending the system so that its benefits will be available to every manufacturer in Indiana. He hopes to list every factory in the state that is capable of turning out war supplies of any kind, so that this information can be available here and at Washington.
